The following is worthy of note: "The unfortunates who suffer from hay fever will soon be dragging out a wretched existence at their homes or flying to places where they can find immunity from this annoying ailment. All such will find a gleam of hope in the announcement made by Dr. H. H. Curtis in the Medical News. Dr. Curtis found that two girls employed in a drug store, handling ipecac, were rendered immune from 'ipecac cold' by taking doses of the tincture. This led him to try the effect of hypodermic injections of the extract of roses upon a lady who could not even pass a florist's shop without taking 'rose cold,' with the result of effecting a permanent cure. He then experimented in a similar manner upon patients suffering from ragweed, golden rod, and lily of the valey, with like success. This 'like cures like' remedy is a simple one and worth a trial."

The Grand Rapids (Mich.) Herald says that July 22 was the largest day in the history of the Briggs Park Spiritualist camp-meeting since the presence last year of Mrs. Isa Wilson Kaynor. Over 2,000 persons paid admittance to the grounds during the day, and the attendance at the evening meeting taxed the capacity of the great tent to its utmost. The sensational feature of the day was the sudden collapse of Oscar A. Edgerly, the afternoon lecturer, who, in the middle of his address was taken with a case of heart failure. He was revived and his place on the programme taken by Mrs. Marion Carpenter. George Holmes, of Grand Rapids, held the stage at the morning meeting and Dr. Knowles, also a local medium, gave the descriptions. In the afternoon and evening Oscar A. Edgerly and Frank T. Ripley furnished the entertainment. The music was in charge of Mrs. Haynes. Mr. Ripley, in one of his descriptions, created a sensation by delivering a message from Detective Powers, who was shot several years ago while attempting an arrest at the Detroit & Milwaukee junction. Mr. Powers was happy in the spirit land and set at rest in the minds of the faithful all doubt as to the identity of his assassin.

H. A. Coffeen writes: "I am glad to see a Spiritualist paper going ahead with the best thought of the age. Too many of them fail to catch the theosophic and true idea of the continuity of life in the future as in the past, and in the past as in the future cycles of the soul's progress. The law of soul progress in the future is and must be the same law that has brought the soul to its present stage of evolution. Mr. Titus seems to be an able writer, and also others you are utilizing in The Progressive Thinker."

A. F. M. writes: "The society evolving out of Prentice Mulford's philosophy is quite in accord with existing things. The aim of life is to know self, and self-knowledge makes God a scientific problem, solvable according to individual aspiration (purification). It also demonstrates that morality is a science."

The Boston Times says: "James Snee, of Haverhill, lost his life at a railroad crossing in that city a week ago last night. In the household of Mr. and Mrs. George Jennings, on Temple street, the 15-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jennings had been seriously ill for some time, requiring constant care from her parents and the attending physician. Saturday evening, shortly after 10 o'clock, while the young girl was resting in her room under the care of her mother, she suddenly appeared to lose consciousness to such an extent as to cause alarm and the sending for the physician, Dr. George E. Goodwin. Suddenly she seemed to be aroused from her unconsciousness and cried out, 'Papa, do not cross the tracks. One is enough. You will be killed.' She repeated the warning cries in various forms several times, and then subsided. Mr. Jennings was away at the time, having been absent on a fishing trip, but returned a few minutes later, and when he was told of the strange occurrence, offered an explanation which in part solved the mystery. He had just come through the street and was at the railroad crossing when James Snee attempted to cross the tracks and was killed. At the time he was about to attempt the crossing also, but somehow or other he was restrained. He was a witness of the terrible accident, but himself escaped."

The noted California medium, Mrs. Freitag, is in Iowa. The Review, of Sigourney, says: "The meeting on Friday was not very well attended, owing to the threatened storm. The lecture was full of interest to those present, however. Mrs. Freitag referred in the course of her talk to the criticism in the Review of her 'fierce attacks on other beliefs,' and said she was sorry for that, as she knows there are just as good, upright and conscientious people in the churches of all denominations as there are who call themselves Spiritualists. And there are some of truth in each denomination, else it would not exist at all. The giving of names and answering of questions from the tightly folded billets then followed, raps designating the proper billet in each case correctly. Everyone seemed satisfied with the answers. On Saturday evening the house was well filled and the lecture was even more interesting than on the former evening. At the beginning of the seance, after the slips of paper had been collected and before Mrs. von Freitag had touched them, she asked some skeptic or skeptics to come forward and examine them to see if all were tightly folded. Two men went up, and after examining them at some length, announced to the house that they were satisfied that no one could read the papers as they were folded. The lady then requested the two gentlemen to remain on the rostrum a little while, as her guides told her there was a question not properly addressed. According to her instructions they divided the papers into piles, and guided by raps soon selected the proper paper. This was opened and read by the committee of examiners, after Mrs. Freitag had given the substance of the writing. It was found to be something like this: 'Let me hear from all my relations and some of my friends.' The absurdity of the question was made plain by the speaker, who said all the relatives of a given individual would mean the family ties for generation after generation, untold ages back. Several very interesting incidents occurred during the evening which would take up too much space to tell. But suffice it to say, expressions of satisfaction and wonder were heard on all sides. It is hoped that the lady will return at no distant day and give several more meetings."

The Beacon Light Spiritual Church has adjourned until September. Mr. and Mrs. Perkins having engagements in Milwaukee Sundays, they will not hold any other hall meetings during August except the Wednesday evening at Larrabee and Garfield, which will be continued; also Friday evening circle at their residence, 3558 Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago.

The Chicago Chronicle says: "Imbedded in the slimy bottom of the Jackson Park lagoon, weather-beaten and not looking as proud as they did one sunny day in the summer of 1893 when the revenue cutter Andy Johnson and the ancient battle-ship Michigan went up to Milwaukee to escort them to Chicago, the Columbus caravels Santa Maria, Pinta and Nina are now the abiding places of ghosts, tramps and whistling winds. Late strollers in Jackson Park who haunt the place where stood the peristyle at the east end of the Court of Honor have been giving the relics of Columbus' day a wide berth. They have shuddered as they counted ghosts skipping up and down or dropping from the fast rotting rope ladders of the quaint sailing trio. Wails, too, they heard, and with the appearance of the ghosts of supposed Spanish sailors there was enough to send chills traveling up and down the spines of the affrighted beholders."

J. H. White writes: "I attended the first Sunday meeting of the Island Lake Camp. I found the buildings and grounds much improved, making it one of the pleasantest camps in the State. It is well located in a pleasant shady grove, surrounded by beautiful lakes of clear water and pure air. As a health locality it cannot be surpassed. The rostrum is presided over by Mrs. Nellie S. Baade. Prof. P. O. Hudson is musical director. The auditorium was handsomely decorated, and a profusion of flowers. Meeting opened by Mrs. Baade. The president welcomed the campers with a few remarks. The Rev. B. F. Austin, of Toronto, gave two lectures, morning and afternoon, ably defending the truth of Spiritualism in an educational and scientific manner. He is a master of the situation. The cause has gained by the action of the Methodist Conference. He is an educated gentleman, and good thinker, speaks earnestly and well. The audience was not large, but a good, intelligent class of women and men who listened attentively. The music was excellent and the meeting a success, thanks to the earnest effort of Manager Brown and others. Mr. J. D. Boyd between meetings gave descriptions and prophecies to a large number, some of them surprises yet to be realized. He is a gifted and honest man—plain and simple. Everyone was pleased. The camp made a good strat."

E. M. Voorhees writes: "Oscar A. Edgerly lectured at Traverse City, Mich., recently two evenings to full houses. His lectures were well received, particularly the last one, at which he gave tests, most of which were recognized. Traverse City, a fine young city of 10,000 or 12,000 inhabitants, had never before listened to a trance lecturer. Mr. Edgerly comes from camps at Oden and Belleaire, where he has been fulfilling engagements with marked ability."

The Herald, of Grand Rapids, Mich., says that the Spiritualists of the Briggs Park Camp-meeting are busy in preparing for the State Convention, which will be held August 12 to 19. This is the greatest gathering of Spiritualists booked for this part of the country this year. The officers of the State organization will be elected and a gathering of mediums and lecturers from all over the United States will be an attraction, which is hoped to be the magnet to draw the campers in crowds. So far this season the stockholders of the Briggs Park Association have had no reason to think that their efforts in providing the attractions have been unappreciated. This year, as last, Mrs. Marion Carpenter, the inspirational and descriptive lecturer, has been and still is the leading speaker. She is undoubtedly the leader in her specialty in Spiritualism in the Eastern States. Mrs. Ferris, the trumpet medium, and Mrs. Emma Blake, Mrs. Barton and Frank T. Ripley, descriptive mediums, are all of unusual power. The present officers of the association are: President, Roselle Rose; secretary, Thomas Haynes, and treasurer, Frank A. Baldwin. The officers have arranged for other attractions as the season progresses, among the mediums who have promised to be present being Mrs. Sheets of Grand Ledge, Mrs. Barton of Minneapolis, Mrs. Claman of Chicago, Harry Warner of Chicago, Mrs. Burland of Muskegon, May Cecil Lincoln of Buffalo, D. P. Dewey of Grand Rapids, and many others. It has been the intention of the management this year to avoid as far as possible the sensational features and to raise Spiritualism to a standard where it will be respected and considered a philosophy worthy the consideration of all thinking men and women.

S. R. Spates writes: "Since the China war and our subjugation of the Philippinos and our glorious duty of giving them the improved code of Christianity, and making of them a great and mighty nation according to the orthodox standing, there has been much controversy about the religions, philosophy, etc., of these Oriental nations. I take the ground that India, China, etc., were the birthplace of religious ideas, and that Christ was a reformer versed in the philosophy of those countries and teaching along the same line, bringing in love and brotherhood of man as taught by Buddha and others, of course adding his own inspired thoughts and his grand personality into his teachings. Our Bible is made up of matter the substance of which had been taught ages before. Of course I have stirred up a hornets' nest by making these statements. Did not Christ study in Egypt, also in India, and become familiar with the occult sciences of his day? I say it is simon pure egotism in us as an infant nation to take our religion to those countries as something direct from God, when in the main it is almost entirely absorbed from the religio-philosophical works of so-called heathens."

The Tribune of Tipton, Ind., says: "Thursday night there was an interesting meeting at the Spiritualist temple in this city, and the reports that come from the meeting are such as to arouse the greatest curiosity. At the temple on West street the followers of the faith have the room fitted up in the most approved manner and the medium of the meeting Thursday night was Mrs. Thomas, of Ohio. She is a trumpet as well as a materializing medium and her friends say the results of her meetings here have been of the most satisfactory nature. At the meeting there were half a dozen well-known gentlemen from Kempton present. They have been investigating the phenomena and they were more than mystified by what they saw. The materializations were numerous and forms flitted about in great number. Some who were present claimed to have recognized departed friends and relatives. They were able to converse with them and assert that they were given other proofs of the genuineness of the affair. These meetings are held at regular intervals and some very prominent mediums have visited Tipton."

Mrs. Hart desires to start a Christian circle for development. Our object, spiritual knowledge and upliftment. Thursday nights. (Free. No. 3436 Rhodes avenue.

The Chicago Chronicle says: "By a coincidence two sailors, George E. Eyre and William Spottiswoode, who formerly sailed on the Canada, were found in Young's boarding-house at 89 Roosevelt street, New York. They say that when they sailed on the Canada they could hear three men singing in the mizzen upper topsail yard, but that they never could see them nor could others of the crew, who also heard songs. When the mysterious trio talked in the dark, as they sometimes did, it was impossible to distinguish what they said. Three men were once lost from the Canada, these sailors say, and their ghosts have haunted and hoodooed the ship."

G. W. Kates and wife closed their first year of service in Minnesota, with the month of July, and will spend the month of August at the camps. They are engaged for another year in the above named state and will resume the missionary work September 1. They organized a local auxiliary society in Fergus Falls, Minn., July 20; held meetings in Verndale, 21 and 22; Cokato, 26 and 27, and at Bederwood, the 28th. The State Association of Minnesota is in a flourishing condition, with much promise for the future. The state is yet young in the cause of Spiritualism, but is showing the good results of systematic effort. The annual convention will be held in Minneapolis, September 7, 8 and 9, in the elegant Unitarian church, for which some noted talent has been engaged.

The Chicago Journal says: "The ghosts which are said to frequent the precincts of Hampton Court palace are more or less known by reputation, but their ramblings have been promiscuous and uncertain. Great interest in their movements has, however, been newly aroused by the strange experience undergone by an artist who, during the past few weeks, has been visiting certain rooms of the palace for the purpose of sketching the old Flemish tapestry on the walls. While engaged in the guard watching chamber in broad daylight this gentleman, Mr. Haynes of Surbiton, positively asserts that a specter hand, white and delicate and richly jeweled, has persistently intruded between him and the tapestry. At first he imagined the disturbing element must be one of the many hands so beautifully inscribed on the tapestry, but the limb, he says, moved slowly from one stage to another, and pointed downward. Mr. Haynes was much agitated, and told several friends of this curious visitation. They, not unnaturally, perhaps, advised him to dismiss the subject from his mind and return to the chamber and his work. But the hand reappeared before his startled eyes; and on the last appearance of the phantom the artist made a hurried sketch of the outstretched hand, the rough outline of which depicts a brilliant marquise ring on the forefinger. The effect of these continued visits of the supernatural on Mr. Haynes is very visible; he is unnerved, and he has suspended his sketching. These are the plain facts, but there is, it would seem, a weird and historic connection between this hand and the hand of the Queen Catherine Howard, one of the wives of King Henry VIII."

Frank T. Ripley writes: "I have the last two weeks in August and September open for engagements. Address all mail in care of Briggs Park Camp, Soldier's Home, Mich.

A. S. Houck writes: "The absence of truth is darkness; it is the stamping-grounds of the Agnostic, where he waits for the light of a more glorious day; the dawning light, another resurrection morn when the soul shall receive the light of nature's illumination; but the ignorance, the cunning, the duplicity and the downright dishonesty that seeks to give false colors to truth they cannot hide, is deplorable. The mind of man, when left true to nature, has a natural affinity for truth, without the shading of dismal creeds or those religious follies that blight humanity with the mildew of spiritual stagnation. I have practiced medicine for forty years, seen people die from almost every cause; but in that time, I have never seen a ghost or a spirit return, or had the slightest evidence of such a fact. I cannot see how it occurs at the death of the body, that the subtle powers of nature, in natural law, brings together the senses and inner consciousness and all the faculties of soul life."

Geo. M. Ramsey writes: "I wish you would call attention to a bad slip of the type in the article you kindly published, viz., 'Is Man Immortal?' Read 'arborial' man, not 'abnormal' man, and 'synthetic methods' not 'sympathetic methods.'"

Mrs. Lettie G. Keller writes: "The premium books you sent are grand, and so says my friend, Mrs. Stout. She has loaned her books to others and they are delighted with them, and I am very glad I sent for them, for she takes solid comfort reading them."

D. D. Duncan writes from Kansas: "I can do without a great many things better than I can without The Progressive Thinker, for it has turned darkness into light for me. It is almost like living in another world to me."

W. E. Bonney writes: "We have just concluded arrangements for a ten days' camp-meeting to be held at the Crete Chautauqua grounds, Crete, Neb., commencing August 16 and closing August 26 inclusive. We will have good speakers and mediums. The grounds are eminently adapted for the purpose, and we hope for a grand success. James Campbell, president; W. E. Bonney, vice-president."

H. C. Bordewich writes from Christiania, Norway (Box 160): "Quite an interest seems to be awakening in spiritual matters just now. While there is no apparent boom, the growth is steady and sure, and I am aware of a number of circles that are being held, not only in this city but in several smaller towns in the country. Of mediums we have several under development; one Mr. G., who is controlled to speak in foreign tongues which none can interpret; several professors of psychology, history, language and philosophy, at the Christiania University, have many times been present at our circles, but they are at a loss to find out which the languages are; they are quite puzzled. One Miss S. is a fine trance medium; sometimes she also gives good tests, and another one, Mrs. C., is a wonderful medium for automatic writing, etc. The most beautiful poetry and messages from the departed ones are given through her, and often splendid tests are given, that are recognized. I would like to correspond with some mediums in the United States with a view of getting them over here."

G. W. Flavell writes from Pennsylvania: "In renewing my subscription to The Progressive Thinker, I desire to express the earnestness of my spirit in being perfectly satisfied with the contents of each number. I have learned many truths therefrom to meditate and ponder over the past year. In fact I have been illuminated in the cause of Spiritualism in its true interpretation."

J. W. B. writes from Island Lake Camp, Mich.: "A new medium will be introduced here on the 11th of August by the name of Madame de Leamout, of Detroit, a native of France. She will deliver an original poem, given by her guides, historic of Joan of Arc. Dr. J. M. Peebles is now on the grounds and will speak on the 28th and 29th. Lyman C. Howe, Carrie E. Twing, Rev. St. Omer Briggs and Mrs. Baade are among the talent to follow."

Mrs. Le Sieur writes: "The second benefit for the Board of Harmony took place at the home of Mrs. Slosson, No. 19 Elizabeth street. We had a full attendance, and the exercises in the afternoon were deeply interesting and instructive, a day long to be remembered by all who attended. In the evening eight tables for progressive euchre were occupied by players and everything passed off very pleasantly. The supper was ample and a real feast. Further notice will be given, when the next benefit band will be held."

Mrs. Bachham writes from Allegheny City, Pa.: "I received the seven premium books all right, and was very much surprised to think you could send so much for so little money. I have paid as much for one book alone as you ask for the whole seven."

R. M. Jones writes: "I have all of your splendid volumes of premium books, except volume three of the Encyclopedia of Death. I have read them through and re-read them, and am proud to have them in my library, as I consider them all excellent. I consider them a gift, for The Progressive Thinker has been worth vastly more than its cost to me."

D. G. White writes from Watertown, N. Y.: "I have read so much lately of Infinite Intelligence and Divine things, that the question has frequently come to me as to the propriety of you using the 'Divine Plan' in the very laudable project of furnishing your subscribers so much valuable reading for so little money. I really think the project is entitled to a far better title; it would please me and thousands of others to 'Christen' it the 'Humanitarian Plan.' How does that strike you?"

E. W. Sprague writes from Lake Brady, Ohio: "Everything is working nicely here and we have a good prospect of the Spiritualists buying and owning Brady Camp. Harmony prevails and we are happy. Oscar Edgerly just arrived this morning. Will C. Hodge left yesterday for Clinton (Iowa) Camp. We are engaged for the season. Our psychic class is well attended, and much interest is manifested in its work. The Progressive Thinker interests are attended to by Mrs. McCaslin, and its good work is appreciated by the campers as they who take it testify. May your good work go on forever."

John W. Wray, a leading lawyer of Fort Worth, Texas, writes: "I enclose you a one-dollar bill to cover a subscription to The Progressive Thinker, which please send to Samuel Stewart, Medicine Lodge, Kansas. This subscription has a history. Before leaving home in June, I was trying an important case in the Federal Court at Dallas, made an argument, and after concluding it, on my return to the hotel, I was greeted by the above named gentleman, and the speech very kindly spoken of. He was down from his home awaiting the disposition of another case, in which at the time I had just been engaged by his adversary, but without his knowledge that I was of counsel. The case was disposed of, and on my stepping into the sleeping car to come North, I was greeted by my street acquaintance kindly, and he expressed pleasure that he should have me as a traveling companion. It is my usual practice to endeavor to be silent as much as possible in traveling, and I was not quite pleased to think that this strong, active, vigorous man should be wanting to talk to me when I desired silence, but I recognized the rights of civility and sat down with him. I soon found him a vigorous thinker, and the conversation developed the fact that he had a favorite daughter, whose little history he gave me, indicating that she was a girl of fine mentality, good judgment, and possessed of fine elocutionary powers. He regretted to me that she was not a boy. I said to him: "You should be satisfied. Had she been a boy, in all probability he would have been very mediocre. You ought to be content with the good things that the Gods give you." He further said that with her mentality and her splendid elocutionary powers, were she a boy, she could make her way in the world so much better. I said I doubted that; that the field for intelligent women with splendid capacities was perhaps greater than the field for young men, and spoke to him of our mutual friend, Mrs. Brown, whose excellent capacities as an oratress gave her a successful way wherever she went. I had in my valise at the time a carbon copy of the lecture that I sent to you for publication. I read him the invocation, which as you will perhaps remember, is one of particular strength and great beauty, and I may say, oratorical power. He was charmed and delighted with it, wanted to know the history of the woman, the history of the cause she represented, and the philosophy which she undertook to inculcate. This, of course, was a pleasing thing to me, and I entered upon it gladly. He then asked me what would I take for the lecture and invocation. He said, "My daughter must see that." I told him he could not buy it with all the wealth in the universe, but he could have a copy of it. I said, "It will be published in a paper, and you can become a subscriber to it and get it." He wanted to know the price and I told him. He handed me a dollar." The lecture to which Mr. Wray alludes will be published in The Progressive Thinker next week.

Helen Berry writes: "The South Chicago True Spiritual Society will hold a picnic at Pullman, August 5, to which all are cordially invited to attend, bring luncheon and have a spiritual revival in real earnest. Get off at 119 street and Portland avenue."

B. B. Hill, of Philadelphia, is now having a good time at Lily Dale, N. Y.

G. V. Cordingley writes of Deep Lake Spiritualist Camp: "We are having great success here, at the present time owning all our property, such as tents and auditorium, dining-room, etc., and the prospects are that we will own the grounds in a very short time, as we have formed a syndicate which is to number 140 people at $100 each, as stock-holders. Each stock-holder is entitled to a lot 25 x 50 feet, which is to be deeded to them; the balance of the ground is always to belong to the syndicate. This consists of 125 acres. One member of the association has donated one thousand dollars. To-day we took in twelve signers at $100 each, and many more are expected during the month of August."

Charles Brockway is on the Pacific Coast again. He is now stopping at Los Angeles, Cal., 328½ S. Spring street. He will attend the Spiritualist camp at Sycamore Grove during September.

A grand excursion will be given by Chicago Liberal Society, George B. Wheeler, Chairman, Sunday, August 12, 1900, on the new steel steamer America, to Michigan City and Alaska Beach. Steamer leaves State street bridge at 9:30 a. m. Fine bathing, boating and fishing. Three hours at the beach. All are invited. Bring your family and have a good time. Tickets may be obtained from members of the organization. Tickets 75 cents. Children, 40 cents.

MARRIED.—At the home of the bride's brother, in Akron, Ohio, on July 16, 1900, Mr. Charles W. Lentz and Miss Mertie Morgan, both of Columbus, Ohio. The service was performed by E. W. Sprague, of Jamestown, N. Y., assisted by Mrs. Sprague, and was very beautiful, being a truly Spiritualistic service in every particular. Mr. and Mrs. Lentz will make their future home in Columbus, Ohio. WILMOT.

Lily Dale Camp.

The week has been crowded full of interesting events. Monday evening there was a reception tendered to Mr. and Mrs. J. Clegg Wright, at the Auditorium, in which there was some interesting speech-making by Prof. Lockwood, Mrs. Mattie Hull, Mr. Grimshaw and others. This is the last week of Mr. Wright's work here this season, and he will be followed by the regrets of the thinking minds of the camp that he could not have remained the entire season. Tuesday and Wednesday evenings were held the usual thought exchange, where the question of woman's progress—socially and politically—was discussed pro and con, mostly "pro" however, as far as her right to vote is concerned. When education is made the standard of eligibility for voters, woman suffrage will be made easy; until then it is questionable, I think, whether enfranchisement would be wise.

Wednesday Mr. Wilde gave a lecture on "dreams" which was well received, followed by Miss Gaule as test medium. Miss Gaule is giving excellent satisfaction in her descriptive clairvoyance.

We hear gratifying reports of manifestations given at Mrs. Wreidt's trumpet seances, also good reports from Mrs. Bartholomew and Mrs. Moss. There are visitors from the South, the East, Canada and the far West; and all who come express delight in finding such a lovely camp. The greatest harmony and good order prevails, and everything is running smoothly.

Thursday afternoon Clegg Wright gave a masterly lecture in answer to one delivered at Chautauqua by Prof. Coe, on "Hallucinations." A synopsis of Mr. Wright's lecture was published in the Buffalo Express, but the entire lecture was taken by a stenographer, and could be printed in pamphlet form.

Friday afternoon Lyman C. Howe gave one of his exceeding fine lectures, the subject being Mind and Its Relation to Matter. Those who have listened to Mr. Howe can imagine the feast he spread before his audience. At the close of the lecture, Mr. Macdonald, of London, Ont., rendered a fine musical selection which was heartily encored. Mrs. Connor assisting as pianist. The lyceum gave a fine entertainment which was highly appreciated. Miss Austin reports over sixty little ones in attendance and she is admirably fitted to train them, assisted by Miss Peterson.

Thus far the meeting has been a success in every way, and the management may properly congratulate themselves on having one of the best camps on record. The masterly lectures which have been given on this rostrum every year is a fair index of the high ideals which actuate the minds of those having control of the programmes which have so long been set before the public at Lily Dale camp.

Freeville Camp, N. Y.

The Central New York Spiritualist Association, Freeville, N. Y., fifth annual camp, opens Saturday, July 28, closes Sunday, August 12. J. C. F. Grumbine, Syracuse, N. Y.; J. W. Dennis, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dr. J. M. Peebles, Battle Creek, Mich.; T. Grimshaw, St. Louis, Mo., and other noted speakers and mediums will be present during the camp.

Mrs. Brewer, of Belmont, N. Y., will act as test and platform medium.

This flourishing camp now owns ten acres of a good location for a camp a few rods east of the Lehigh Valley railroad station. It has a nice auditorium built within an area of 70 x 90 feet, capable of seating about 1,000 people. J. C. F. Grumbine of Syracuse, is the speaker for Sunday, July 29. Dr. J. M. Peebles comes the Sunday following.

B. L. Robinson is president, and J. W. Dennis and the president will act as chairman and conduct the meetings as the occasion may require. We invite the attention of all central New York people to this camp where all are free to express their views in a liberal manner without hindrance or restraint.

J. W. DENNIS.

Deep Lake, Ill.

Since the 10th of July, (the opening day of our camp) we have been enjoying the pleasures, both spiritually and materially, that a camp can afford. Our beautiful situation which nature has so bountifully designed seems to be one of the main attractions. During the first week the inclement weather somewhat retarded our programme; also the attendance, but during the last ten days there has been a splendid increase of arrivals and the programme has been filled without any hindrances. During the past week we have had the pleasure of listening to several lectures delivered by Mrs. Augusta Armstrong, of Buffalo, N. Y. Her lectures were not only instructive but sublime. This lady has made many warm friends among the Spiritualists and others of our camp. One important feature of our success is the dancing parties held Wednesday and Saturday evenings in our spacious and beautiful pavilion. These call many from the neighboring towns and awakens their interest for investigating our thought.

YOU, as a progressive mind, should know something of the phenomena of that magnificent change called Death. On that subject you will find valuable information in the three volumes of The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World. Those three volumes contain more valuable information on that subject than all the libraries of the world. They are furnished to the subscribers of The Progressive Thinker at a nominal cost. Read carefully our premium list.

NEW EDITION.
THE LYCEUM GUIDE

Do you want to organize a society, for the social, intellectual and spiritual advancement of the children and adults?

THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM
furnishes all you desire.

Do you want a self-sustaining society, founded on the basic principles of the spiritual philosophy? You have it in "THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM."
It furnishes a system of evolution by internal growth; not the old cup and pitcher Sunday-school.
It has something to interest and advance every member, and those who are most active in teaching are the ones who learn most.

NO SPECIAL INSTRUCTOR REQUIRED.
THE LYCEUM GUIDE gives every detail needed for effective organization, and for conducting the society when established.
It has Golden Chain Recitations; the prettiest songs and music; choral responses; a service for a Band of Mercy; calisthenics; how to make the badges, flags and banners; marching exercises; full instructions in conducting the exercises, with parliamentary rules, etc.
Many Spiritualists living in isolation, have formed lyceums in their own families; others have banded, two or three families together, while large societies have organized on the lyceum platform, and found great interest in this self-instructive method.
Do not wait for a "missionary" to come to your assistance, but take hold of the matter yourself, procure copies of the GUIDE, and commence with the few or many you find interested.
Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle (address, Berlin Heights, Ohio) will answer all questions pertaining to lyceum work.
The price of THE LYCEUM GUIDE is 50 cents, postpaid, or by the dozen, 40 cents each, by express, charges paid by receiver. Address

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin, Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

R. R. C. Mack: Q. What is the condition of a suicide, who as a medium became under evil control and unbalanced mentally at times?

A. It depends entirely on the mental condition of the suicide. There may be circumstances which make this life such a torture that it is a pleasure to escape and enter a new existence. There may be no causes for regret. Yet in the great majority of cases, there will surely be regrets, so intense that the spirit in its attempt to escape the ills of earth-life finds itself overtaken by greater pain. The mind unbalanced by physical causes, will become chaos, and the fact that it is sensitive to evil control, is not a factor to be considered. Exceptions are so few that it may be stated as a rule, that to cut short the thread of earthly life is loss to the spirit. To bravely and courageously meet the affairs of life, bear one's burdens, fulfill obligations, and preserve over all a serene mind above temporal failures, and chaffing cares, is the law of our existence.

"Student": Q. Can one who often has prophetic dreams, which invariably are fulfilled, cultivate this talent?

A. The more attention one gives to such dreams, the more vividly they will be presented. Such dreams are impressions from spirit friends, who find the recipient more sensitive during sleep than while awake.

R. R. C. Mack: Q. In the apparent struggles and pain sometimes accompanying death, is the spirit conscious of pain?

A. However painful the approach to death may be, the final passage is free from pain. The spasms which sometimes are observed, are caused by the disturbed balance of nervous energy, in the motor tract, and are not felt by the sensory nerves. The spirit has fallen into an unconscious state—like trance, from which it awakens freed from the physical body.

T. A. Mervin: Q. Mr. Darwin claims that soul-germs are distinct entities, and never evolve one into another; that the negro race can never be evolved into a white race. Now what cross of a soul-germ is that, that from involution produces the mulatto, and why no soul-germ can be found to continue the evolution? Are the Negro and Indian races cut off from progression? Or is their spiritual birth necessary to it? Have the spiritual realms higher and lower spheres of soul-germs, or does the germ have to depend upon the conditions of the matter from which it evolves in its process of involution?

A. This correspondent has an erroneous understanding of Darwin's theory of evolution. That theory has no place for "soul-germs," and hence all speculations or questions taking that view are irrelevant. Evolution recognizes no foreign influence acting on matter. It simply follows the lines of growth in the world of living beings. The physical germ and "soul germ" are one, and neither existed, or could have existed until generated by a parent, organic being. The theory of evolution has no place for this incarnation of independent "soul-germs," or for their reincarnation. Such views of nature are the outgrowth of the superstitious ignorance of the past, when as there was no accurate knowledge, imagination was allowed free rein. It is easy to accept fancies for data and draw conclusion therefrom, but such castles from foundation to dome are as valueless as nightmare dreams.

What are the facts of individual life from germs! Not "soul-germs," for they exist only in the imagination. There are two germs, neither of which is capable of more than an ephemeral existence. They are produced in countless millions and countless millions perish leaving no trace. Perhaps one in a hundred millions comes in contact with a germ thrown of from the opposite, and uniting, growth along the lines of the species of plant or animal to which they belong, at once begins, and if favorably fostered an adult individual after its kind is the result. Every grain of pollen is a male germ, and nature is so prodigal of that they furnish food for innumerable insects, and seeds, which are united germs, are the food supply of the human race.

If man require a "soul-germ" so would of wheat, for the vital inception, the starting point of both, is in the union of two germs. If these germs do not unite, they perish, and after union and commencement of growth they may, if conditions are not favorable, blight, and have no trace.

Columbus Camp, O.

Worthington Park Spiritual Association wishes to state to the public that there is a change in the management. It is now running under entire new management, only retaining A. W. Dennis as president. There is every prospect here for a progressive camp, and under the right management we feel sure of success in this beautiful park. Will all of the talent that has been employed from August 5, kindly write to me, stating the terms on which they were to come, at once? This camp will continue until August 27. Address all communications to A. W. Dennis, Worthington Park Box, Worthington, O.

A. W. DENNIS.

A FARM HOUSE.

It Is Certainly Haunted.

The "truly" ghost is still at large and may be met occasionally, sometimes indeed helping to form another of the many attractions of this most attractive state.

There is nothing particularly romantic or pleasing, however, in the tale of this ghost to be chronicled for the first time. It has existed for several years, a nameless horror in an otherwise peaceful neighborhood, and the house itself, the haunted house, has been as long a time tenantless, save for its unearthly inhabitant.

The story was told your correspondent by a most reliable young man, and is as follows:

In the northern part of Franklin county, the name of the town is not necessary, there stands a farm-house, rather remote from its neighbors, empty and deserted, with broken doors and shutters swinging in the wind. The owner of this farm lives in a distant village and one summer not long ago a young Irishman and myself hired to cut hay for him. He advised us to board with one of the farmers in the place, rather than attempting to stay in the house, and finally after a little hesitation, informed us that the house was haunted, no person having been able to sleep there over night since the former owner had been killed during a neighborhood dispute in his dooryard, by being stabbed in the abdomen by a dull knife, his wife being present during the struggle of the two men.

We were not superstitious, however, and insisted upon spending our nights in the ghost's company, and when our first day's work was ended, we sat in what had been the family sitting room and enjoyed a peaceful smoke, laughing at superstition and explaining away all the absurd notions and supernatural theories of the too credulous people.

When our pipes were out we decided to "turn in," Our bed was a sort of straw bunk in the corner of the room, no doubt made by former haying crews and into this we threw ourselves after carefully extinguishing the lantern and kerosene stove.

Pat was soon asleep and, though his snoring was anything but ghostly, I felt uneasy and lay on my back wide-awake and staring straight into the darkness. However, I must have dropped asleep after a time for I was suddenly aroused by a sound as of someone unloading boards in the yard, and a thrill of horror run over me as I remembered that the murdered man had been unloading boards at the time of his difficulty. But by the time I was fully awake the sound had ceased and Pat lay sleeping peacefully, so, deciding that I had been awakened by a hanging shutter, I turned over and composed myself for the night. But just as I was beginning to enter the borders of dreamland, a shriek—if shriek it could be called—rang out, that brought me onto my feet in an instant. And simultaneous with my own spring to the floor came Patrick.

"Mother of God, preserve us! What was that?" he exclaimed in a shaking voice. And while I lighted the lantern with trembling hands, the wild despairing moans and sobs of a woman could be plainly heard from the yard. But that scream of mortal agony! May I never hear another like it!

Well, we inspected the yard, the house, barns, sheds, everything, and found all peaceful and quiet, and a half hour later were in bed again.

Near the foot of our improvised couch was a door leading into a large old-fashioned kitchen and in the center of this floor was a trap whereby the cellar was reached. After a time I heard this trap door open, not cautiously, not noisily, but in an ordinary manner and then the footsteps of someone passing to and fro in the room. We hastily lighted matches and as the light flamed up the sounds ceased, commencing again as soon as we were in darkness.

Well, we lighted the lantern, explored the kitchen and cellar and at last thoroughly tired out, flung ourselves down again, the moment we were in darkness being obliged to listen to the opening and closing of that door and the easy step, step, step of the invisible guest. At last the oil in both lantern and stove was exhausted and it was nearly morning, I was awakened from a troubled doze by Pat who was setting fire to the straw on which we slept, saying that we must have light and our matches were nearly gone. But immediately the first rays of dawn crept through the window and our visitor left us in peace for that time.

"Now," said the young man, as he finished his story, "I did not believe in ghosts then and I don't believe in them now. But I can't explain the occurrences of that night. Neither can I credit an explanation from any person who has never spent a night in that horrible house."—Lillian A. Jardine in Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Briggs Park, Mich.

The camp was well attended yesterday, and all who came were well repaid.

At the morning meeting Mr. Holmes of this city delivered the lecture, and Dr. W. O. Knowles gave messages and descriptions. The work of both was excellent and was well received by the large audience that greeted them. At the afternoon meeting Mr. Edgerly, of Lynn, Mass., was the speaker, but was unable to conclude his lecture on account of the heat. Mrs. Carpenter who was on the rostrum at the time, concluded the lecture.

At the close of the lecture Mrs. Ferris gave descriptions and messages. At the evening service Mr. Edgerly was able to talk to us. His lecture was grand. Mr. Ripley then entertained the people for more than thirty minutes with messages from loved ones to persons in the audience, all of which were recognized.

This was the most enthusiastic meeting we have yet had, although not more interesting than many of our previous ones. In making comment of any meetings I intend to be fair and impartial to all workers who come to us to labor with us in the case of truth. So if I ever chance to say anything which may seem impartial, it is not intended to reflect in any way either directly or indirectly upon any one who has been with us. We appreciate them all, they are all good in their line, and have all been appreciated. In selecting our workers we were careful to select such available talent as would instruct the people in our beautiful philosophy.

Mr. Foster is still with us and is doing a thriving business. Mr. Ripley remains until Wednesday. Mrs. Carpenter is still with us and will stay till August 4. We shall be sorry to lose them both, for they have endeared themselves to us by their many acts of love and kindness during their stay with us. Our afternoon meetings were so well attended that it was decided to keep them up, so we now have three services daily.

The weather is now ideal for camping, and all seem happy and contented.

Further particulars may be obtained of James Campbell, president, Havelock, Neb.

Maple Dell Camp, Ohio.

The opening of this camp took place on Sunday, July 22. The speakers present who took part in the exercises were F. D. Dunakin, Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran and A. J. Weaver. D. M. King, president of the association, made an address of welcome and introduced M. C. Danforth as permanent chairman during the camp season, who made appropriate remarks.

Mr. Weaver opened the regular addresses of the morning, not by formal prayer to God, but by expressing in fitting words the love and reverence we feel for the living principles of truth and goodness and the joy and gratitude brought to us by the fact of spirit intercourse.

Mr. Dunakin paid a warm tribute to the valuable revelations which nature is ever making to the receptive spirit of man, and Mrs. Curran gave her testimony to the importance of the truths brought to the front by the great Spiritualist movement of the age.

A good audience was in attendance. Excellent music was furnished by the Troy Cornet Band. The strains of harmony from its instruments, added to the beauties of nature, made the morning one of the most delightful ever known at Maple Dell. I understand that the services of this fine band have been secured for the season.

Maple Dell has been in existence for eleven years, and never was stronger and better equipped for effective work than it is to-day. At its head is the indefatigable worker D. M. King. It is not a large camp, but in harmony of thought and action, in moral tone and in intellectual aims, I do not know a single camp which surpasses it. I hardly know of one which equals it. The objectionable features which are generally found at larger camps do not obtain here.

On this account it has won the confidence of the people in the neighborhood who are not Spiritualists and they speak of it and of its officers with respect. Those who desire to spend the season at a Spiritualist camp where both nature and Spiritualism are clean and pure and at their best, can do no better than to come to Maple Dell.

The desire exists here, which is fast growing up in other camps to make camp work educational. During the past year a school building fifty feet by twenty-five feet in size, and two stories high has been erected and is being finished off into recitation and lecture rooms. The auditorium has received a new coat of paint and the grounds show that the spirit of improvement dominates at Maple Dell. So the good work goes on.

A. J. WEAVER.

Lily Dale Camp.

One week of the assembly at this camp has passed, and in every way has fully realized the anticipations of the management and guests. Carrie Twing has given her pleasing addresses and gone. Moses Hull also has completed his work here for the summer, to be followed by J. Clegg Wright.

We have now at Lily Dale such lights as J. Clegg Wright, Lyman C. Howe, Moses Hull, Thomas Grimshaw, Mrs. C. D. Greenameyer, Prof. Lockwood, and many others who are doing good work for the cause. The Campbell Brothers, F. Corden White, Keeler, Mrs. Wreidt, Mrs. Bartholomew, Mrs. Moss, Miss Gaule, Mrs. Waite, and so many others space forbids mention.

Among the healers are Dr. Dake, the Australian healer, Freedman, the Thompsons, from Texas, and some whose names I have not learned. Altogether the seeker can find anything here he may be looking for in the line of mediumship.

At this early date the attendance is in excess of former years, with new arrivals on every train.

Sunday, Mr. Wright gave his last lecture and it was a masterly address. Lyman C. Howe also gave one of his admirable lectures, on the subject, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Mr. Howe has lost none of his eloquence and old-time fire when under the spell of invisible inspirers. Thus far the talent displayed from the rostrum has been exceeding fine, and that which is to follow promises much to those who come later.

In my letter which appears in July 14 issue of The Progressive Thinker, I said something in regard to materialization which seemed to arouse the ire of some of the so-called mediums for that phase of phenomena. I said nothing I wish to recall. I would rather emphasize than recall, because there was not a word in that article which would disturb, or should disturb an honest medium. We have them, many of them, who realize the sacredness of their power too much to prostitute it by substituting the false for the real. If these mediums sometimes suffer unjust reproach, it is through the dishonesty of those who are only tricksters.

The management of Lily Dale have always welcomed those whose work was reliable, realizing the great importance attaching to the phenomena as well as the philosophy of Spiritualism, at the same time discountenancing all pretenders, and have sometimes put such as these off the grounds.

Let us have the truth or nothing.

ISLAND LAKE, MICH.

Rev. B. F. Austin Answers Questions.

The camp was formally opened on the July 19, with Mrs. Baade as president. Mrs. Sheets delivered the opening address, which was well received, her remarks being of a general nature; followed by M. St. Omer Briggs, who gave a review of the early movement of the organization and the formation of the Ladies' Auxiliary which did so much to furnish the hotel with the requisite linen, etc. At the close she was loudly cheered.

The musical programme is in charge of Prof. Hudson, who is equal to the occasion.

President J. H. White arrived Friday evening with his family, from Port Huron, and has been hustling to put everything in good shape and in harmonious conditions.

Friday was pioneer day. The opening address was made by Dr. Briggs, who drew a comparison of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers, at Plymouth, Mass., and the landing of the first boat at the now Island Lake camp grounds.

Sunday, the 22d, Rev. B. F. Austin delivered his first address from the text, "What must I do to be saved?" which was listened to with rapt attention, and often applauded, cutting like a two-edged sword at the old hulk of orthodoxy and the decaying creeds, and advocated a life of good deeds more than a life of creeds. He said in part:

This question has been a text of orthodoxy through the ages. The question and the answer, supposed to be plenarily inspired, had been used to establish the doctrine of man's hereditary sin and guilt and spiritual depravity through Adam's transgression, and the necessity of an atonement to win back for the race the forfeited favor of God, and also to show the necessity of that mysterious change by which the sinner becomes a saint. This was a most damnable doctrine—one of the most degrading ever taught by and to man.

Man was indeed under the law of heredity, he was badly born, badly reared, he was undeveloped, and largely under the sway of the material and earthly conditions, yet to say that his spiritual (divine) nature was spiritually depraved, was a libel on humanity, and a scandal on the Infinite spirit which rules the universe. No man was a sinner by virtue of Adam's transgression; not a saint by virtue of Christ's passion. There was not, and could not be any vicarious sin or virtue. This doctrine of hereditary sin and depravity, though taught through the ages, preached by theologians, sanctioned by scripture, etc., was melting away in the increasing light of this age.

Investigation had proved there were races of people before the time fixed by Old Testament teachings for Adam and Eve, and these could not have shared in the fruit of his apple stealing. Anthropology showed there had been no fall in man, but a constant rise in physical structure, mental power and spirituality from the first. This fact harmonized with the current evolution philosophy, but squarely contradicted orthodoxy.

Again, the doctrine of hereditary guilt through Adam and of a spiritual regeneration necessitated thereby, was no part of the teachings of Jesus, and could not be inferred from his words—granting he said everything attributed to him in the New Testament. When the question, "What must I do to be saved?" and similar questions were propounded in the New Testament to Paul, Peter and Jesus, three different answers were given. Paul said faith and baptism were necessary to salvation; Peter said repentance and baptism were necessary; Jesus said, "Bring forth fruits worthy of repentance"—in short amend your lives, live justly and lovingly, and not a word about faith, repentance, baptism, or conversion. True, Jesus taught the spiritual birth in John iii., but that is a vastly different thing from orthodox regeneration. It was a birth out of the material and earthly conditions into the spiritual, but that took place naturally in the progress of man's development, and in most cases at death only.

Man needed salvation from ignorance, passion, habit, bad environment, wrong social conditions, and mostly from orthodoxy.

"What must we do?" 1. Recognize that we have a special work to do, a mission to the age and race. 2. Recognize the call of humanity for help, and the angel world for co-operation. 3. Inculcate our beautiful philosophy in our life by the eloquence of true living. 4. We must rescue religion from the hands of priests and creedalism, and place it in the hands of a common people. Religion was of the people, by the people, and for the people, and not in the hands of a monopoly of a priestly syndicate. 5. We must simplify religion, purify it of its contradictory theology, and make it as Jesus did, simply love to God and Man. 6. We must resurrect the man, Jesus the medium, healer, sympathizing friend of the people, the social reformer, and again present him to the world as the greatest spiritualizing force of the age.

Mr. Austin's afternoon lecture, the subject by request, "How and Why I Became a Spiritualist," was very interesting and instructive. J. W. B.

FOR a moment stop and consider. The Progressive Thinker is the one original dollar Spiritualist paper. It introduced a new era in the ranks of Spiritualism. Its success financially has been all that could be desired. Notwithstanding the rise in the price of print paper, it has still maintained its status as the only one dollar Spiritualist paper. Not only that, but it introduced the Divine Plan in its business with its subscribers—a portion of the profits of the office returning to them. Just think of the Seven Premium Books being sent out to our subscribers for $2.35. After paying the postage of these seven books, and the expense of mailing them, all that we have left is $1.50. You can readily see that we are furnishing them for less, by far, than the actual cost to us. We do this work in accordance with The Divine Plan, in order to assist in forming the nucleus of a library in every Spiritualist home. Read carefully our premium list, and you will certainly want to become a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker, if not so already, and obtain the books we announce.

A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom. By ANDREW D. WHITE, LL. D., late President and Professor of History at Cornell University. In Two Volumes. 8vo. Cloth, Five Dollars. For Sale at This Office.

In these two large volumes are combined information that the reader could not find in the libraries of the world in fifty years. It shows the constant and determined opposition of Theology to the advancement that has been made in every branch of Science. To the Student it is indispensible. Every Free Thought Speaker should have it. It should circulate in every community. It goes into minute details, citing in all cases the authority, showing the persistency of Theology in fighting new and advanced ideas in Science.

"The magnum opus of the eminent ex-President of Cornell plants a new and notable milestone along the highway of ever-advancing human thought. The work is the masterpiece of a mind as devoid of wanton iconoclasm as of moral cowardice. It is a definite statement of where the best thinkers of the world now stand in the religio-scientific conflict. It is clear, honest, brave, and must be given a place among the great books of the year."—Chicago Tribune.

"The most valuable contribution that has yet been made to the history of the conflict between the theologians and the scientists; struggles that have alarmed timid Christians, but, as Mr. White shows, there was no occasion for alarm. The several chapters are extremely interesting, and while President White never flinches in telling the whole truth, as he thinks science has ascertained it, he is nowhere irreverent. He confronts truth, takes its hand, and follows boldly wherever truth bids him come."—Buffalo Commercial.

"The book is written almost colloquially, and so interestingly as to enchain the attention at once, and keep it enchained. Concise as a history of the universe could be made, tabulated so that instant reference to a particular bit of history, theory, or biography may be had, it will be valuable as a lexicon relating to religious controversy. It is crammed with information, sorted, sifted, winnowed, and prepared for the consumer, as reading it is of an absorbing interest, and it will probably provoke answering arguments."—Chicago Times-Herald.

"Undoubtedly the most exhaustive treatise which has been written on this subject. It is able, scholarly, critical, and impartial in tone."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

"A literary event of prime importance is the appearance of 'A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom.'"—Philadelphia Press.

These two large volumes, containing about 900 pages, will be sent to any address on the receipt of the price, Five Dollars.

"THE LANGUAGE OF THE STARS

A Primary Course of Lessons in Celestial Dynamics.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LIGHT OF EGYPT."

This important primary work is the first practical exposition of the Astro-Magnetic forces of Nature—in their relation to man—that has yet been issued by the American press. It contains fourteen special lessons, embracing each department of human life, in such plain, simple language that a child can understand the elementary principles laid down. And in addition to these lessons is an Appendix, containing a full explanation of all technical and scientific terms in general use upon the subject, thus forming a brief, practical Astro Dictionary. This work is illustrated with special plates.

OUR PREMIUMS.

There are many Spiritualists who know a good thing when they see it. There are others, however, who do not seem to realize what is going on around them, and therefore miss many chances to enrich their minds and enlarge their understanding. Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World is furnished to our subscribers at less than cost, and should be in every family in the United States, whether Spiritualists or not. Volumes 1, 2 and 3 constitute a wonderful magazine of thought on Death in its multifarious phases; in fact you can not find in all the libraries of the world as valuable information in regard to Death as you will have presented to you in these three volumes. They are nicely printed, neatly and substantially bound, and are an ornament to any library. Volume 3 is furnished at 25 cents, much less than the actual cost to us, and the three volumes, when ordered in connection with a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, only cost $1.10. The aggregate cost of the three books to the trade is $4.50. At this price, these three books ought to be in every Spiritualist family.

The Progressive Thinker is the first Spiritualist paper to inaugurate the Divine Plan—a portion of the profits of the office returning to subscribers in valuable books.

THE WOMAN'S BIBLE. PART II. Judges, Kings, Prophets and Apostles. Comments on the Old and New Testaments, from Joshua to Revelation. The comments are keen, bright, spicy, full of wit, the work of radical thinkers, who are not ignorant of the higher criticism. There is not a dull page. Paper, 50c.

THE NATURAL PHYSICIAN.

The Physician can only be the servant or handmaid of Nature in the cure of Disease.

In reality we can do nothing; we can only remove the offending cause while

Nature

Performs the cure, and therefore we lay it down as a fundamental maxim in medicine that all a Physician can do is to act as a Servant to Nature.

If you believe that the above statement is true, and believe that this method is the right one, then write to-day to

DR. C. E. WATKINS,

Sending age, sex and leading symptom.

DR. C. E. WATKINS, Ayer, Mass.

TRUTH

The only way to find out who is the "Greatest Psychic Physician living" is to read what their patients say.

DR. C. E. WATKINS

never claims that he is the greatest physician living, or that he is the GREATEST PSYCHIC.

He believes that there are hundreds of healers who are just as successful as he is, and he never yet has claimed that he is or was the best psychic, although twenty years before the public as the independent slate-writer with the record of not one person who ever accused him of fraud, ought to make the public THINK when they compare his claims to other so-called psychics.

DR. C. E. WATKINS

only desires those who are sick to remember that for over twenty years he has been before the public as a psychic, and over twelve years as a physician, and he never claims greater powers than others; but we believe he has a right to think he has as great gifts as those who claim so much.

TESTIMONIALS:

Dear Friend:—It gives me great pleasure to have such good news to tell you or perhaps I should say such a good report to make, for Doctor, your medicine commenced its good work as soon as I began taking it. Only let me assure you that I shall continue having your treatment. Respectfully,

FANNIE ELDREDGE.

Bangor, Maine.

My Dear Doctor:—I know you can see the good the medicine is doing me. I truly thank the noble guides for their treatment they give me at the circle; they treat my back every night. Kindly your patient,

MRS MARY SULTON.

1332 Vermont street, Lawrence, Kans.

Dear Sir:—I received your diagnosis, and it was all exceedingly correct, and I thank you for your kindness.

ETHELYN D. DEIBLER.

Olean, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—I seem to be gaining right along and am feeling fine. Please find inclosed the remittance for the remainder of my psychic treatment. I sit regularly every Tuesday and Saturday evenings at the stated hour, and enjoy the psychic circle greatly. It is doing me lots of good. Very gratefully yours,

MRS. S. D. FOWLER.

Wolcott, N. Y.

My Dear Sir:—I am in receipt of your diagnose of my case, which I consider is correct in every particular, wonderfully so. I am very, very thankful for it. As soon as possible shall begin treatment with you. Very truly yours,

Burr Oak, Mich. CHAS. BETTS.

Dear Dr. Watkins:—The diagnosis of my case is all true, and I would like to begin treatment of you at once. Respectfully, MRS. J. E. WILBUR.

Hazelton, Kans.

Dear Sir:—I am very much pleased with the good results from your psychic circle. On April 7, at the sitting, I felt a slight cool breeze over the right hand; cough pretty near gone. April 10, a slight breeze, cough all gone. On April 14, a breeze, and cough all gone; and so on at all sittings. I am free of all cough and feel as well as I ever did. Am very thankful for your assistance, and hope you will meet with much success in your practice. Yours,

A. ZIMMERMAN.

Bay Ridge, Fla.

Dear Doctor Watkins:—I received the medicine two weeks ago; my head feels much better than it has for a long time. Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain, yours truly,

Milo, Me. NANCY S. MITCHELL.

THE RELICS.

His musket hangs above the door,
And rust and dust have clogged the lock;
The ramrod shall be drawn no more,
Decay is eating at the stock!
The hands are pulseless now that bore
This ancient weapon in the fray—
He fought against his country's foes—
He played a hero's part! To-day
He sleeps and is enrolled with those Who bivouac on the silent shore.

That weapon it was his to bear,
I glory in his noble part!
But I've a treasure far more fair,
And nearer, dearer to my heart!
It is a lock of mother's hair
That he through all the dangers bore—
The lock she gave to him the day
He kissed her, standing in the door—
The lock of mother's hair that they Took from his breast, who found it there!

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, in Ashland, Wis., June 17, Lucy E., wife of Capt. I. H. Maxim, aged 41 years. She leaves a husband and one son and daughter to mourn her loss. Her casket was covered with a profusion of flowers, and the room filled with beautiful floral designs; from her children a large surmounted pillow with the word 'Mother.' Her life was as pure and sweet as the flowers that covered her inanimate form. S. J. MAXIM.

Passed to spirit life, from Lodi, Cal., July 14, Mr. William King, aged 83 years. He went to sleep without a struggle, knowing us to the last.

MRS. S. S. KING.

Mrs. Sylvia Coschelle, the well-known New York medium, died of typhoid fever at the age of 56 years, at Cape Nome, Alaska. She went to Alaska in April in company with her son and Dr. Julius Stowe, a noted materializing medium. Dr. Stowe lays sick with the fever also. COR.

Once more has our membership suffered depletion by the demise of one of its esteemed members, in the person of Mrs. Elmer Guiger, the loved wife of the trumpet medium of this place, who was a member of this society and a constant partaker of the consolations afforded by our beautiful philosophy, which assured her that all things would be well with those who, like herself, were earnest workers for the elevation spiritually of others, and which is taught so eloquently by the self culture class of which she was also a member. While we miss her in this expression, we are already assured that all things are well with her. Dr. Hilligos, of Anderson, Ind., and her many relatives and friends consigned her physical remains to the tomb on July 24th instant. Fraternally yours for the N. S. A. Society by W. W. HANKENS.

A GREAT HEALER

Dr. Peebles' Wonderful Cures Have Made His Name Famous the World Over.

Read His Generous Offer to the Sick.

J. M. PEEBLES, A. M., M. D., PH.D.

THERE is probably no physician or healer living who is curing more cases of Chronic and obstinate disease than is Dr. Peebles. During an experience of over fifty years this SEER AND GREAT HEALER has cured thousands of those who had been pronounced "incurable" by the best local physicians. Mrs. Alfonso Buck, of Mechanicsville, O., says: "It is now about three months since I began your treatment and I am happy to say that I am free from those dreadful pains and have gained 15 pounds and am still gaining rapidly. My doctor had given me up as "incurable." Being sure that I owe my life to your skill I most cheerfully and heartily recommend you to all those in search of health." Miss Maggie Polson, of Guthrie, Oklahoma, says: "Six months ago I suffered with terrible headaches, heart trouble and female weakness. My friends despaired of my life and I was so weak I could do nothing. Now I am well, strong and hearty. I can never forget the good you have done me."

Remember that Dr. Peebles does not heal by Christian Science, Hypnotism or any other "ism" but employs MILD and POTENT medicines, combined with his PSYCHIC POWERS. These Psychic treatments are the greatest power known for relieving pain and suffering and curing disease. One of his patients recently said, "these treatments seem as a breath of higher life. It seems as if they alone would almost raise the dead." Besides being the greatest Psychic Physician living he is an authority in Europe and America on Psychic Phenomena and the Psychic Science. He has written an essay "The Psychic Science in the Cure of Disease," which he will send free to any sufferer asking for it. The Doctor's diagnoses are equa ly as astonishing as his cures. His Psychic Gifts enable him to accurately locate the diseased and weakened tissues, thus he never has to experiment for weeks to discover the real trouble. No disease is really incurable if perfectly understood, for every effect or diseased condition has its cause, and if this is seen and removed by the aid of natural forces, health will be restored. What is your condition and its cause? It is within your power to know. No two cases are exactly alike so do not spend precious time in taking patent medicines which are prepared a "text-book" case, or risk your life in the hands of a physician who does not understand your condition. Write to-day for a FREE DIAGNOSIS and special advice in your case. This will cost you nothing. The Doctor will also send you his essay on this wonderful science and other valuable literature FREE. Thousands of so-called "incurable" cases are cured by this method. So do not despair, if your physician has failed to cure you. Just write the doctor a plain, truthful letter, giving him your name, age, sex and leading symptom, in your own handwriting and receive a complete diagnosis of your case by return mail.

G. D. Younge, of Wimer, Ore., who is a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, says:—"I consider it my sacred duty to extend to you my heartiest thanks for the perfect cure your medicines and advice have effected in my case. I was very skeptical when I began the use of your medicines and treatment, but I am free to say that I now have a confirmed belief in their almost miraculous efficacy. Three months ago I bore about my body the hideous spectacle of my disease. Now I am a mentally and physically robust man."

Mrs. Lydia Mason, of Boyd, Oregon, who had not walked without crutches for a long time, after a few weeks of our treatment says:—"I can now walk without my crutches for almost half a day. I am gaining rapidly and expect to soon be in perfect health again."

Mabel Keyes of Iron Creek, S. D., who had suffered for a long time from eczema, says:—"The roughness of the skin has entirely disappeared. I am very thankful indeed for the great good you have done me. I talked with our family physician and he thinks my cure is remarkable. I doctored with him before I called on you and he said he did not think there was any help for me and he is one of the best doctors around here."

VOLUMES 1, 2 and 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Art Magic, Ghost Land, The Next World Interviewed, and the Occult Life of Jesus (including the Hull-Covert Debate) constitute our premium list. Those seven books have been on sale, costing the buyer in the aggregate, $10.75. We, after paying the postage and expense of mailing, realize only $1.50 for the seven—far less than cost to us. We desire to form the nucleus of a library in every Spiritualist home, hence this remarkable offer. By subscribing for The Progressive Thinker, you then have the privilege of purchasing these books at the premium prices. See terms on another page.

"Cultivation of Personal Magnetism. A Treatise on Human Culture." By Leroy Berrier. For sale at this office. Price $1.

"The Bridge Between Two Worlds." By Abby A. Judson. This book is dedicated to all earnest souls who desire, by harmonizing their physical and their psychical bodies with universal nature and their souls with the higher intelligences, to come into closer connection with the purer realms of the spirit world. It is written in the sweet spiritual tone that characterizes all of Miss Judson's literary works. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 75 cents. For sale at this office.

"Principles of Light and Color." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A truly great work of a master mind, and one whom Spiritualists should delight to honor. The result of years of deep thought and patient research into Nature's finer forces are here gathered and made amenable to the well-being of humanity. Medical men especially, and scientists, general readers and students of occult forces will find instruction of great value and interest. A large, four-pound book, strongly bound, and containing beautiful illustrative plates. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $5. It is a wonderful work and you will be delighted with it.

CLUBS CLUBS

We want ten thousand clubs formed in every part of the United States, for which we present inducements never before offered by any Spiritualist paper. These clubs must consist of ten subscribers, and each one will get Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death; or if they would prefer it, they can have the Next World Interviewed. They can have their choice of the two. Each subscriber in order to avail himself of this offer must pay $1.15. The fifteen cents is to pay expense of postage and mailing, and the books sent out are practically a gift. They are not cheap affairs; they are nicely and substantially bound in cloth, neatly printed in clear type and are ornaments to any center table. The contents are indeed valuable, such as every Spiritualist family should have. The aggregate price of these two books to the trade is $2.75. To each of our club subscribers one of these books is a gift, and when they receive the one of their choice they will be delighted with it, and will wonder how we can afford to do so much for them. The one who gets up the club will be entitled to The Progressive Thinker for one year, and Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, and also the Next World Interviewed. He will not only get The Progressive Thinker for one year, but both books. He gets what is equivalent to $3.75 for his trouble. There should be no difficulty whatever in getting up hundreds of clubs.

Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World will not only interest Spiritualists, but church members will be attracted to it. The Rev. M. J. Savage, a leading liberal divine of New York, leads off with several of his masterly productions, treating Death from an advanced standpoint. He is followed by leading Spiritualists who treat of Death in a philosophical and fascinating manner.

The Next World Interviewed is also a very excellent work. The plates of this book were donated to the office of The Progressive Thinker by Henry J. Horn. It consists of communications from the spirit side of life from leading minds there. Fifty-five communications are given by prominent personages, among them Prince Albert, Harriet Martineau, Judge Edmonds, Horace Greeley, Lord Lytton, Fanny Fern, Dr. Livingstone and the Czar of Russia.

RIVERHEAD, N. Y.—Dr. J. S. Loucks—Dear Sir: After ten months of severe suffering from excessive irritation of the stomach, bowels and bladder, and other complications, unable to eat except a raw egg, followed by great distress. In the last stage of dyspepsia, I was advised to try a clairvoyant and sent to you a lock of hair. You described the case perfectly. On taking the pleasant remedies I began immediately to pick up and can now eat a hearty meal and attend to business. It is considered a wonderful cure.

Yours very sincerely, JAMES B. SLADE.

Kind Dr. Loucks:—Mrs. Eckhart wished me to write you that she was gaining in strength rapidly. She grew better immediately after receiving your remedies. As for myself, I think I am getting along well. I expect to grow strong mentally as well as physically, as time goes on. When I first wrote you I was a physical wreck, and suffering the most intense pains from various chronic diseases of many years' standing. I was so bad that life had become a burden to me; but your magnetic remedies did good work, and I grew better from the first application, and after one month's treatment from you, I had gained ten pounds more in flesh, and the change in my general appearance was so great that it was a matter of remark among my friends. And I will say that I had employed the best medical aid I could get here, but they gave me no relief whatever, and I was growing worse under their treatment, and I have no doubt that if I could not have received your aid I would not to-day be in the land of mortals. I consider your magnetic remedies a dead shot. You can make such use of this letter as you choose. It may be of benefit to some suffering mortal. Most sincerely yours, JOHN W. LYON.

Decatur, Ill., Lock Box 226.

Dr. J. S. Loucks—Dear Sir:—I feel encouraged to send for treatment for my daughter, as I met a Mrs. Allen W. Lamb, of Garland, N. C. She told me that you cured her after five other doctors tried and failed, and gave up her case as incurable.

"The great mystery of existence consists in perpetual and uninterrupted change. Everything is immortal and indestructible—the smallest worm as well as the most enormous of the celestial bodies,—the sand grain or the water drop as well as the highest being in creation; man and his thoughts. Only the forms in which being manifests itself are changing; but Being itself remains eternally the same and imperishable. When we die we do not lose ourselves, but only our personal consciousness. We live on in nature, in our race, in our children, in our deeds, in our thoughts—in short, in the entire material and physical contribution which, during our short personal existence, we have furnished to the subsistence of mankind and of nature in general."—Buechner.

TO CAMP-MEETING GOERS

And Spiritualists Generally Who Take no Spiritualist Papers, Greeting:

If you are a Spiritualist and read no Spiritualist paper, then, of course, you cannot know what is going on in our movement. To you it is midnight darkness in that one respect, however wise you may be in other directions. The Progressive Thinker, being the largest Spiritualist paper published, combining cheapness and excellence, it will be a splendid agent to keep you apprised of what is transpiring in the great Spiritualistic Cause. Thousands of Spiritualists who attend our camp meetings, take no Spiritualist paper. They will go there to have a spiritual feast, and then return home to remain in utter darkness and ignorance as to what is going on in our ranks throughout the world. We ask this class particularly to subscribe for The Progressive Thinker, and thus have their homes illuminated throughout the year.

We don't believe that more than one Spiritualist in ten who visits the camp-meetings takes a Spiritualist paper. We greatly desire to reach this class. We are sure The Progressive Thinker will be a benefit to them while they will be a benefit to us. The benefit derived will be reciprocal.

RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.

BY S. WEIL.

Cloth, $1.25. Paper, 50 cents.

This is a work of great value, written by one of the keenest, most powerful and most truly religious minds of the day. It is particularly a work which should be put into the hands of those who have freed themselves from the dogmas of orthodoxy and from the dogmas of materialistic science, for it will strengthen the conviction of the free mind that mind and senses are not the whole of life.

The chapters reveal a new method in psychic and spiritual research. They show vivid glimpses of a stupendous moral cosmos that will supersede moral confusion; that only veritable beacon ship carries, and the childhood period of faith and fancy will be superseded by knowledge and Truth. The Other World and This.

A Compendium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1, New White Cross Literature.

BY AUGUSTA W. FLETCHER, M. D.

In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well-handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. It will prove a rich addition to any Spiritualist's library, and a most excellent book for any one seeking information concerning Spiritualism and its teachings.

MISSIONARIES.

The Baneful Work of Rome in China.

The evidence continues to accumulate that Rome is largely responsible for the troubles in China, though of course the daily press dilates upon Russian aggression, German aggression, etc., etc. The Citizen has given, in its issues of the past two weeks, sufficiently conclusive evidence to satisfy any fair-minded person that the arrogance and avarice of the papal priests in China—as in the Philippines, Cuba, and everywhere else, has roused the resentment of the people; but the Chinese have not submitted patiently, as did the Filipinos and other benighted peoples. The result is, the innocent suffer with the guilty—the Protestants with the Romanists—although the uprising was at first directed against the papal priests only.

A letter from the Rev. Horace T. Pitkins, stationed at Pao Ting Fu, where the Boxer troubles began, has been received by the American board through Mr. Pitkins' wife, who is at present at Troy, Ohio. The letter was dated May 28, and in it Mr. Pitkins tells of a fight in a near-by village on March 16. He says:

"It seems that in the moonlight of Saturday night the Boxers came down to the village, surrounded the houses of the Catholics as they were pointed out to them, and then robbed them, allowing no one to escape. Finally, they fired the houses, and as the people rushed out of the flames they were killed and thrown back into the fire. Only one man escaped, and they pursued him. He jumped into a well, and so they fired their guns into the well and threw down bricks until, thinking him dead, they left. He managed to get out, and started for Pao Ting Fu, told the Catholics, and they waited all day for other survivors to come. As none came on Monday they saw the provincial judge, and he sent soldiers, but they could find nothing.

"The Catholics were absolutely wiped out, thirty or more. Everywhere we know that they are not interfering with the Protestants. It is paying off old scores against the Catholics."

Evidence such as the above comes from all sources. In the Northwestern Christian Advocate last week there was printed a letter from Bishop S. M. Merrill, one of the ablest as well as most conservative of the Methodist bishops. Bishop Merrill is regarded as having "the judicial mind," par excellence. He says:

"In connection with the sad condition of things in China the remark has been made that the missionaries are largely responsible for the hatred the Chinese feel toward foreigners. It is not worth while to reply to this, so far as those are concerned who make the statement, as they evidently feel toward the missionaries very much as do the natives of that dark land, and stand in need of missionary labor about as much as do the heathen.

"There is, however, a serious side to this matter, and there is reason to fear that substantial ground exists for the belief that the conduct of some missionaries has been very objectionable and well calculated to arouse the enmity and the patriotic hostility of the people against them. There are missionaries and missionaries. The missionaries who represent the evangelical churches, preach the simple gospel of salvation through the sacrifice of the incarnate Savior, and teach the people the way of life, do not by such methods excite the wrath of those with whom they labor, nor the opposition of the rulers who learn of their methods and their teaching. But there are others who make a widely different impression. They represent a great church, with imposing ceremonies, with distinctive dress, with high ideas of official dignity and authority, and make demands for such honors and reverence and obedience as become those who are entitled to rule. In many instances their arrogance and assumptions are such as to arouse the suspicion that they aim at nothing less than the establishment of a foreign government over their followers, if not over the entire community where they set themselves up as lords and princes.

"It is well-known that where the Roman Catholic bishop fixes his residence in heathen lands he gathers around him a retinue of servants, sets up a little throne, puts on the toggery of a prince, appears in public with such pretentious displays of authority and receives from subordinates such marks of reverence and submission, as to create the impression that he is in fact a prince, ruler or king. It is also known that in connection with these assumptions of greatness, the Romanists make such representations of the authority of the Pope as to lead the simple-minded observers to think that he is a temporal ruler, divinely commissioned to govern princes, kings and emperors, so that they naturally conceive the idea that these foreigners intend in time to overturn their government and subject the nation to the power they represent as ordained of heaven to rule the world.

"It is worth while in the present crisis to look into these methods of the Romish Church, and to study the impressions they must make on the minds of Chinamen, who know so little of the actual state of the world without, and who are so jealous of their own institutions and of the divine right of their own rulers. It is difficult for us to imagine the pretentiousness of these foreign bishops; and yet, a little reflection on what we see in our own country, where the display only excites our pity or disgust, knowing, as we do, its harmlessness and emptiness, will satisfy us that where the people do not see through it the idea must come to them that it means the displacement of their laws and customs. This impression is strengthened, and must be when these 'lord bishops' actually sit as judges and determine causes of a civil kind, and impose fines, panaceas, and other temporal penalties for disobedience to their orders and failures to pay proper respect to their personal dignity. The untrained heathen do not distinguish between ecclesiastical and civil rule when the outward appearances and results are not distinguishable. Verily, there is a sense in which some missionaries intensify in the Chinese mind their natural hatred to foreigners."

After reading the above, no one will question the statements of those who put upon Rome the fearful responsibility for the massacres in China. Has she not done in other lands just what she is doing there?—Citizen, Boston.

HIGHER FACULTIES.

Power of Seeing Spiritual Things.

The Rev. C. N. Moller, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, preached in St. Louis lately on "Man's Spiritual Power." He took for his text I. Cor. ii., 9, 10: "But as it is written, eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his spirit, for the spirit searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God." In part he said:

"St. Paul is writing about his experience as a preacher of the gospel of Jesus Christ among the cultivated people of the city of Corinth. He is also in our text declaring a great truth.

"When he made his entrance into Corinth it was in weakness and fear and trembling, showing the sense of his responsibility and the difficulties of his mission. With no commanding presence or eloquence or power of convincing logic or attending miracle he delivers his message.

"St. Paul declares that he does not depend on the enticing words of man's wisdom, but in the demonstration of the spirit and of power. That faith does not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. That the revelation of the Holy Spirit of the great unseen realities of the Christian faith is not dependent on the senses, which he sums up as the eye, the ear and the heart. He protests that men are not merely sensual, but have receptive spiritual powers, that 'they might know the things that are freely given to them of God.' He tears away the veil and shows to men the higher vision of themselves and the glorious possibilities in the cultivation of higher faculties.

"The people of Corinth were not generally moved by this strange messenger or his message. They were devoted to the beauty of art and nature; they were absorbed in various schools of philosophy that did not dream of definite spiritual power. It seems wonderful that under the circumstances St. Paul should have made any impression at all, but the results of his life work are an evidence of the truth of his statement 'that faith does not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.'

"The preacher of the higher—the spiritual—life of man is confronted to-day with the same disposition that St. Paul faced in the early days of Christianity in Corinth. We are living in days that have many claims to distinction, with breadth of knowledge and power of progress that former ages could not have dreampt of. And yet it is development of what St. Paul calls the eye and ear and heart. When men speak of useful knowledge they mean generally such knowledge as is concerned only with this world of sense and time. Practical education does not usually include the thought of the training of children for a future as well as a present state of existence.

"The French eclectic, Cousin, once asked a friend what he considered the most serious symptom of the day in the world of thought. The friend made several suggestions, and at length Cousin said: 'Nothing seems to me to compare in seriousness to this, that God is apparently disappearing from the minds of men.' This is apparent in the thought-life of the people of this day as in France of thirty years ago. Its truth can be realized by conversation with educated men or by reading the so-called theological novels of the day. One of the most recent of these novels shows how men can shut out of their thoughts their higher faculties, their powers of communing with God, and limit themselves to the eye, the ear and the heart.

"God has made us in his image, beings of inexhaustible capacity, of boundless possibility. God made us not merely for the changing world, but with powers to apprehend the things unseen he hath prepared for those who love him. When Jesus answered St. Peter's confession of faith he said unto him: 'Blessed art thou Simon Bar-jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.'

"We have the power of receiving the direct influence of the guiding, teaching, loving Spirit of God. The development of the higher nature, the power to receive a revelation in this present world, is measured by our love for God. And love for God implies a striving to be pure and true and obedient to his commandments and calls for adoration, thanksgiving and prayer and an earnest seeking after all other means of grace or strength for the spiritual life.

"We thankfully recognize the marvelous capacity which is inherent in the ear and eye and heart. They are evidences of divine wisdom and goodness, but they point to a seeing and hearing power, to an imagination and affection that is an everlasting gift, for we can but believe that after the fleshly eye and the ear and the heart have turned to dust, we shall forever enjoy the beauty, the harmony, the love, of eternity."

THOUGHTS ARE THINGS.

And Thoughts About Some Other Things.

By saying thoughts and other things is as much as to say that thoughts themselves are things, and that is just what I mean. When Lord Byron says:

"Thoughts are things, and a small drop of ink,
Falling like dew upon a thought, produces
That which makes thousands, perhaps millions think," he is evidently referring to the old-fashioned metaphysical conceptions, according to which, there are no things or substances except thoughts or mental images. But all thinking is impossible without including a material as well as a spiritual side. A clear-minded person can project by means of thought, substances which can be caught on sensitive paper in the forms of triangles, squares, houses, etc., just as he may choose to have them. Some time ago the New York Journal photo-engraved a number of these thought-forms and placing them by their real subjective forms as given by a draughtsman, found they were nearly correct. In the same way the spiritual and phrenal forces formulate the images of the outer world as well as of all thoughts and sensations and impress them on that picture-plate, the sensorium. This wonderful sensorium covers the front and upper-front region of the brain both parts of which are called the Sinciput, and although using to a certain extent the outer brain while we dwell in our earthly bodies, we may know that these amazing subtleties must find their principal home in the psychic brain. This idea of the sensorium, shows it to be the real book of life, the picture store-house of memory for this world and especially for the world to come.

If thought can thus send out a stream of substances which can be collected on sensitized paper, it is very easy to understand how a magnetic mental healer by getting into rapport with a patient at a distance can project a force which will cure disease. If the patient in this case however, does not possess more or less of a psychic or sensitive nature, the healer's force will strike on a rock and some other process will prove more effective. Some powerfully magnetic healer who is able to practice absent healing with much success, will advertise to teach others to do the same thing. This is on a par with the course which Hutchings took when he proposed to teach other people to become lightning calculators like himself. After the students had paid their money and tried their best to equal their master, they found that Mr. Hutchings could add an example five times quicker than they could even see the figures, for to tell the truth he was a psychozoist and they were not.

I have received Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, issued by The Progressive Thinker Publishing House. I have been surprised and delighted to find so much that is beautiful, cheering and exalting in one book. This is a book for making Spiritualists still more spiritual and a book also for our church people who are generally so much in the dark about the whole destiny of man as he passes into the higher life. It includes articles from the Rev. M. J. Savage, W. P. Phelon, M. D., Jas. C. Underhill, J. O. Barrett, G. W. Kates, my former student, William Emmette Coleman, J. M. Peebles, M. D., Dr. Dean Clarke, Chas Dawbarn, Cora L. V. Richmond, Hudson Tuttle, Dr. Fred L. H. Willis, Moses Hull, Dr. C. W. Hidden, Carlyle Petersilea and various other excellent writers. H. V. Swerlingen, A. M., M. D., has quoted a large number of beautiful passages from eminent authors, which is a department of the book of great value.

In the same book there is one position taken by an able writer which does not seem to be properly analytical, and as some others are using the same terms as expressing the foundation of all life, a few words would be appropriate. Speaking of the formation of a universe the writer says: "There were just three facts in nature, with which the Great Experimenter must work as his raw material. They were matter, force and intelligence." In another place he calls these "distinct entities." According to this, force must be distinct from matter. But in the whole known world forces are exhibited in currents of waves of water, in the sweep of winds or gases or steam, and these are all departments of matter. Why speak of force then as something distinct, an entity by itself? Reasoning from the known to the unknown, we must include some grade of matter, for the universe is in harmony with itself. Within this matter, we perceive that there is some all-penetrating and almost infinitely refined substance which we call spirit. In working out the problem of atoms which constitute the true department of matter, I have found that no force or action of any kind is possible without the co-operation of spirit; in other words that the union of spirit and matter is absolutely necessary in all things. Force then includes matter and spirit and judging from all examples in nature, goes forth in fluid form. Intelligence results from a physical brain kindled by mental and spiritual ethers, these very ethers themselves being composed of both matter and spirit. The universe then consists of these two great divisions of matter and spirit, differentiated into all their boundless forms of manifestation.

Death Defeated, or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young. By J. M. Peebles, M. D.

This is a book witty and racy like all of Dr. Peebles' writings and containing thousands of facts drawn from various parts of the world and multitudes of historical points and opinions against flesh-eating and wrong methods of life. There is an immense array of points that the people are in dying need of understanding. Occasionally some will consider him a little extreme in sending out his edicts against so many things, but he will set multitudes of people to thinking and making observations on themselves. It seems Dr. Peebles can't find out that he is getting old and nobody will tell him, so he keeps on rolling out books every year, making speeches in all quarters and managing a large business. "Having passed," he says, "far beyond the seventies, onto the very verge of the eighties, and yet hale and vigorous, why should I not live a century? Why die at all, as my forefathers did? Why not live in this body immortal on earth?" Tut, tut, dear Doctor. Are you about surrendering to this theory of earthly immortality? Really, I would like to keep you out of heaven as long as possible, and have you grinding away at these ruder earthly duties, for the world needs your toil, but if I was a betting man I would bet that you will not reach one hundred years, especially if you keep on driving things the way you are doing at present. Now it is very easy to replace the waste of the fleshy part of our bodies, but what about the bones? The cancellous part of the bones is almost devoid of blood vessels, and how are you going to supply the waste of this part without a plenty of blood vessels? The bones always become brittle with age and gradually become a dead weight to absorb the vital magnetisms of the rest of the system. Finally, the power of resistance becomes less and less, until the weary body that has been so long a part of the earthly ego is laid aside and the higher man, freed from its depressing weight, rises triumphant into more beautiful climes. Blessings on these bones, then, dear Doctor, that can thus open the gates of Paradise. Anyone who has looked through the veil and seen the glories of the Beyond should not be anxious to live forever among these grosser earthly scenes.

Christian Against Heathen.

The Christian nations are horrified at the atrocities in China. The Emperor of Germany said: "I shall not rest till China is subdued and all bloody deeds avenged," and the cry for vengeance and the destruction of China is going up from all "Christian nations." Christians should not forget that recent bloodshed in China was not caused by the government but by the Boxers who are in rebellion against the government. We should not forget that for several years there has been a great deal of talk in Europe about slicing up China and parceling out her territory among Christian nations. The Christian missionaries have for years advocated that policy. The proposed method of "Christianizing China" has excited the people of that country and they are now trying to eject the foreigners from the country. Christian nations should not forget that they sometimes have rebellions and atrocities at home. The German nation shed rivers of Jewish blood; Russia horrified the world because of the atrocities perpetrated on the Hebrews; the streets of Paris a generation ago, were glutted with blood shed by mobs and the guillotine; Christian England has spilled rivers of blood and she is now engaged in wholesale killing of the Christian Boers for territory and gold mines. In the United States we mob Chinamen, and burn negroes at the stake, and in New Orleans a few years ago, lawlessly shot to death a lot of Italians. At Hazelton, Pa., at Homestead, at Buffalo in Idaho and at other places working men were shot down like dogs for striking for better wages. Confucius, the great Chinese prophet, said: "Do not unto others what you you would not have them do unto you," and Jesus said: "Love one another, return good for evil," but neither the Chinese heathen nor the professed Christian obey the commands of their great religious teachers. China invented the compass and printing and gave the world many inventions. If she were to send her missionaries to the Christian countries and threaten to slice up their territory and destroy their institutions, and plant Confucianism where Christianity now exists, I would expect to see "Christian Boxers" hustle John Chinaman out of the country with neatness and dispatch and kill him if he hesitated long as to to the order of his going. It would not be a bad idea for "Christian nations" to first cast the beam out of their own eyes and then they might see more clearly how to extract it from the eyes of the "heathen Chinee."

A PLEA TO ALL SPIRITUALISTS

To the Spiritualists of the United States I send my greetings and best wishes. We are all engaged in the cause of truth for the purpose of enlightening the people and demonstrating to them that we are immortal beings and are in direct communication with the world of spirits. In no better way can we produce the evidence of our belief and knowledge than by assisting the spiritual press in its efforts to accumulate all the facts than can be had in this grand work of spirit communion. When the editor of The Progressive Thinker first contemplated the commencement of this formidable work, his dream was to give to the world a large weekly paper at a less price than had ever before been believed could be accomplished. He went about his work with the determination to make a success of it. He put the price at one dollar a year, and has kept on improving the paper up to the present time, and now behold it! Look at the vast army of correspondents he has from all parts of the world. Men and women vie with each other in striving to do the most good in satisfying the people that they have all the evidence at their command to prove that all human life is immortal and also progressive.

But the dream of the editor did not end by giving to the world the best weekly paper at the smallest possible price, but now he is adding to it thousands of books written expressly for the cause of Spiritualism. These books contain much valuable information. A list of these books can be found in each number of The Progressive Thinker.

I write this open letter to the readers of The Progressive Thinker wholly without the knowledge or consent of the editor, and I do truly hope he will not fail to give a place in his paper.

Now, my dear friends, both men and women, let us all unite in one grand effort to bring the weekly circulation of The Progressive Thinker up to at least one hundred thousand subscribers! Remember that our friends in the spirit world are more interested in this work than we are and every dollar that we invest will be returned with interest when we enter the spirit world where we will all assemble sooner or later. Death of the body is just as inevitable as life is essential to our greater happiness in the future. Much of our happiness in the upper world depends on the amount of good we do in this world.

If God has any respect of persons it will be manifested towards those that have accomplished the most good in this world. When we realize that we have all the facts at hand that will demonstrate the truth of immortal life, what more can we do than to assist and instruct others in the same glorious truths.

Go out, my dear brothers and sisters, each one of you and get all the subscribers you can for The Progressive Thinker. I am not engaged in any begging scheme for I am doing all that I ask you to do, and if we do not succeed in extending the list to one hundred thousand for a Christmas presentation to the editor of the best and cheapest Spiritualist paper, to say nothing about the value of the premium books we get, which are more valuable than the dollar we send.

GOD--CONSTITUTION.

Important Thoughts on the Subject,

DENUNCIATION OF THE ATTEMPT TO INTRODUCE RELIGIOUS BELIEF INTO THE CONSTITUTION—LETTERS TO THE NEW YORK SUN.

The Rev. James M. Boddy says in his letter in the Sun to-day on "God and the Constitution:"

"Now, unless a man has mental myopia, he should know that a Constitutional recognition of Deity does not necessarily imply the recognition of the church. Nor does the recognition of the Deity imply a recognition of the creeds of the Christian church."

I presume the reverend gentleman cannot imagine himself as suffering from "mental myopia" in the slighest degree, and his line of reasoning might "deceive even the very elect," providing they were as ill-informed as he seems to be concerning the actual words these Constitution tinkers wish to insert therein, which are bracketed ones:

"We, the people of the United States [acknowledging Almighty God as the source of all power and authority in civil government, the Lord Jesus Christ as the ruler of nations, and His revealed will as of supreme authority in civil affairs] etc."

Now, right here in these last words is "the nigger in the woodpile" concealed. A constitutional adoption of them would have precisely the effect of "the recognition of the creeds of the Christian church" and the destruction of religious liberty in our land. Every intelligent and impartial thinker will readily perceive this fact at a glance. It is only the sufferers from "mental myopia," whether ministers or laymen, who are so blind that they can't see or won't see the point.

Those who claim to be the authorized interpreters of "His revealed will," are, and have been in all past generations, the makers of the creeds, whether Catholic or Protestant, and the statements of dogmatic theology contained in the "Westminster Confession" or in the creed of the Catholic church would become the standard by which to judge the "civil affairs" of our country and its people. Just think of it—if it is possible to think of an impossible thing. Here would be a union of church and state with a vengeance; and, therefore, all the millions of Hebrews, Shakers, Quakers, Unitarians, Universalists, Spiritualists, Liberal Religionists of various cults, Freethinkers, etc., would be classed as "disbelievers" or "heretics." Every one of these millions, because of his "heterodoxy," would become liable to arrest, fine and imprisonment, if such a fanatical law should be established by constitutional amendment; and thus they would be deprived of both civil and religious liberty at one fell swoop.

Singularly enough, the "mental myopia" that afflicts these misguided religious fanatics prevents their perceiving the force of that clause of the Constitution of the United States which is as follows: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting an establishment thereof, or abridging freedom of speech, or of the press."

Ye men and women of America who are patriotic and liberty loving—ye who are intelligent and progressive enough to believe that every one should possess the inalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of his or her own conscience—rise up, I pray you, in earnest protest against this reactionary movement on the part of religious intolerants. Let us all take our firm stand upon the high and broad platform of universal justice and perfect religious freedom, so wisely established by the noble, self-sacrificing, God-inspired men and women who founded our nation and its government. Thus shall we prove ourselves worthy of the blessed heritage of civil and religious liberty which they bequeathed to us, and under which we have so abundantly prospered for more than one hundred years.

Brooklyn, July 24. PATRIOT.

The Rev. James M. Boddy evidently does not know the history of the activity of the God-in-the Constitution party, under the name of the National Reform Association, to put the church into the Constitution, by making national recognition of the basis of the church; that is, Jesus Christ and the Bible. Senator Frye and Representative Morse, in their respective chambers, were the representatives.

On March 11, 1896, a hearing was had before the Judiciary Committee of the House on this subject. The proposed amendment acknowledged Almighty God as the source of all power and authority in civil government, the Lord Jesus Christ as the ruler of nations, and His revealed will as supreme authority in civil affairs. One of its advocates made what he called a clear statement of a clear question, thus:

"The parties in this debate agree substantially in these two things: First, that the Constitution is a secular document; and, second, that the facts in our life are Christian; but the one party claims that a secular Constitution is right, and that it ought to remain so, and that all the facts in our national life should be brought down to it, viz., abolish Government chaplaincies, prayers in Congress, Bible in the schools, etc. The other party contend that every Christian feature shall be maintained, and ask that the Constitution be amended so as to secure all such features."

The chairman of the committee brought this out even plainer by asking one of the Christian speakers what he meant by the revealed will of Jesus Christ. The speaker answered: "The Bible." Then this colloquy occurred:

The Chairman—"Then you wish the Constitution to recognize the Bible as supreme authority in civil affairs, do you not"?

Dr. McAllister—"Yes, sir."

The amendment was opposed by the president of the American Secular Union and Freethought Federation, some individual Freethinkers and by Spiritualists, the Seventh Day Adventists and a Jewish rabbi and a Unitarian preacher. It was their common agreement that the amendment not only put religion as a universal matter in the Constitution, but it also put in a definite religion—the Christianity of Jesus Christ. By acknowledging Christ as the supreme ruler of nations it threw out of court entirely the Jews and the Freethinkers.

That the Rev. Mr. Boddy is very ill informed in this matter is not surprising, for very few newspapers have reported these hearings or printed the proposed amendments.

AN ASSURANCE.

A pardon is given to the soul who repents;
The return of his children God never resents,
But beckons them to Him, to share in His love,
And dwell safe from harm, in the mansions above.

He never will send from his care for a day,
His children, whose weakness has led them astray;
He will gather them home from the uttermost parts
Of the world, to bind up their poor, broken hearts!

He will show them new ways to atone for the past,
That they may rejoice in His kingdom at last!
But thrice blest are they who live for Right's sake,
So that they shall have no atonement to make.

WE call special attention to The Next World Interviewed, one of our special premiums. We are enabled to furnish it to our readers at the price announced in our premium list, from the simple fact that Mr. Horn donated the plates of the book to us. We have sent out thousands of copies of this book, and it has been well received everywhere. It should be circulated by the millions among all classes of Spiritualists. The seven books that we are offering to Spiritualists as premiums contain a large storehouse of useful knowledge on Spiritual and Occult subjects. You should have them on the shelves of your library where you can have access to them at any time. Read carefully our premium announcement.

SPIRITUAL SEANCE.

Messages Delivered from the Living.

Mrs. Maud L. Freitag's Vigorous Response.

It is said that Mrs. Maud von Freitag, the Spiritualist medium who has been giving public seances in this city for the past few weeks, delivered messages from fictitious persons and persons who are living to those who sent up names of that character last Sunday evening. Mrs. von Freitag's method is to cause persons in the audience to write names of deceased persons on slips of paper, have them collected by others and brought to her. After a lecture on Spiritualism she gives a seance in which she delivers messages from the departed ones to the writers of the notes. Last Sunday, Clarence Porter, of the firm of Porter Bros. & Hackworth, sent up six names which he says were all fictitious and all of the given names were "Lewis G." For instance, Mr. Porter says he sent up the name of "Lewis H. Finney," "Lewis G. Hill" and four others, all of which were fictitious. Mr. Porter was seen this morning and said that Mrs. Freitag called the name of Lewis G. Hill, which Mr. Porter had written, and asked who recognized the name. Mr. Porter says he arose and Mrs. von Freitag said she saw a spirit just in the rear of Mr. Porter. Mr. Porter says that Mrs. von Freitag delivered a message from the mythical Lewis G. Hill, stating that he was a thousand times happier than when he was on earth in Ottumwa and more to the same effect. She then asked Mr. Porter if he desired his message returned, and upon his signifying in the affirmative, sent a note back to him with a name totally different from that of Lewis G. Hill, so Mr. Porter says. Mrs. von Freitag asked Mr. Porter to read the name aloud, which he did, and it being the wrong name she asked a bystander to read it. The name was read and Mrs. von Freitag asked that the note be returned, which was done. After a time she picked out the right note containing the name of Lewis G. Hill and gave it to Mr. Porter, who emphatically says that he never knew Lewis G. Hill nor even heard of anybody by that name, that he remembers.

Emmet Work sent up a name of a young man who now resides in Keosauqua by the name of Blackford. Mrs. von Freitag, it is said, also read a message from him sent from the spirit world, whereupon Mr. Work proclaimed that Mr. Blackford was very much alive. It is said that Mrs. von Freitag in scathing terms denounced the imposition that had been practiced upon her.—Ottumwa (Ia.) Courier.

MRS. FREITAG'S REPLY.

The following is the letter in which Mrs. Freitag presents her side of the case:

"An article appeared in Tuesday's Courier in regard to the messages delivered at one of my seances from persons who are living and responses being given to fictitious names. Now, any one of the four hundred people within sound of my voice Sunday night will remember that after the lecture and before the ballots or folded slips of paper were collected and placed upon the table, I made a clear statement in regard to the law governing this phase of the phenomena of Spiritualism by saying the process of death does not change character; the sinner does not become a saint in the twinkling of an eye simply because he dies, but retains many of his characteristics for a time after passing to the other world. Only through progression can he become perfected. Consequently there are a great many spirits who exist in a state of ignorance and comparative darkness some time after leaving the body. These we call "personating spirits." They can not manifest to a person who is absolutely and positively honest in his investigations and who understands the law of spirit return but if the door is opened by a dishonest thought, if fictitious names are written, or names of living persons are given, it sometimes occurs that a personating spirit will assume the name written upon the slip of paper, announce himself to the medium's guides as an honest spirit, present himself to the medium, demand attention, and thus give to the seeker what he is searching for—dishonesty. I have reliable information that Sunday night there were at least forty fictitious ballots upon the table, some person showing their high order of intelligence, even called upon a dog. In such an atmosphere, under such conditions, what can one expect save that lower forces will manifest to them. A number of fictitious ballots were rapidly selected after the two personating spirits had responded, as any number of people can testify. The forces concentrated every energy to have them laid aside that intelligent and loving spirits, who were anxiously awaiting an opportunity to communicate, might be allowed to do so. Let the person who wishes to honestly investigate prepare himself for this investigation by endeavoring to learn something about the law that governs spirit return. This he may do by a study of the philosophy. I am more than sorry that I can not at this time hold another meeting, but on account of sickness in my home, must return at once. Will, however, be back to Ottumwa in all probability, one year from date. Spiritualism is to me a science, a truth, a religion. Though I have to fight every inch of the way, I shall remain in the work, because I know it is knowledge beyond all price, and I want others to share this knowledge with me.

THE STRANGEST CITY.

It Is a Segment of Spiritualism.

Your correspondent is addressing you from what is undoubtedly the strangest city and the most peculiar community in the United States, if not in the world. Shalam is its name, and it represents the latest word in Utopias. A town with a new civilization, a new bible, and a new religion and the strangest combination of laws and customs which ever perplexed the student of sociology or delighted the radical and impractical reformer. It is situated on a tract of land nearly 1,000 acres in extent, about six miles north of Las Cruces, and about 50 miles north of El Paso, in Mexico. Its present population comprises about 3,000 souls, but it is constantly growing, and the indications are that within the next decade the 10,000 mark should be reached.

In recent years there has been a marked tendency to inaugurate these strange settlements, having for their purpose the exploitation and demonstration of various socialistic theories, says a writer in the Philadelphia Times. The vogue of Bellamy's "Looking Backward" gave a decided impetus to the movement, and many experiments predestined to failure were attempted.

It is doubtful if any of these can equal Shalam for the practice of extraordinary principles. It is an odd combination of ancient religious superstition and the most advanced and radical socialism. Nevertheless, in spite of the fact that the living conditions are entirely opposed to the generally accepted modern ideas, the inhabitants are happy, contented and prosperous, and believe that they are the saving remnant which will bring forth a purified race to regenerate mankind and effect the salvation of the earth.

The adults composing this community are Spiritualists and vegetarians, but the children reared under this strange system are the chief hope of the believers. It is they, and not the grown men and women, who live in Shalam, who are to demonstrate to the world the possibility of a new economic and social fraternity. Through them earth is to be regenerated and man led out of the darkness of the competitive system into one where private property, if not wholly abolished, is made subject to a sort of communism with which writers of the order of Bellamy have made us familiar.

TOWN'S FOUNDER A NEW YORK DOCTOR.

Appropriately enough, Shalam is of supernatural origin. Its founder was Dr. Newbrough, a New York dentist and Spiritualist who died in 1890. It was he who wrote the new bible, which is the daily guide and religious mentor of this queer community. His name is held in deepest reverence and the believers regard him as the sacred apostle of the divine and accord his memory much the same veneration which the Mormons bestow on Brigham Young and Smith. The Bible which Dr. Newbrough wrote is a mammoth work and is called "Oahspe," a word meaning earth, air and sky in a language spoken before the flood. It is said to have been written on the typewriter by Dr. Newbrough, his hands being guided by supernatural beings, and was printed without being read by the Doctor.

It is certainly a work without a counterpart, filled with extraordinary phrases and with more peculiar illustrations, but it is the sacred book of a unique community, which was founded to establish the religion it teaches, and out of the spiritual and economic doctrines set forth therein, to found a new race. The story of the writing of this bible is very remarkable and is related with bated, reverent breath by the faithful members of the sect.

According to popular tradition, before commencing the inspired writing Dr. Newbrough found himself unaccountably affected with the well-known involuntary twitching of the hands, so common to Spiritualists. Against his will whenever he placed his hands on paper with pen in hand they immediately wrote strange religious messages. Dr. Newbrough then conceived the idea that he had been selected for some strange spiritual mission and immediately began to purify his life in order to be better suited to receive the celestial message. He then gave up eating flesh and fish, milk and butter, and took to rising before daylight, bathing twice a day, and occupying a small room alone, where he sat every morning half an hour before sunrise recounting daily to the Creator his shortcomings in governing himself in thought and deed. In six years' training he reduced himself from 250 to 180 pounds. Bodily ills were gone. He became limber and sprightly and had a new lease of life.

Then came the spiritual revelations. He was one morning strangely impelled to go to the typewriter. He was entirely unskilled in the use of the instrument, having always employed a stenographer for his correspondence. He was therefore filled with amazement, even awe, to find his fingers involuntarily manipulating the keys at a speed which no human operator could hope to duplicate. He received a strange injunction not to read what was printed, and having worked himself into a religious fear of losing this new power he obeyed reverently. The next morning, also before sunrise, the same power came and wrote (or printed, rather) again. Again the matter was laid away very religiously, he saying little about it to anybody.

For 50 weeks this continued every morning, half an hour or so before sunrise, and then it ceased, and he was told to read and publish the book Oahspe. The peculiar drawings in Oahspe were made with pencil in the same way. A few of the drawings he was told to copy from other books, such as Saturn, the Egyptian ceremonies, etc. This was the miraculous manner in which the new bible was derived. Those who constituted the fraternity not only follow its economic doctrines and refrain from considering anything that is theirs—they call themselves "Kosmons," which is said to signify, in the language of their sacred scriptures, non-owners of any and everything, but the children are taught to revere the book as the inspired dogma of their religion.

CHILDREN WORSHIPED BY THEIR ELDERS.

Probably the most remarkable feature of this strange religion is the attention which is bestowed upon the children; indeed, it might well be called a sort of juvenile paradise. The youngsters have the finest and largest buildings in town, they receive the choicest food, are carefully clothed, and so educated as to become regenerate and fitted to promulgate the holy religion. Further, the children actually own the settlement, and the name Shalam signifies "Children's Land." This land, with all the improvements thereon, has been deeded to trustees and their successors forever, for the use and benefit of the children now in Shalam and those who may come after them, and can never be incumbered by mortgage, nor sold to deprive them of a home and an inheritance. More remarkable still is the fact that only a few of these children are the offspring of the settlement. The greater part are waifs and outcasts who are collected from the various parts of the country and are adopted by the philanthropic "faithists," as the rulers of Shalam call themselves.

At a suitable age the children are taught "spirit communion" and many other mysteries of the strange faith. There is so much, however, that is reasonable and practical in their regime, and the affectionate solicitude for the welfare of the children is so genuine, that even the scoffer can pardon much of the extravagance. The children are taught by the kindergarten methods, and the older ones are instructed in such trades as they show a liking for. Throughout the settlement the paternal idea prevails.

FOOLISH DOCTRINE.

Spiritualism or Christianity, Which?

Rev. Walter Lyon, of Stockbridge, N. Y., said recently in conversation with Mr. D.: "O, you are not a believer in that foolish doctrine, are you?" referring to Spiritualism. Rev. James Ensign, the great evangelist of Central New York, being present, replied: "Just see the families it has wrecked."

I have heard Bro. Ensign spoken of as a sound reasoner, and I was greatly astounded to be told of his remark. He very well knows there are as many black sheep hiding under the cloak of Christianity as elsewhere, but this should not injure true Christianity; so with Spiritualism.

Angels come holding out a shining crown, set with gems of living light, to be worn in place of the old one of faith and hope. You spurn it beneath your feet. My brothers, it is because you do not understand. You close your eyes and ears, so fail to see or hear the angels God hath sent to bring truth unto the world.

Rev. Talmage, in the New York Christian Herald, in answer to a question concerning the Godhead, replies: "It is a mystery which we cannot solve. But we should not hesitate to believe, as we believe many things we do not understand.'

Now, Bro. Lyon, if the Christians believe many things they cannot understand, I say the Christian religion is foolish doctrine. Rev. Charles Sheldon, in a late story, says: "Were Christ here to-day, the pastor of any wealthy congregation, they would crucify him again, even after the lapse of 2,000 years of historical Christianity."

Is not this true? "If ye are my followers ye will do the works that I do. Even greater works shall ye do." Churches, are you Christ's followers? No, no, a thousand times no. You do not believe in the teachings of Jesus. You cannot do his works. The bread of life which you will find in the Bible, you reject with contempt, with scorn.

I. Cor. xii.—Concerning spiritual gifts brethren I would not have you ignorant. Healing, prophecy, discerning of spirits.

I. John iv.—Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God.

Acts 2:17—I will pour forth of my spirit upon all flesh. Your sons and daughters shall prophesy; your young men shall see visions, old men shall dream dreams.

Ps. 91:11—We shall give his angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways.

Hebrews 2:24—Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister unto those who shall be heirs of salvation?

Rev. 22:6—God sent his angel to show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done.

Bro, Lyon, do you believe God sent his angels with messages in those days? If so, he has the power to do so again. How dare you deny that power. Why should God remain silent to-day and speak in the past? Will you tell me. How do you know Spiritualism, which you call foolish doctrine, may not be true? Have you ever investigated? No. Then it is your duty to do so. You, a teacher of the people, should teach the truth, the truth which Jesus taught, but which is rejected to-day by all churches. One thousand sects all differing and failing to agree. O, it is time you ceased trying to convert the world to your dead creeds. Look for the living truth which angel messengers bring to man to-day. It is most precious and will live long after the creeds are forgotten. The creeds which Jesus never taught. Were Jesus here to-day he could not join the churches. O Rev. Brothers, strive to make your churches truly spiritual, teaching the truths which the apostles taught. Pray that you may receive a true understanding of the Bible teachings, and help to lift mankind from the darkness and horror of a belief in an angry God. Learn that God is love and saveth to the uttermost.

EMMA DUELL.

Grand Ledge, Mich.

The sixth annual meeting of the Grand Ledge Spiritualists Camp Association was opened at their beautiful summer home, Grand Ledge Camp, Mich., July 29, 1900.

The grounds, always beautiful, have been made more attractive this last year by substantial improvements. After the National hymn, rendered by the choir, and an invocation by Mrs. Loe F. Prior, the assembly was formally opened by Mrs. A. E. Sheets, of Grand Ledge, who has been chairwoman of this organization for four years. With a beautiful tribute to Mother Nature, she lovingly alluded to the red men of the forest who once had a home on this lovely spot, and welcomed their return to us through the media present, exhorting them to be true to their mediumship, to the cause, and the spirit world. Each member present of the state association, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and trustee, as well as the representatives of the local societies, officers of the camp, members of the choir, pianist, campers and visitors, were each welcomed in turn. We feel that we are especially blessed in having this loving, large-hearted woman at the helm of our craft. Although Mrs. Prior had been programmed for the afternoon service, Mrs. Sheets prevailed upon her to give a short talk in the morning. As Mrs. Prior has just returned from the South, having labored there in the spiritual field for four years, she is identified with their interests, and for fifteen minutes gave us an impassioned appeal to send to them our best spiritual thought.

Several good mediums are on the ground, among them Mrs. Francis Ruddick for independent slate-writing and trumpet work, who has just arrived. Other good mediums are expected daily.

The management have also secured Mrs. E. S. Parker to give a course of physiological lectures.

Thimble parties, social hops, boating and fishing for recreation for every idle hour.

Mrs. Prior's lecture in the afternoon was a fine effort, and proves that her engagement will be a success.

"Death Defeated; or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young." By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A., Ph. D. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Young People, Franklin, Neb.

We feel so proud of the success which attended our efforts on Young People's Day that we wish to report it to your paper. Harry A. Davis was appointed to make up the programme for the day, and he together with the hearty co-operation of the young people of the camp succeeded in making the day a successful one in all particulars.

Franklin's pioneer medium, Chas H. Davis, was invited to conduct the Young People's Circle, which was held at 10:30 a. m. The attendance was good and the clairvoyant tests were excellent.

At 2:30 p. m., Mrs. Laura B. Payne, of Topeka, Kans., delivered an address to the young people. Mrs. Payne was at her best, and the inspiring sentences with which she encouraged all noble and praiseworthy ambitions which are embodied within the individuality of each of us, carried to all who listened the realization of the grave duties of life which are resting upon each of us even now, "while the shadows of life are sloping to the west." Mrs. Payne has by her honest labors and her upright and exemplary life become the favorite of the camp.

In the evening we had the pleasure of listening to a short address by Mr. Otho Shelburn of Holdridge, Neb., who spoke upon the subject, "Individuality and Force of Character vs. Imitation, as Factors in the Advancement of the Human race." Mr. Shelburn is a young man of moral courage and stamina such as make up the character of those who are born to rule.

Our young orator, Harry A. Davis, gave a fine lecture on the subject "Retrospection and Reminiscences." Harry is a citizen of Franklin, and a young man of whom any community may well feel proud. He is a thinker and has the moral courage to stand by his convictions, such as characterized the great and good of all ages. His address is good, his logic excellent and he gives promise of becoming one of the foremost orators of the day.

Each of the programmes was interspersed with music by the Reeves band. Declamations were given by Misses Alice Simpson, Lillie Muxlow and Altha Reeves. Mrs. Payne also favored us with several songs of her own composition.

Altogether the Young People's Day was a great success. The meetings were well attended and much enthusiasm was manifest. — C. H. SIMPSON.

THE DEPTH OF SACRIFICE.

The deepest depth of sacrifice were this:
To enter heaven and taste each cup of bliss,
Meet friends whose love had but diviner grown
Beneath the Central Sun that o'er them shone;
Then hear, above the songs of love and praise,
The awful shrieks that know no end of days,
And see, beyond the faces lit with prayer,
The hopeless eyes grown wild with their despair,
And hear, above the harps' celestial strains,
The harsh, discordant sound of clanking chains.
To gaze until the eyes with tears are blurred,
And all the mighty depths of pity stirred
Until the loving heart can bear no more,
And, rushing back, tells all the horrors o'er;
Begs Him who called these sinners into life
To save them all and end the awful strife;
To prove his love—rend prison walls in twain—
Put out the flames and break each cruel chain—
Blot out forevermore all pain and sin—
Throw wide the gates and let His children in.
To plead with tears of sympathetic pain;
Then hear the words, "Your prayers are all in vain.
'Tis written down, one way alone can save
The flame-tossed souls from their eternal grave;
But dreadful is the cost! The way is this:
If one among the blest resign her bliss
And take upon herself the sin and pain
Of all the tortured souls that sigh in vain,
I pledge my word to set the captives free,
And bless them all throughout eternity."
To hear these fateful words, and feel the face
Grow white with fear, or soft with pity's grace;
To feel the scales of thought now rise, now fall,
'Twixt love of self and sympathy for all.
Until at length the fearful strife be passed,
And pity's tears press down the scales at last;
And having conquered self, to rise and say:
"The sacrifice is made—I go to-day!"
Then bid farewell to friends, to joy to all,
And, like a loosened star, from heaven fall.

This were indeed the depth of sacrifice,
No soul could lower sink nor higher rise.
Yet what were Hades' depths to one whose love
Had led the lost to happiness above!
The very thought would make their joys her own—
Their very songs seem hers, but sweeter grown.
The loving heart that could so nobly dare
Would scorn the flames and build a heaven there
To prove what seems but sacrifice, to sense,
Is but the height of spirit recompense.

Chesnut, Ill. CALLA HARCOURT.

FOR a moment stop and consider. The Progressive Thinker is the one original dollar Spiritualist paper. It introduced a new era in the ranks of Spiritualism. Its success financially has been all that could be desired. Notwithstanding the rise in the price of print paper, it has still maintained its status as the only one dollar Spiritualist paper. Not only that, but it introduced the Divine Plan in its business with its subscribers—a portion of the profits of the office returning to them. Just think of the Seven Premium Books being sent out to our subscribers for $2.35. After paying the postage of these seven books, and the expense of mailing them, all that we have left is $1.50. You can readily see that we are furnishing them for less, by far, than the actual cost to us. We do this work in accordance with The Divine Plan, in order to assist in forming the nucleus of a library in every Spiritualist home. THE SPIRITUAL REVIEW, LONDON, ENG.

The phonograph is a materialization of the LAW OF PSYCHOMETRY.

Every sound and every scene leaves an enduring impression upon everything around it, and the highly sensitive psychometrist is able to see or feel with more or less accuracy the repetition of these scenes that have passed or reawaken the long silent sounds upon touching the article that bears their record, though unperceived to ordinary mortals. Thus to the born psychometrist the past is ever present, but not so with the future.

Here is the difference between psychometry and astrology. The future has left no record in the rocks or other articles, as its vibrations are not yet put in action, hence the psychometrist may read the past but the future to him is a blank.

The astrologer reads past events from aspects formed by the planets at various times, and as he can calculate to a day when those aspects will again occur at any future time, the future is as plain to him in the life of an individual as is the past, and if he is correct in the past it necessarily follows that he will be in the future, unless by due warning the individual avoids some of the evils that are threatened. But this he cannot always do, try as he will, and the astrologer's predictions are generally fulfilled.

THE TWO WORLDS, MANCHESTER, ENG.

We see clearly what physiological phenomena

but what of sleep itself, what of the human soul lately so active, now buried in a repose as still as death? Does the soul itself sleep? Does it, like the body, need repose? What happens to the mental and moral powers of the man when overcome by slumber? Is the mind liberated from the bonds of time and place, and can it visit then "worlds not realized?" What of the strange phenomena of our dreams, wherein ordinary and familiar secular events connected palpably with some of our daily experience are either blended with others not so connected or are turned upside down, and presented in an unmeaning fantasy which, nevertheless, seems at the time natural? Is our full normal consciousness there? Hardly, or the dream could not be so incongruous and impossible, yet a partial consciousness there must be, or we would not recall the dream in the morning.

And what of those strangest, but well-attested, of all dreams, in which the dreamer sees with vivid intensity an event in the future? If the sleeping form held the complete and normal consciousness with the brain functioning in the usual way, one would suppose the activity of the connected brain cells to be more than usually vigorous in the light of such an astounding experience; yet the very sleep in which the dream occurs depends, we are told, on the quiescence of these cells. Can it be possible, then, that in sleep whatever the physical accompaniments, the soul does become at least partly liberated, finding the cells for the time useless as functioning organs? In a trance is the liberation still more completely effected? And in death is the liberation final and complete? We know nothing, perhaps we never shall know, but to us the problem of sleep can never be solved on any more material ground. All the scientific problems lead up to the mysterious problems of spirit.

A GHASTLY EXPERIMENT.

The New York correspondent of the London Evening News telegraphs: The people of Lexington, Kentucky, are greatly excited over a remarkable hypnotic experiment which has just been performed there. The subject was Maud Matthews, a girl of 14, who was hypnotized by a local physician last Monday. She was then placed in an ordinary coffin and taken to Wood Lawn Park. The coffin was deposited in a grave previously prepared, three feet deep. The grave was filled in, and in order to make the affair realistic a grassy mound and gravestone were placed over it. The girl was yesterday disinterred in the presence of a large crowd, the coffin lifted out, the lid unscrewed, and the girl found in the same position as when she was buried, apparently sleeping. The physician stepped forward, spoke a few words in her ear, and she instantly awoke and greeted him with a cheery "Hello!" She rose from the coffin, joined her friends, and walked home.

LIGHT, LONDON, ENG.

In answer to "A Question and a Hypothesis," by "H. A. D.," I should like to be permitted to say a few words. Physical scientists have practically been brought to the conclusion that matter is not what it that no particle of matter has been found so small that it might not be further sub-divided; that all matter, however ponderous and solid it may appear, is constantly in a state of motion as regards its own atoms; that the Roentgen or X-Ray has demonstrated all this in a remarkable manner, causing, in its more perfected application through photography, animal tissue, for instance, to almost entirely disappear from view, and leaving the appearance of the bones as merely more or less dense shadows. What does all this evidence tend to prove other than that all physical manifestation is nothing but the eternal, and universal substance called of vibration? "Thought" is the power which manipulates and controls this ether; and no physical condition exists but which is the result of "Thought." In a modified and automatic manner this power is exercised by all sentient life; for example, animal and insect life, in cases too numerous and well known to need mentioning, demonstrate its power. The instinctive thought of the insect or animal to hide itself from its natural enemies, causes its shape or color to change with its changing habitat. The hare of the northern regions, for instance, the moment the ground is covered with its winter mantle of snow, feels itself a too palpable object of attraction to all its foes; and forthwith the power of thought commences to demonstrate itself by the changing of its fur of its surroundings. And, as regards man, we all know, and too well sometimes, what "thought" can do for us; how instantly the entire body is changed or injured by a thought of intense fear or anger. All this is what may be termed the automatic power of thought; and we are hereby brought to the consideration of its power in the hands of more perfected control up to the omnipotence of Divinity itself. Now comes, to my mind, the answer to the question of "H. A. D."

APPEARS TO OUR SENSES;

All matter is subject to laws appertaining to the plane of physical existence; therefore, under those laws, minerals would be disintegrated and resolved to their original element by the action of oxygen; and all vegetable and animal tissues, after what is called "death," are resolved by the action of yeast germs, producing first, fermentation; secondly, acidification; and finally, decomposition.

The power of "thought," however, is the universal law which is above and has control over physical laws; and in so far as man learns to live in accordance with that universal law, which is and not "bloodshed and slaughter," will the omnipotent power of thought-control be gradually manifested. As the writer, "H. A. D.," instances, Jesus and many others, from time to time, have possessed and demonstrated its powers.

Again, under the severest test conditions at various manifesting seances, the application of the power has been over and over again demonstrated by matter having been passed through matter; to do which it was necessary to temporarily dissolve the "vibrations" which composed the physical substances in question. Another instance is afforded by the experiments of Colonel de Rochas, as shown by the reproduction of the photographs issued some time since as a supplement to Light. The last illustration is that of the girl whilst in a deep mesmeric trance and under the influence of music. The head, hands, and part of the arms and resolved into vivid bands of light; which means that her vibrations, being no longer under her own thought control, were subject to the temporarily dominating power exercised upon her by the mesmerizer and combined in a wonderful manner with the effect of music. As soon, however, as that power and influence were removed, did her original vibrations, or in other words, normal appearances, re-establish themselves.

How to gain perfect thought-control should be the aim and religion of every human being; but it must never be forgotten that it is only possible in so far as the law of universal Love is absolutely obeyed. We, therefore, can form a tolerably fair idea of how near, or rather, how far we are from the enjoyment of such power, which is ours by inherent right, when we for a moment glance around upon the so-called civilized and religious portion of mankind of the present day.

One word further. It must not be imagined that the possesion of this power of perfect "thought-control" will or can subvert physical laws. Man must first learn to obey the laws of his physical being in their entirety, which of a necessity include the moral laws, before he will gain any degree of it much above the automatic power possessed, as before stated, by all sentient life.

Ashley Camp, O.

Ashley camp was opened Sunday, July 19, 1900, by the well-beloved speaker, Mattie E. Hull. A large crowd greeted her, and her remarks were appropriate and were appreciated by friends who had gathered from Cleveland, Columbus, Akron, Kenton, Ashley, Delaware, Galion and all nearby towns.

Moses Hull spoke to a large audience in the afternoon. He delivered one of his masterpices—subject, "Joan, the Medium." A heavy rainfall just at the conclusion of his address, threw everything into confusion and interrupted the services, and the tests were delayed, but when Mr. C. H. Figuers was presented to the audience he gave many tests which were all fully recognized.

Moses Hull spoke again in the evening, and in spite of the rain a large audience gathered in the commodious auditorium. Mr. Figuers followed with tests which were all recognized.

Mrs. Hull has organized a lyceum which is very large for this camp and which would be a credit to a larger camp. She also has a large class in voice culture.

There are more campers here than has been for a few years past. There is a project on foot which will lead to the erection of a new hotel and by next season we hope to have a good, roomy hotel, where visitors can be entertained.

The following mediums are present: Mr. and Mrs. Folsom, trumpet and materializing mediums; Mr. Chase, spirit photographer; Mrs. McCoy, materializing medium; Mr. D. Reynolds and C. H. Figuers, healers, and other mediums are expected. Mrs. C. H. Figuers of Cleveland, was prevented by sickness from attending. Everything points to a highly prosperous season.

C. H. FIGUERS.

Freeville, N. Y.

The second week of this camp has nearly passed and the management are more than pleased with the attendance at all the meetings. The force of mediums and speakers are Mrs. Von Kanzler, of Syracuse, who has proved herself a grand, good and true test medium from the platform. Mrs. Brewer is yet here; her forte is trance speaking and psychometric reading. Dr. J. M. Peebles will appear on Saturday, and we are all waiting for him, for we anticipate a feast of good things when he takes the platform.

The trustees are about forming a stock company and getting into shape to hold their property and improve it.

J. W. Dennis is here yet, and will abide here till the close, acting as chairman or lecturing and filling in as the occasion may require. A handy man to have around a camp. COR.

Total price to the trade	$10.75
Total price to our subscribers	$ 2.35
The Progressive Thinker one year and the seven premium books	$ 3.35

These seven books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art will be furnished to our subscribers alone for $2.35. But bear in mind that in order to secure these SEVEN valuable premium books for $2.35, the order must be accompanied with a year's subscription for The Progressive Thinker. The paper one year, $1.00; the seven books, $2.35. Total, $3.35.

The aggregate price of these seven books to the trade is $10.75. In order to assist in forming a Spiritual and Occult Library in every Spiritualist's home, these seven valuable books are furnished to our subscribers for $2.35, which is less by far than their actual cost. The authors make no charge for the vast amount of labor bestowed on these works, and which extended over many years. The publisher receives not a single cent for the great expense he was to, hundreds of dollars being paid out in putting them in type, and electrotyping the pages, and making them ready for the printer. That is why you are getting these intensely interesting books for almost nothing. We are only carrying out the Divine Plan, inaugurated only by The Progressive Thinker. There are thousands of Spiritualists who take no Spiritualist paper, and this inducement is offered, in order that they may commence forming at once a Spiritual and Occult Library, and thus keep in line with the advancing procession. The postage on the above books and expense of mailing is about 85 cents, hence you are almost receiving them as an absolute gift.

By taking 85 cents from $2.35, you will find that all we have left us for those seven books is only $1.50.

Postmasters.

We have been swindled out of a large amount of money by postmasters, who knowing a person desires The Progressive Thinker, sends his money, deducting a large commission. The Progressive Thinker is one dollar per year. The great rise in print paper renders it utterly impossible for us to give any commission to news agents or postmasters.

Bear in mind when making a remittance, that only one book, the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3, is furnished for 25 cents. You must not substitute any other of the premium books for that one.

Father Tom and the Pope,

Or a Night at the Vatican.

Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "putteen," and an Irish recipe for "convoundingthe same. "What's that?" says the Pope. "Put in the sperits first," says his Riv'rence; "and then put in the sugar; and remember, every dhrop of wather you put in after that, spoils the punch." "Glory be to God," says the Pope, not minding a word Father Tom was saying. "Glory be to God!" says he, smacking his lips. "I never known what dhrink was afore," says he. "It bates the Lachymalchrystal out ov the face," says he—"it's Neethar itself, it is, so it is!" says he, wiping his epistolical mouth wid the cuff of his coat. Paper, 25cts.; cloth, 50 cents. IMMORTALITY,

...OR...

FUTURE HOMES AND DWELLING PLACES.

BY DR. J. M. PEEBLES.

AN INVALUABLE WORK!

This admirable work contains what a hundred spirits, good and evil, say of their dwelling-places. Give us details—details and accurate delineations of life in the Spirit-world!—is the constant appeal of thoughtful minds. Death is approaching. Whither—oh, whither! Shall I know my friends beyond the tomb? Will they know me? What is their present condition, and what their occupations? In this volume the spirits, differing as they may, are allowed to speak for themselves. No man is better qualified than Dr. Peebles to place a work of this kind before the people. He treats of the Mysteries of Life; Doubts and Hopes; The Bridging of the River; Foregleams of the Future; Testimony of Saints; The Growth and Perfection of the Spiritual Body; Is it the Soul or Body that Sins?; Clothing in the Spirit-world; Our Little Ones in Heaven; The Personal Experiences of Aaron Knight; The Red Man's Testimony; Evil Spirits; Testimony of Physicians in Spirit-Life; The Homes of Apostles and Divines; The Friends and Shakers in Spirit-Life; Spirit Homes of Bruno and Others; Many Voices from the Spirit-Land. Many other matters are treated, too numerous to mention. Price, cloth, $1; paper 50 cents. Postage 12 cents. For sale at this office.

THE OCCULT POWER.

Manifestations of Occultism Are of Ancient Origin.

VIEWS OF TESLA, THE SCIENTIST —MODERN SPIRITUALISM AND SOME OF ITS INTERESTING PHASES — MATERIALIZATIONS, THEOSOPHY, MIND READING AND HYPNOTISM.

Early settlers of the Eastern American shores were impressed with what seemed to them the extraordinary performances of Indian wizards and conjurers. Cotton Mather and his cotemporaries were believers in witches, and interdicted intercourse with them; they were therefore quite ready to believe that the Indian Shamans were on familiar terms with the devil. Good Father DeSmet in one of his published letters writes of the "Religious Opinions of the Assiniboins," under date of July 28, 1854, in which he says: "The belief in ghosts is very profound and common in all these Western tribes. Indians have often told me, seriously, that they had met, seen and conversed with them, and that they may be heard almost every night in the place where the dead are buried. They say they spoke in a kind of whistling tone." In this connection it is important to note that in the materializing seances of Spiritualists (so-called) the apparitions that are moved to speak, converse in a whistling tone; here is an analogy that does not seem merely accidental, and it may apply a great deal. Adepts in Spiritualism also aver that during their seances they are warned of the approach of mysterious power by the passing of what seems to be a cold current of air over their hands. Those who have mingled and associated closely with Indians and have attended their secret pow-wows, say that a like experience attends them on such occasions; there is first a cold air current passes over their hands and face, and soon afterward the demonstrations of an unseen power are observed.

It has not been beneath the dignity of scientists of acknowledged reputation to investigate the phenomena of so-called Spiritualism and these investigators, such as Crookes, have encountered such experiences as to almost, if not quite, stagger belief and confuse them with the performances of alleged spirits. The testimony of so many thousands of individuals whose evidence, if given upon any other subject, would be accepted without question, cannot lightly be thrown aside; nor is such evidence ignored by the best thinkers of the present day. Forms representing human beings have apparently been born in the air, as it were, within a narrow cabinet, in the presence of numerous and critical observers and there dissolved in air. One may view these extraordinary scenes and be firmly convinced that they have been produced without the aid of any of the methods known to science or art, and yet disbelieve that they are representations of disembodied spirits. On the contrary, one may conjecture or suspect the affliction of a hitherto unknown law of nature and experience a desire to investigate.

A startling theory has been proclaimed that the occult manifestations are due to the presence of organized beings that are invisible and who yet have the power to manifest themselves and assume to be disembodied spirits.

There is a belief in East India among Theosophists that the performances are to be attributed to Diakka, or the spirits of vicious men and women who have been unable to free themselves from earthly influences and linger within the earth's sphere and amuse themselves by confusing and misleading those who give themselves up to Spiritualism. In connection with the theory of invisible organized beings, a recent statement made by an eminent scientist, Nikola Tesla, will be read with interest. In the June number of the "Century" is an article entitled "The Problem of Increasing Human Energy," Mr. Tesla contributes this paragraph: "We can conceive of organized beings living without nourishment, and deriving all the energy they need for the performance of their life functions from the ambient medium. In the crystal we have the clear evidence of the existence of a formative life principle, and though we cannot understand the life of a crystal, it is none the less a living being. There may be besides crystals other such individualized material systems of beings, perhaps of gaseous constitution, or composed of substance still more tenuous. In view of this possibility—we cannot apodictically deny the existence of organized beings on a planet merely because the conditions of the same are unsuitable for the existence of life as we conceive it. We cannot even with positive assurance, assert that some of them might not be present here, in this our world, in the very midst of us, for their constitution and life manifestation may be such that we are unable to perceive them."

Granted the probability suggested by the great scientist, and many of the occult manifestations of so-called Spiritualism might be readily explained. There are other ways in which these manifestations have already been accounted for. Spiritualists themselves have been imposed upon by bogus so-called mediums. There have been many instances in the city of Ottumwa where the tricks of charlatans have been exposed, some of them by believers in Spiritualism. There have, however, been professors who have appeared and went away with all the honor that could attach to a genuine medium. There have been those among us as citizens whose honest lives and characters were above the suspicion of fraud.

Recently there have been demonstrations of a hidden power that have created considerable inquiry and some investigation. It has been said of the medium that she can read messages without looking at them and that she identifies spirits and describes them to their friends in the audience. There are those, however, who were in the audience and witnessed the manifestations who claim that everything can be explained by the word "trickery," that the medium invariably follows a certain track or program, and that she insists on her own conditions in case of an investigation.

It is to be said that grave reasons for doubt arise when an invariable program is adhered to in occult manifestations; that is to say, when the medium seems to direct all the operations and controls the will of the audience in the way in which the exercises shall be conducted.

The observations in this article are not intended to endorse or disprove of any of the proceedings, nor do we pretend to offer a criticism on performances that seem to satisfy a majority of the audiences that attend these lectures or seances.

We understand that the medium conducts the performances as a form of religious exercise, and this is a right guaranteed by the laws of the land. This, however, pre-supposes that those who exercise the right are earnest and honest and do not attempt to deceive the public.—Ottumwa (Iowa) Democrat.

A STRANGE STORY.

A Will Brought to Light by a Spirit.

A CASE OF ABSORBING INTEREST APPEALED FROM CLINTON CIRCUIT COURT TO THE SUPREME TRIBUNAL.

Spiritualism is derided by most people and there are many who will scarcely listen to a discussion of its pretensions. Yet this belief, religion, cult, or whatever one may see fit to term it, despite the obloquy and abuse which have been heaped upon it, figures very largely in a case which will be tried within a few days in the State's most august and dignified tribunal—the Supreme Court of Indiana.

The case referred to originated in the Circuit Court at Frankfort, and was brought by the Frankfort Commandery, Knights Templars, against Mrs. Isaac Miller, for the purpose of recovering a portion of her first husband's large estate, alleged to have been bequeathed to the commandery by the decedent, in a will which was not brought to light until long after his death. The story of the lost will is as unique and entertaining as any to be found in the realms of fiction, yet its truth is established by the fact that it is gleaned from the cold, matter-of-fact pages of a legal transcript.

One of the early residents of the city of Frankfort, Ind., was Hiram M. Bradley, who possessed such business sagacity that he succeeded in amassing a fortune of something like $40,000. His family consisted of two boys, one girl and his wife, the latter dying of consumption some years before her liege lord. The children died before their mother. A woman was brought from Lafayette to nurse Mrs. Bradley during her last illness, and, as many such cases eventuate, Mr. Bradley was fatally smitten with the nurse's charms and married her, after having mourned his wife's death a becoming length of time. Bradley and his new life partner resided in Frankfort until the former's death.

HIS ABSORBING PASSION.

H. H. Bradley's absorbing passion in life was the study and practice of Freemasonry. He frequently declared to friends that he intended to leave a goodly portion of his fortune to the Masonic lodge of the city of his residence. In due time Mr. Bradley was "gathered to his fathers," and his widow paid to his memory the perfunctory show of respect which he had bestowed upon that of his former spouse. Like her deceased lord, Mrs. Bradley seemed afflicted with the "matrimonial mania," and, within a few months, was joined in the holy bonds of wedlock to a young man named Miller, also a resident of Frankfort. Availing themselves of the golden store so kindly left by Mr. Bradley, the pair betook themselves to California on a honeymoon tour. On their return to Frankfort they built a substantial residence in the very heart of the district which is held sacred to Frankfort's "four hundred." Life went with them as merrily as a marriage bell. Now comes the "rift in the lute" of their unalloyed happiness.

A little less than a year ago there appeared in the beautiful little city of Frankfort two members of the despised cult of Spiritualism. They were mediums, whose method of communication with departed spirits was through a trumpet. So thoroughly was their telephonic line with the underworld established that the tones of spirit voices traveling over it could be readily distinguished one from another, and friends above could not merely know they were talking to friends below, but they were also perfectly certain to whom they were talking. The mediums made a tremendous "hit" in Clinton county's capital. Two members of the legal profession—which is notoriously skeptical—became infatuated with the apparent reality of these conversations which were being daily carried on between the two worlds. These men, J. T. Hockman and Asa H. Bolden, took up with the new fad and were soon enjoying the pleasure of conversing with absent friends and relatives. Among others they talked with Mr. H. H. Bradley and his legal adviser, Judge Joseph C. Suit.

LEARNED OF THE WILL.

In a conversation with the spirit of Judge Suit, the supposed fact that his former client, Bradley, had died without leaving a will was touched upon. Immediately the ethereal jurist entered a positive denial of the statement. He said he had made a will for Mr. Bradley and that the document was duly attested by the signatures of John A. Petty and T. C. Parrish, well-known residents of Frankfort. The judge further declared that the missing document ought to be easily found among his papers in his office safe.

Little time was lost in prosecuting a vigorous search among the papers and effects of the late Judge Suit. Remarkable to relate the will was found and it had been signed by Messrs. Petty and Parrish, just as detailed in the spirit conversation carried on through the mediumistic trumpet. Mr. Petty, one of the witnesses to the will, had died in the meantime, but his signature was pronounced genuine by a large number of Frankfort citizens who had known him intimately during his lifetime. Mr. Parrish is still living and at once corroborated the terms of the document, at the same time throwing a great deal of light upon the will itself and upon the circumstances under which he was called upon to act as a witness. The will disposed of Mr. Bradley's estate in entire consonance with his oft-repeated determination while in the flesh. A widow's portion was left to Mrs. Bradley, $1,000 each to two of the decedent's brothers, while the balance was devised to the Frankfort Commandery, Knights Templar. Alexander Given and Col. David A. Coulter, the latter a member of the State Board of Monument Regents, were named as executors of the instrument.

The Knights Templars had their attention called to this miraculously restored will by Messrs Hockman and Bolden, who entered into a contract providing that they were to receive for their legal services one-half of whatever sum they might succeed in recovering for the commandery by a suit at law based upon the discovered will. The document was filed for probate and a suit immediately commenced to have it declared genuine and of full force and effect. After a lengthy and very exciting trial, Special Judge Rabb decided the will to be genuine. Upon that finding the widow of Mr. Bradley—now Mrs. Isaac Miller—gave the necessary bond and sued out an appeal from Judge Rabb's decision to the Supreme Court of the State.

MUCH SPECULATION.

Naturally, a great deal of speculation upon this remarkable and puzzling case has been indulged in by citizens of Frankfort, and, although the mediums and their trumpet have been industriously trained upon the spirit world, no answer has as yet been received to the all-important question, "Why did Judge Suit, who was at the head of the commandery, Knights Templars, when he drew up that will, and who was the attorney for Mrs. Bradley in settling up her deceased husband's estate, fail, during his lifetime, to make known the contents of this last testament of Mr. Bradley?" What reason could have influenced him more powerfully to suppress his knowledge of the instrument than his affection for his brother Knights and the cherished order of Masonry should prompt him to reveal it?

Since the appeal has been prosecuted from the judgment of the lower court, an effort has been made to compromise with the commandery by turning over to it a certain portion of the property of Mr. Bradley, but thus far the "pound of flesh" has been strictly demanded, and the outcome of this most remarkable and mysterious case is awaited with a very great deal of anxiety by Mr. and Mrs. Miller and the special beneficiaries named in the will recovered in such an uncanny manner, to say nothing of the citizens of Frankfort in general, who take a keen interest in the case.—Indianapolis (Ind.) Journal.

Spiritualism and Christianity.

Non-Christian and philosophical Spiritists must necessarily have strongly disapproved of all the stir and fuss that has recently been made about Mr. Hawels. An Anglican priest has admitted the facts of Spiritualism and endeavored to show they are quite in accordance with orthodox Christianity, no doubt just as much so as astronomy, geology, paleontology, anthropology, and evolution.

Well, if Christian apologists choose to reconcile their theories to our facts, they are quite at liberty to do so.

Let it, however, be distinctly understood there can be no meeting half-way, no compromising with truth, no mixing of facts and fancies, no trimming on our side to please the parsons.

The suggestion has been made in Light, London, that fifty pounds should be thrown away on the thankless, useless task of convincing the clerics of what they ought to know already. Such a proposition should not be seriously entertained for a moment, unless we are prepared to continue the undertaking and establish forthwith a fund for the conversion of the clergy, in which case it might be found that each convert would be an expensive luxury, and cost about as much as is required by the society for the conversion of the Jews before one proselyte is obtained—say, two or three thousand pounds.

It would be a disastrous mistake to endeavor to make Spiritism subservient to the powers that be, lay or ecclesiastickal, and would result in the withdrawal of the more rational, thoughtful and enlightened believers in spirit return, from the cause. Such people would certainly refuse altogether to have their names publicly associated with the movement. Spiritualism must not be converted into a religion, for it simply means the scientific investigation of psychical phenomena generally, and also the endeavor to obtain communications from those who are passed beyond this physical plane of being. In carrying out these experiments, we require no assistance from parson, priest, or initiate. In is not for Spiritualists to humbly sue, cap in hand, for recognition by the clerical party.

To act thus would be to deserve all the opprobrium and contempt in the future, that has been heaped upon us in the past. We who have left the churches are not to be lured back by clerical artifice. "Surely in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird." We no longer exist merely upon sufferance. All our facts have been admitted by independent investigators. Psychic research is recognized as a science. Spiritualism—that once despised, neglected, ugly duckling—has grown to be a veritable swan, far above the cackling geese who now would seek to claim relationship.

Island Lake Camp, Mich.

As our meetings have been ably written about, I thought I would send a few words concerning the social side of Island Lake camp life. Every cottage on or close by is occupied this year, and if we had more we could have let them. This gives the camp the benefit of a good attendance, mostly young people.

Mrs. Agnes Tuttle has a class for dancing, which meets twice a week, and is a decided success, as our esteemed friend, Dr. Peebles, can attest, he leading the grand march, and being one of the leaders in a quadrille.

Yesterday, August 1, being programmed children's day, the little ones were given the preference, winding up in the evening with the one act playlet, "Little Red Riding Hood." Considering that only five days were given to prepare this play, it certainly speaks well of the aptness of the little ones and patience of their instructor. Mrs. Tuttle's next effort with the little ones will be a one-act cantata entitled "A Gypsy's Luck."

To-day is Woman's Day, and Mrs. Goss, of Detroit, gives a "novelty party" to the ladies, of which I will write later, as it is a novelty to me yet, not knowing anything further than that the ladies are invited to bring "thimble and scissors," and refreshments served.

Mrs. E. C. Goss, the genial, light-hearted manager of the the hotel, paid a short visit to Detroit, returning to the lake Monday evening, when a delegation of ladies met her at the depot, headed by the "Ladies' Band," who escorted her to the steamer S. V. Hallock, all took passage to the opposite shore, the band playing several selections during the trip.

Our orchestra gives us many an hour's pleasure outside of duties at the auditorium, by singing and use of musical instruments in reception room at the hotel.

ERROR AND REASON.

Warfare of Philosophy and Sophistry.

Error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it.—Thomas Jefferson.

It seems to be a serious question in these days of fads, strange theories and delusive doctrines, whether or not it were better to encourage or repress the promulgation of indiscriminate opinions, now that printing and postage are so cheap and intercourse between individuals so general. Had we an infallible censor no doubt much that is written should be "blue pencilled," but the censor is liable to err as is the writer, and there is nothing left but for us to permit each one to say and write what he or she pleases, leaving the task of sifting out the grain from the chaff to the discriminating judgment of mankind.

But this method has its serious drawbacks because of the difficulty of discriminating the intolerable charlatans who insist on being heard and prominent in season and out of season. No diagnosis of this class of self-deluded victims within the power of those who have not graduated as experts can separate the one from the other, as the symptoms are not dissimilar, each appears to be earnest and honest, and anxious to bestow a benefit on mankind, the Christian zealot no more than the bigoted theorist who palms his specious theories as facts, posing as leaders and evangelists, and to the exclusion of reason and common sense.

Yet this is supposed to be a land where every individual enjoys the broadest liberty! The present growth of mind towards the dawn of light and liberal opinions is still shadowed by the insufferable religious faddists, and like noxious weeds overgrow and crowd out the flowers of reason and better judgment. The faddists, those who fancy themselves priestesses and hierophants, divine healers and God-appointed leaders, who set at naught reason, are intolerant of contradiction and prepared to vanquish both logic and reason. These propagandists who set at naught all laws of nature and established facts and attempt to force their peculiar beliefs and theories on others, have seldom more than very little religion of their own. They have a vague and shadowy conception of the duty they owe their fellow man, of justice, of charity, of benevolence, but a robust apprehension of the devil, who to them is a pulsing potential personality, full of flesh and blood, and fire of hate and malevolence. These blind leaders of the blind are the upas trees that blight and kill the flowers of love and happiness and make desolate our common world. Their songs are weird wails of discordant sounds and leave a chill and shadow on the sweet springs of human life. They are sincere and ignorantly self-assertive, and this makes it the more difficult to deal with them. The doctrines of the church that teaches the dogma of vicarious atonement and infinite punishment as necessary for finite sins, are still the corner-stone of their religion, but is fast fading away before the light of reason and modern research and leaving in its stead agnosticism and the brighter rays of Spiritualism. The controversy going on in the churches must lead to a better understanding of true religion, for grains of truth are sometimes found mixed up with the chaff in all controversies, but are not numerous enough to pay for the winnowing.

Science and reason, coupled with that twin sister intuition, are fast renovating the world of thought and removing the stumbling blocks to a clearer and better civilization, and the eye of faith sees no limit to progress or the revelations in nature's infinite storehouse. The one-time belief that the earth was flat, because the Christian theologian thought so, and those who dared to think otherwise aroused the ire and hatred of the self-contented conservatism, even to the rack and torture, has happily passed away and never to be revived again. The scientific discoveries to-day in the solar system and spectrum has played havoc with many preconceived ideas. Through its instrumentalities we can weigh the sun, the moon, the stars, and tell of what they are made. The spiritual matter, or rather spiritual attributes—motion or electricity—flung out of the sun is converted into light and heat of friction with our atmosphere, is now believed by many. The law of change is the law of growth and the obscure problems of nature will be gradually solved in the crucible of reason, and man come under the regimen and order of nature with a rhythmic harmony each in his own, as the growth of flowers.

When Spiritualists become more progressive and less aggressive, more practical and less speculative, more humanitarian and less sectarian, more philosophical and less theosophical, they will rise to the distinction of reformers, of which the world never saw, and become a moral power they have yet never reached, and the cause receive an impetus for growth and progress never dreamed of. We need a more humane policy, more charity and less conceit, an open confession that the wisest is groping towards the light, uncertain of the message received. A conforming to the principles of justice and right, and a warmer sympathy binding all together by the solvent of love.

COMPENSATION.

Weary toiler, all your life time slaving
Without rest; for bread, bent, wrinkled, old,
Yet you smile. "Why, sir, I'm proper happy,
I've a cabin home, and wife as good as gold."

Poor, frail, shut-in, suffering mortal,
Why within your hollow eyes that light?
"Thoughts so beautiful and truths so glorious God gives me unto the world to write."

Dirty beggar, ragged, ignorant and homeless
Who sees in a dime a mine of wealth,
Why do you look cheerful? "Sure, now, Mister,
I've no care or worry, and the best of health."

Lonely, childless, helpless, aged widow,
Death has taken all you know and love,
Yet you seem content. "I am, for knowing
I shall soon meet all my dear ones up above."

Thus the kindly law of compensation
Balances the sum of human joys and woes,
Giving to the poorest a contentment
Fortune's pampered favorite never knows.

GOOD MEDICINE.

The Humor of Spiritualism.

A merry heart doeth good like a medicine.—Solomon.

Foolish jesting which is not convenient.—Paul.

Life is a solemn thing—to an ass.—Bill Nye.

A merry heart goes all the day
A sad tires in a mile.—Shakspeare.

Blessed are those who weep now; for they shall laugh.—Anon.

Where I was raised the lusty highlanders in the days of their strength were fond of dancing. When the youthful vigor departed and they could no longer "shake de hoof" with distinction, some of them were easily persuaded that dancing was a sin. Religion became associated in the juvenile mind with intolerance and few children loved to see the minister or a very zealous church-member approach. Deacon McTavish had a son who "was little better than one of the wicked," and who would be very sleepy on the night when there was a dance in the community. He would retire early, jump out of the window and away to the dance. Like all intelligent beings protesting against unnatural restraint, he was tempted to excess in asserting his rights and would show you "dancing as was dancing." It came to the deacon's knowledge. One morning he came in with a birch rod.

"So you went to the frolic last night. Haven't I told you dancing was a sin?"

"But, father, the Bible says there is a time to dance."

"Yes, my boy, but you took the wrong time. Now is the time for you to dance," and he proceeded to apply the birch.

There is no better indication of advanced mentality than appreciation of that venomless humor that announces the absence of both hate and fear. The Bible accords with all human experience in saying there is a time to laugh, and it is largely a question of selecting the proper time. Subject to minor qualifications the right time is when you feel that way. Discretion is the better part of valor, and it is not always safe, but to judge of this is the prerogative of each.

Again the subject matter of the laugh is to be considered. There is no inflexible dividing line between the laugh which doeth good like a medicine and the foolish jesting which is not convenient. I remember a "fearful" laugh convulsing a Sunday school by good Deacon McQuarrie asking an overgrown boy who was not too bright, a leading question. It was very like this one: "Why would not Joseph sleep with Potiphar's wife?"

"Because he was not sleepy."

I once induced a man to investigate spiritual phenomena. He was easily convinced, but when I alluded to some innocent pleasantries the orthodox element in his blood took fire and he never had the same regard for me afterwards. He thought it flippant and spoke of there being no buffoonery in the Spiritualism of Jesus. I pointed out that the great objection of the "unco guid" to Jesus in his day was because of undignified behavior, and that the sense of humor was not developed in that day or in his biographers.

Spirits explain how this sanctimoniousness is one of the most repelling traits in a sensitive. So long as familiarity does not degenerate into contempt it is the right because the natural way for one brother to receive or approach a brother or even the father. Any being that demands a forfeiture of natural manhood on entering his presence after invitation, or who is gratified with that reverence which is equivalent to self-abasement or groveling servility, is one whose honor rests on quicksands and who feels the tremors that foretell his own humiliation.

There was no man objected to on the ground of clownishness and buffoonery, like Lincoln. But his name and personality survives in the hearts of mankind and the years add lustre to his fame and fresh laurels to his character. But where are the people who despised this clown. Echo answers where.

There is an objectionable wit which is distinguished by ill nature and lack of sympathy. Without this it is solely a question of expediency whether to be serious or humorous—or mixed: In any case you cannot attack error without incurring the charge of wantonly offending the finer instincts of those who champion that error. As the French say, "You can have no omelette without breaking eggs." I have no doubt Bill Nye's sermon on the text from Old Mother Hubbard has been influential in making preachers adopt a style which calls for some rational thought, instead of the "hand-me-down" sermon of old.

VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY.

Lectures by the Swami Vivekananda, on Raja Yoga; or Conquering the Internal Nature, and other subjects; also, Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms, with commentaries and a copious glossary of Sanskrit terms. Revised and enlarged, 12mo., Cloth; $1.50. Raja Yoga is an ancient system of Indian Philosophy, and one of the four chief methods that the Vedanta Philosophy offers to obtain freedom and perfection. Swami Vivekananda became a familiar figure in several American cities during the three years following the Parliament of Religions at Chicago; he was cordially received in America, where the breadth and depth of his teachings were soon recognized. His teachings are universal in their application. The book is cheap at $1.50. For sale at this office.

Woman, Church and State.

A Historical Account of the Status of Woman Through the Christian Ages, with Reminiscences of the Matriarchate.

BY MATILDA JOSLYN GAGE.

*THE AMOUNT OF VALUABLE IN-*formation succinctly and clearly stated in this volume of 554 pages is amazing. The title, as above given, fails to convey an idea of the fulness and completeness with which the subjects are treated. The Matriarchate, or Mother-rule, is the theme of the first chapter, in which much lore, quaint, queer and curious, is brought to view in elucidation of the subject. This is followed by chapters on Celibacy, Canon Law, Marquette, Witchcraft, Wives, Polygamy, Woman and Work, The Church of To-day, Past, Present, Future; and there is not a chapter in the book that is not handled in a masterly manner, and that for quantity and quality of information, is not worth the full price of the volume. It is packed with knowledge well-arranged, and intensely interesting from beginning to end. No one can possibly regret buying it; it is a valuable addition to the library of any free and truth-loving mind.

Single copy..... 5 cts

REMITTANCES.

Remit by Postoffice Money Order, Registered Letter, or draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so don't send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Direct all letters to J. R. Francis, No. 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

CLUBS! IMPORTANT SUGGESTION!

As there are thousands who will at first venture only twenty-five cents for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER thirteen weeks, we would suggest to those who receive a sample copy, to solicit several others to unite with them, and thus be able to remit from $1 to $3, or even more than the latter sum. A large number of little amounts will make a large sum total, and thus extend the field of our labor and usefulness. The same suggestion will apply in all cases of renewal of subscriptions—solicit others to aid in the good work. You will experience no difficulty whatever in inducing Spiritualists to subscribe for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, for not one of them can afford to be without the valuable information imparted therein each week, and at the price of only about two cents per week.

A Bountiful Harvest for 25 Cents.

Do you want a more bountiful harvest than we can give you for 25 cents? Just pause and think for a moment what an intellectual feast that small investment will furnish you. The subscription price of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER thirteen weeks is only twenty-five cents! For that amount you obtain one hundred and four pages of solid, substantial, soul-elevating and mind-refreshing reading matter, equivalent to a medium-sized book!

TAKE NOTICE!

☞ At expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly, write to us, and errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it is then sent, or the change cannot be made.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The Progressive Thinker is furnished in the United States at $1.00 per year, the postage thereon being but nominal, but when it is sent to foreign countries we are compelled to charge 50 cents extra, making the yearly subscription $1.50. Please bear that in mind.

SATURDAY, ANGUST 11, 1900.

About the Size of It.

A Presbyterian organ has made a grand discovery, and if it would act in harmony therewith good would follow. It says:

"The chief reason why people do not go to church is because they have no interest in Christ or the life to come. People would rather go to see Jesus perform one miracle than to save ten thousand souls. Not only did the contemporaries of Paul's day fail to attract toward him, but they drove him out of their cities. Dress it in whatever robes you will, religion has no attractions for the irreligious. There have been times when, and there are yet places where the pressure of public opinion forces unspiritual persons to attend church, but there never was a time when, and there will never be a place where, such persons may be expected to attend of their own will."

Jesus taught his followers to take no thought for the morrow. The consequence was, his disciples were beggars and subsisted on the toil of others. Tramps are not popular in this age, so the boss tramp has fallen into disfavor. And "the life to come," consisting of eternally glorifying the occupant of a throne, with no intellectual employment, is not very attractive to the educated.

The feats of the prestidigitator are miracles to the ignorant; but they cease to be such to those who know Nature never changes its course at the caprice of any man. Romancers lie, true science never.

Yes, there were persons too intellectual in Paul's day to welcome his insane visions following a sunstroke as gospel truths, and as they saw him leading the rabble away from productive labor into mendicancy, so they treated him as the police in prosperous cities of to-day are in the habit of doing to Mormon elders, and drove him out of town.

True, religion has no attraction for those who know the falsity of its teachers. People may attend church under the pressure of public opinion, but they have no respect for its foibles. Though dragooned to listen to diatribes against the Devil and his cheerless abode, with plaudits for an earth-born God, in private they ridicule the dream and the dreamers, and have no respect for their shallow faith.

Hypothetical.

Suppose, if such a preposterous idea is supposable, that instead of Christian missionaries to China it had been Spiritualists, or Agnostics, or in fact any faith other than Christian, as Jew or Mohammedan, is any one so foolish as to believe the American government, as now administered, would trouble itself to send its fleets, its armies, and its munitions of war for the protection of its heretical subjects? Would not the powers that be declare in a moment: "If the propagandists of such sentiments engage in the task of trying to convert distant people to their views they must do so at their own peril? This government was not founded in the interest of any religion, but to advance the material prosperity of the entire population."

But this self-evident postulate does not seem to apply when the dominant religion is antagonized.

A few years ago we were threatened with a Turkish war. In a revolt of Christians against the constituted authority some missionary property was destroyed belonging to foreigners. Immediately the whole Christian world was in a tumult, and wanted their respective governments to suppress the Turk and wipe his country off the map of nations. The clergy were the loudest in condemning officials, some even demanding the impeachment of the national executive for not blockading Turkish ports and making reprisals.

Well, it does make a difference whose ox is gored, as we see in many relations of life, but eternal justice may not make the same distinction as does the sectarian who fancies all the world was made for his special pleasure.

Woman Is Victor There.

There are regions, says an exchange, where women rule and they seem to do so very satisfactorily. Among the Nalars, on the Malabar coast of India, woman's power is autocratic and absolute. There husbands are indeed "of no importance," being mere incidents in the social organization, and are won and divorced at will. Woman frames and administers the laws under which man lives, and through her is the descent of property, which he may earn, but not own. The rice field is the scene of his activity, and if he shows himself to be industrious and frugal and capable of maintaining a family some Nalar maid will ask him to become her husband.

Getting at the Facts.

It is very just to mention the fact that the Baptists, as a denomination, have always favored the divorce of church and state. They experienced the persecuting spirit of the other evangelical churches in the early settlement of New England, and from this fact, perhaps, they have been more tolerant of others than any other orthodox denomination. Adoniram Judson, their first missionary to Burmah, throughout his long service, so conducted himself as to gain the confidence and esteem of those among whom he labored.

Rev. R. S. McArthur, in the Calvary pulpit of Chicago, on the 22d ult., with the text, "Why do the Heathen Rage?" was so just in regard to our Chinese troubles, we are anxious to place him on record by copying a few extracts from that discourse. He said, after declaring those who confine themselves to preaching the gospel, and stand aloof from civil functions as in no way responsible for these revolts, but—

"Those missionaries who combine civil authority with their religious instruction are partly responsible for the condition of things in China. More than 300 years ago in Japan the Roman church persecuted the Japanese who refused to accept their doctrine. At this moment similar things are at work in China. Bishops of theirs have titles which excite the jealousy of the Chinese.

"Some missionaries actually sit as justices in civil cases and impose fines and other temporal penalties. They surround themselves with all the dignity of kingly rulers, and the native heathen do not distinguish between the ecclesiastical and civil rule.

"The result is an anti-foreign feeling. An anti-foreign spirit has been developed, and no one can help but see that the first attack is made upon the missionaries who have assumed to exercise civil power.

"I was in China five years ago this month, and many of the conditions I examined on the spot. I also have the testimony of missionaries on the ground at this moment. They declare the bishops secure the release of their converts when brought before the courts, and that the authority of the French consul is often invoked to emphasize the demands of the priests and bishops.

"The same thing is going on in the Philippines at the present time. These things lead to uprisings. The war with Japan put an end, for the time being, to a contemplated uprising of Boxers. Only missionaries who confine themselves strictly to their religious duties can do any good. Those who do not so confine themselves only provoke uprisings on the part of the jealous Asiatic."

Agreeing with this position of Rev. McArthur is a statement of Rev. Dr. Halsey, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, who on the same day declared:

"The missionary has had his share in fomenting this trouble and must bear his share of the blame. Some of the missionaries have been politicians as well as Christians, and their grasping, selfish attitude has helped to bring about the present condition.

"The whole Roman Catholic propaganda is political as well as religious. This has been prominently exemplified only recently in the Philippines, where all the influence of that great church of ages was used for self-aggrandizement. So it is in Peru, Chile, and Brazil. There missions are simply monasteries of the middle ages over again.

"In China the Roman Catholics have suffered first because they meddled with Chinese politics. Minister Wu said: 'You would not tolerate a band of Chinese missionaries coming to New York and preaching Confucianism and meddling with the government.'"

Bounteous Earth.

How is this, from that old Pagan, Pliny, the Naturalist, who was a very voluminous author near 1900 years ago, and perished in the volcanic eruption of Vesuvius, in the year 70 when Pompeii was buried in ashes. He knew nothing about the Christian religion; but he thought and wrote like a modern philosopher, though he was clearly agnostic:

"The waters deluge man with rain, oppress him with hail and drown him with inundations; the air rushes in storms, prepares the tempest and lights up the volcano, but the Earth, gentle and indulgent, ever subservient to the wants of man, spreads his walk with flowers and his table with plenty, returns with interest every good committed to her care, and although she produces the poison she still supplies the antidote; though constantly teased more to furnish the luxuries of man than his necessities, yet, even to the last, she continues her kind indulgence, and when life is over she piously covers his remains in her bosom."

Pliny's idea of God fits into present thought. He said:

"God is what Nature is. God cannot do what Nature cannot do. He cannot kill himself, nor make mortals immortal, nor raise the dead to life, nor cause one who has lived never to have lived at all, or make twice ten anything else than twenty."

Had Pliny lived to-day, and been in possession of modern facts, he would have been a very zealous Spiritualist.

Who Is the Barbarian?

Said Emperor William on the 28th ult., addressing a body of his troops just starting for China:

"If you close with the enemy, remember this: Spare nobody. Make no prisoners. Use your weapons so that for a thousand years hence no Chinaman will dare look askance at any German. Open the way for civilization once for all."

That may be the Christian way of acting, but, verily, it has the ring of the savage, as related in Numbers 31:17, 18, who credits the direction to "the Lord":

"Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him; but all the women children that have not known man keep alive for yourselves."

A little later came the command, which was fully executed according to the divine word:

"So Joshua smote all the country of the hills, and of the south, and of the vale, and of the springs, and all their kings; he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed, as the Lord God commanded."—Josh. 10:40.

It was from such passages in the "blessed Bible" Kaiser William drew his inspiration to "spare nobody."

Tears for the Man.

Humanity justly weeps as it reads of the barbarities cruelly inflicted on the objects of Chinese hate who unwisely intruded themselves on a people who had no sympathy for their teaching. The tear is for the man or the woman, not for the propagandist of a creed or a system of religion which of itself is only the reflection of an ignorant and rugged age, no way advanced beyond that of the China of to-day.

We shudder at the thought of missionaries being stripped of their clothing, chained to stakes, jabbed by sharp-pointed sticks, slowly strangled, melted lead poured down their throats, the body writhing in agony, then cut to pieces with knives, the parts consigned to the flames. We are half inclined to deny relationship as human beings with such brutal assassins. But we must not forget this action is the product of a species of insanity paralleled by burning the negro on a Southern plantation for some real or imagined wrong.

The Chinese savageism is no greater than that practiced by Christians on other Christians with slightly varied views during the latter part of the Middle Ages whose innumerable instruments of torture are still preserved in the great museums.

The unfortunate and learned Hypatia, a philosopher and a teacher of mathematics, torn from her chariot on the way to her academy in which she taught, stripped of her clothing, pounded by clubs, murdered, the flesh scraped from her bones by Christian monks, acting under direction of Bishop Cyril, now canonized a saint, always rises before us as we think of the orgies of human devils on their defenceless victims.

We have no apology for Chinese lunatics any more than for Christians acting under similar impulse. Our hatred is for the act and the low grade of civilization which will tolerate such aggressions. We find the germ of such crimes against the race in all the prevailing religions, liable to lead to scenes of slaughter at any moment. While they exist violence and bloodshed will continue daily occurrences.

Savage man invented his gods, and fashioned them in wood and stone. He clothed them with the attributes of the tyrant and the oppressor. These were changed in process of ages to a huge man, inhabitant of a great city just above the clouds; but he is still governed by the same passions, the same loves and hates and cruelties which characterized the earliest conceptions of a god.

When Pagan and Christian shall rise above the childhood notions of a monster being, representing the vices and passions of his race, and shall formulate a creed in strict harmony with the inculcations of Nature, then wars, and violence, and bloodshed will cease. The Gods are only the reflection of the people who worship them, jealous, revengeful, cruel, tyrannical, repentant, as are their makers; merciful, kind and loving as civilization advances. Civilize the world and a barbarian God will give place to a civilized one. Then wars will cease and the nations of the earth can thereafter dwell together in peace and harmony.

Danger from Priests.

From this until November the party press will limit its labors to the supreme task of convincing the dear people that on the election of its candidate for the Presidency depends the safety of the Republic; that all other questions should be subordinated to assuring the defeat of the opposition candidate, and the elevation of its own. An old fellow at our elbow, very zealous in 1840 for the election of "Tippecanoe and Tyler, too," was told by his employer:

"Young man, you have a greater interest in, and may be more affected by the election of a constable than in the election of a President."

Sixty years of subsequent observation has convinced him his then aged friend was correct. Parties come and go, each in turn playing its part in the drama of life, each zealous to convince the voter that his party is right, and all other parties are wrong; but the government continues to move forward and will regardless of the party in power. Danger comes from the intriguing, hypocritical and demagogical clergy, ever cunningly striving to undermine the foundations of a free government, by substituting a theocracy, with themselves as special agents, in place of that established by the people.

By Letter from India.

In a private letter from J. A. Balfour, Esq., Bombay, India, of date June 23, he writes:

"We are having a very hot time here during the last few days. The long expected monsoons were much delayed. We generally have the first burst of the rain for the season from the 10th to the 12th of June; but have had nothing to date. It is hoped next month will make up for the want of rain this month, else what a fearful time we shall have.

"As you know, the famine is simply terrible throughout India. Thousands are dying. About 80 per cent of the cattle have been destroyed for want of food and water—simply died. It will take years to repair the damage already done by the pestilence.

"And as usual cholera has been getting in its deadly work. Its ravages are horrible among the famine-stricken men, women and children—poor, emaciated, tottering skeletons, dropping and dying along the roadsides, in spite of all the efforts of the government to help them. Their corpses are frequently eaten by wild beasts.

"The mortality at Godbra (?) when the cholera was at its height, was terrible—1,500 bodies were burned on one "work" in four days! Think of that, at one station, alone!

"I do hope we shall have a good, rainy season this year. It will mean life to millions of poor humanity."

Later advices by cablegram show 6,281,000 sufferers are now on the relief list, and that rain has fallen in some districts, but is greatly needed in others.—Editor.

It Is the Old Method Revived.

Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, in a late pamphlet entitled "Guarding the Cross with Krupp Guns," is very severe against what he claims is a new policy for spreading Christianity. In this the Elder is mistaken. It is the old policy revived. All the countries of Europe outside of Rome were subordinatel to the dictation of the Pope by warlike methods. Medieval history takes us behind the scenes and presents a frightful view of the triumphs of the cross in its armed aggressions on older religions which it designated as Pagan.

An Angel of Light—Dire Predictions.

The death of Charlotte Mulligan, a philanthropic woman of Buffalo, says the Chicago Tribune, was recently announced. Though comparatively unknown to public fame her death will be mourned by thousands whom she had helped. For many years Miss Mulligan had worked among criminals, discharged convicts, tramps, and disreputable men of various kinds with extraordinary success. She was a woman of rare executive ability and possessed remarkable capacity for controlling and governing persons belonging to these classes. She began her philanthropic career in her seventeenth year by conducting a Sunday school for boys, but of late years devoted her time to men of the class above described, for whom she founded a home, at first upon a small scale, but gradually enlarging it until it became one of the largest charitable institutions in Buffalo, and known all over the country among "the submerged tenth." It is said that she has helped over 100,000 homeless and disreputable men, reforming many of them and helping to give them a start in the world. They are known as "Miss Mulligan's men," and are proud of the appellation. Her work has not been limited to charity. For twenty years she had been the musical critic of the Buffalo Courier and exercised a wide influence upon art as well as music. She also took a strong interest in the advancement of woman and founded the Twentieth Century Club in her city. But the work of her life in which she was most interested was the rescue of the unfortunates and criminals among men, and in this noble work she was wonderfully successful, while shrinking from publicity and deprecating the world's applause. Death has ended her philanthropic work and her place will be hard to fill, for the combination of qualities which she brought to that work is rare. Surely upon her gravestone should be inscribed, "She hath done what she could."

We have always claimed that it is only by humanitarian work that one can approach closely to the angel world. Belief in this or that cult or sect sinks into utter insignificance when compared with the noble work of Charlotte Mulligan. It seems pitiable to see so much preaching, so much forensic effort, and so much expenditure of capital to promote this or that cult or sect, while there is so little effort in the direction of humanitarian work. It is far better to raise one sinful soul into the light than it is to give birth to a new sect, a "new God," or a "new savior." Only by this way can the world be redeemed and the masses placed on a higher plane. There is work to do in order to save our country from the ruinous prophecy made by Lord Macaulay in 1857. When writing to Henry S. Randall he said:

"You are surprised to learn that I have not a high opinion of Mr. Jefferson, and I am surprised at your surprise. I am certain that I never wrote a line, and that I never in Parliament, in conversation or even on the hustings—a place where it is the fashion to court the populace—uttered a word indicating an opinion that the supreme authority in a state ought to be intrusted to the majority of citizens told by the head; in other words, to the poorest and most ignorant part of society. I have long been convinced that institutions purely democratic must sooner or later, destroy liberty or civilization or both. * * *

"You may think that your country enjoys an exemption from these evils. I will frankly own to you that I am of a very different opinion. Your fate I believe to be settled, though it is deferred by a physical cause. As long as you have a boundless extent of fertile and unoccupied land your laboring population will be far more at ease than the laboring population of the Old World, and while that is the case, the Jefferson politics may continue to exist without causing any fatal calamity. But the time will come when New England will be as thickly populated as old England. Wages will be as low and will fluctuate as much with you as with us. You will have your Manchesters and Birminghams, and in those Manchesters and Birminghams hundreds of thousands of artisans will assuredly be sometimes out of work. Then your institutions will be fairly brought to the test. Distress everywhere makes the laborer mutinous and discontented, and inclines him to listen with eagerness to agitators who tell him that it is a monstrous iniquity that one man should have a million while another cannot get a full meal. In bad years there is plenty of grumbling here, and sometimes a little rioting. But it matters little. For here the sufferers are not the rulers. The supreme power is in the hands of a class, numerous indeed, but select; of an educated class which is and knows itself to be deeply interested in the security of property and maintenance of order. Accordingly the malcontents are firmly yet gently restrained. The bad time is not over without robbing the wealthy to relieve the indigent. The springs of national prosperity soon begin to flow again; work is plenty, wages rise, and all is tranquillity and cheerfulness.

"I have seen England pass three or four times through such critical seasons as I have described. Through such seasons the United States will have to pass in the course of the next century, if not in this. How will you pass through them? I heartily wish you a good deliverance. But my reason and my wishes are at war, and I cannot help foreboding the worst.

"It is quite plain that your Government will never be able to restrain a distressed and discontented majority. For with you the majority is the Government, and has the rich, who are always a minority, absolutely at its mercy. The day will come when, in the state of New York, a multitude of people, none of whom has had more than half a breakfast, or expects to have more than half a dinner, will choose a legislature. Is it possible to doubt what sort of a legislature will be chosen? On one side is a statesman teaching patience, respect for vested rights, strict observance of public faith. On the other is a demagogue ranting about tyranny of capitalists and usurists, and asking why anybody should be permitted to drink champagne and to ride in a carriage while thousands of honest folks are in want of necessaries. Which of the two candidates is likely to be preferred by a workingman who hears his children cry for more bread?

"I seriously apprehend that you will in some such season of adversity as I have described do things which will prevent prosperity from returning; that you will act like people who should in a year of scarcity devour all the seed corn, and thus make the next a year not of scarcity, but of absolute famine. There will be, I fear, spoliation. The spoliation will increase the distress. The distress will produce fresh spoliation. There is nothing to stop you. Your Constitution is all sail and no anchor.

"As I said before, when a society has entered on this downward progress, either civilization or liberty must perish. Either some Caesar or Napoleon will seize the reins of government with a strong hand or your Republic will be as fearfully plundered and laid waste by barbarians in the twentieth century as the Roman Empire was in the fifth, with this difference, that the Huns and Vandals who ravaged the Roman Empire came from without, and that your Huns and Vandals will have engendered within your own country by your own institutions."

This direful prophecy can only be prevented of fulfillment by raising the masses to a higher plane, while each one blessed with a goodly share of this world's goods engages in humanitarian work, to the full extent of his means.

California a Graveyard of Spiritual Papers.

The Medium, of Los Angeles, in the issue of June 15, announces its suspension for an indefinite period, to enable the editors, Mr. and Mrs. Carlson, to recuperate their health. They are suffering from nervous prostration, consequent upon over-exertion and insufficient material support. This is the case with too many who are laboring for the good of humanity. We hope that our neighbors will resume the publication of their excellent periodical in the near future, under more favorable circumstances.—Religio Philosophical Journal.

We deeply regret that the Medium has been compelled to suspend publication; but as we have said before, California has proved a veritable graveyard for Spiritualist papers. The list of those which have expired in that state is far too long to be enumerated in our columns. There have been several first-class papers devoted to Spiritualism started in California, notably the Carrier Dove and Golden Gate. They could not be sustained, and went calmly down to the graveyard where many other like enterprises had preceded them. Ernest S. Green widely announced his effort in the realm of the occult and spiritual, yet his paper passed away prematurely, proving a dismal failure.

All these multifarious efforts were commendable in so far as an ardent desire existed to promote the cause of Spiritualism; but that alone is insufficient to sustain a Spiritualist paper. The angels, advanced spirits, can do but little to sustain an enterprise of any kind on the material side of life; yet we venture to say that spirit messages have had much to do in starting so many papers in California, which have met with an untimely death. It is a fact patent to every close observer, that it is difficult to sustain first-class reformatory papers in California. The Rocky mountains seem to shut them out from the East, and there they cannot get any foothold. While these barriers yield to Eastern publications which flood the Pacific coast, there is absolutely but a very little returning current. However good an occult or Spiritualistic publication in California may be it can get no foothold in the East, hence its support must be meager. It is needless to conceal facts that experience has taught Spiritualists in California. No Spiritualist paper can be a success there financially.

Startling Phenomena.

Music Without Instruments, and Independent Messages Given—The Dawn of a New Era.

To the Editor:—Enclosed you will find a copy of one of the many messages given independently through the mediumship of Mr. Oscar Ward, the young man mentioned in my former letter, who gave his consent very reluctantly, he does not care to be brought into notice. But as I am aware that he is one of the finest mediums in the country, I and a few others are urging him to make a practice of his gift. These messages are wholly the work of the spirits and are dropped in his presence. Music without instruments that can be heard as far as a piano, and voices that talk from one to two hours; in fact every known phase of mediumship has been improved upon in this young man. Spiritualists should investigate this medium's rare power, as I predict his time will be in demand ere long. He depends upon his labor for a living, and is not master of his own time, and can rarely be induced to hold a seance. The voices have been heard in the light with the medium in full view, and the seances for music take place in a perfectly bare room with sealed doors and windows locked. There is not the slightest chance for fraud, and messages are given in the departed one's familiar hand-writing. Sealed questions are also answered with seals unbroken, answers being inside the sealed envelope. Some of these men of science might do well to look into these manifestations. The guides say there is no limit to the manifestations that will occur when the development is where they desire to bring it. At times several voices speak at once. Music, voices, raps, bell-ringing and table-moving have all occurred at the same time. People here are not aware of the wonderful things that are occurring in their midst. A message on the spirit body is very instructive and places the description in such plain terms that all may understand who read. Poems of a beautiful nature are also among the messages. We few Spiritualists here are satisfied that we have the straightest way of communing with the other world that has yet been found. MRS. A. M. PENNEFEATHER.

THE BEAUTY OF SPIRIT RELIGION.

Spiritualism is so many-sided in its nature as to make the most attractive and truly beautiful religion that ever was vouchsafed to man. It stands for everything that is pure, good, and true in life; and emphasizes in particular the necessity of self-improvement in all departments of man's nature. Its teachings may be misapplied by the thoughtless, while the evil-minded may debase the liberty it gives them to license for their acts, yet in itself its inherent principles of right, of justice, of integrity, of purity and nobility of purpose, make it stand forth as preeminently the most beautiful religious truth the world has ever known. It has always been a factor in the religious experiences of the race, and its phenomena have been at the root of every expression of religion the world has ever known. Only fifty-two years in its modern expression, yet it has signally blessed humanity among all nations of the earth.

It has proved that death is but change, and that conscious life goes on and on in the world of souls, unfolding as does the leaf from the bud, until it is face to face with truth and ready to do its prefect work. It has dried the tears of the mourners and soothed the pain of the afflicted. It has opened the gates of light and love that sorrowing mortals may behold the glories of the life elysian into which their dear ones have graduated. It has given the balm of healing to those who were without hope, and has taught mankind that the ills of the body can be conquered by the power of the soul. It has verily given all mankind joy for sorrow, pleasure for pain, life for death. It has made even the heaviest burdens of earth-life endurable under the revelations it has brought of that life in spirit spheres. It has taught the children of men that earth-life is a part of eternity, and that they should do their best here in order to fit themselves for progression's pathway after crossing the divide that man calls death. It also shows that the Eternal Now is of equal value with the Eternal Hereafter, for unless the former is properly lived, man's condition in the latter becomes most pitiable.

Spiritualism lays great emphasis upon the laws of consequences. It says gently yet firmly that there is no forgiveness for sin, save such as is worked out by each individual in the bitterness of mental anguish and despairing grief. Its all-compelling must forever admonish its adherents to be on their guard to find every avenue of improvement, and to avoid every pathway of error. It says also that "under each rank wrong lies the root of right," which it is man's duty to find, to carefully cherish in the name of truth, and develop to full fruition, in order that "all evil may be overcome of good." It is the religion of "human kindness among the sons of men," and gives a tender word to even the least in the household of mankind, that grief may be swallowed up of joy, and that hunger and cold supplanted by food, raiment and all the necessary comforts for body and soul. It is the religion of universal peace, and the light of its ideal is so dazzling in that respect as to cast a halo of glory over the entire globe. It has breathed its messages of love and good will into the ears of receptive mortals, until they have taken outward form in an attempt to secure the disarmament of all nations of the earth. Truly it is the religion of humanity that aims for the civilization of the race.

Spiritualism blesses all who apply its divine truths to their daily lives. It helps to make men and women more considerate of one another's feelings. It leads them to find their own in their neighbor's good, and proves the brotherhood of the race. It leads mankind away from error and temptation, and places idols of a sublime order before the minds of all thinking people. It stands for morality, sobriety, justice, equality, fraternity and universal good will among men. It is devotion to principle, adherence to duty, and loyalty to truth. In fine it is the religion of the soul, based upon the immutability of natural law, as set forth by Infinite love. It is the religion of humanity and for humanity, a "thing of beauty and joy forever" to all who live up to its precepts and exemplify its principles. It is probable through demonstrations, logical sequences, and intuitional perceptions. It is a loyal friend, a safe leader and an ever-present staff of support. As such it embodies the highest and stands before the world as the religion of beauty, as well as a beautiful religion.

We live behind a veil. Reality
Lies out beyond this veil. We see it not Except by glimpses. When we leave this dream,
This hollow, mocking dream, that men call life,
The veil's withdrawn; we look upon the truth
Naked and beautiful; all harmony
Thrills into one sweet song—Intelligence;
And we go onward to the goal of dream.
Welcome the hour that such shall come to you;
Welcome the hour you pass beyond this veil. CLAY.

The foregoing is a copy of one of many original messages that come independently of the medium, Oscar Ward, being printed on various kinds of paper.

MRS. PENNEFEATHER.

Misled by a False Faith.

A late writer, of course bearing a large old-time orthodox stripe, hearing so much about a played-out hell, thus inquires, and remarks:

"What has become of the diabolical characters recently deceased if hell has been, as it is asserted, abolished? Nowhere in gospel or epistle is there such crime laid to Satan himself as the daily paper publishes every morning. A man was recently executed in one of our states who had committed more cruelties against women and children in one year than all the like wrongs told of the devil in the whole Bible. 'If hell has been closed,' the writer says, 'we would like to ask where that man went, so that we can go somewhere else.'"

That writer is laboring under the grand mistake taught by the church, that wrong is eternal, and as such deserves eternal torture. Were he to look upon vice as an outgrowth of the mortal condition only, ending with the physical body of which it is a constituent, the disrobed spirit entering its new sphere of being and of action, disincumbered of all the incentives to lie; steal or murder to gratify the needs or the passions of mortality, he would take a different view of the subject than that indicated by the extract. As we understand it, death is a birth into a new life. When freed from the body the disenthralled spirit does not rest in the tomb, but is welcomed into what with us is an invisible world, by a multitude of those who have entered the new life in advance of him, who take the new arrival in charge and lead him forward to higher and still higher planes of being, ever advancing, never retrograding, with worthy examples and beneficent enticements all around him. Thus circumstanced we apprehend the writer, so anxious for a hell to punish wrong, will be content to dwell with the late reprobate who swung from the scaffold to glory, now filled with remorse because he had been falsely taught that "belief" was the key which unlocked the heavenly portals, while doubt and unbelief were the broad roads to endless woe and undying pains.

To Write a Bible.

Rev. A. M. Rihbany has startled Morenci, Mich., by announcing that he will withdraw from the Congregational church and write a Bible to suit himself.—News item.

The word Bible is the Latin for book. Its sacredness and its inspiration are fanciful. God inspires every author as much as he did those who wrote the Gospels, or the Prophets, or the Pentateuch. If Rev. Rihbany is educated, as his ambition to write a book would suggest, he has as as good a right to assume to be inspired of God as had Moses or any other man. Living in a later age, better educated, with the accumulated wisdom of possibly a thousand years, certainly not three thousand and more years, as claimed by churchmen, we may expect a pretty good production at his hands, unless he has the swell head, like a Justice of the Peace we knew in the long ago, in which he insisted he could write in one day a code of laws for the guidance of courts superior to all the compilations then extant.

The Progressive Thinker and Its Premiums.

To the Editor:—I notice that my time is most out, and I inclose the money for another year. You are making a splendid spiritual paper and publishing house, and I am glad to give you credit for all. I am glad, too, of the harmony among our spiritual editors, and I hope and think it will continue. It is wrong for some to say that our cause is growing dark, for the private circle and the general activity of our angel friends are making the beams bright, and all the earth, too.

You are making such a splendid offer in premiums that I must improve this chance, with thanks. I not only send my spiritual papers to various parties (and I take several of them), but I want to circulate as many books as possible, and give books to some. "Cheap books" for "the million!" is my desire. The papers and books are the right hands of angel friends to enlighten this world!

Enclosed I send you the three dollars and thirty-five cents ($3.35) for your seven premium books and for your paper another year. A HAMMOND.

Hot Springs, Ark.

ONE OF THE GRANDEST BENEFITS.

To the Editor:—Enclosed you will find money order for $1.25 for The Progressive Thinker one year and Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World. This will make three volumes of that work, which I consider worth ten times the price. If you are not giving your readers one of the grandest benefits, I don't know who is. Every Spiritualist should take so grand a paper, let him be ever so poor.

BOOK REVIEW.

Echoes from Shadow-Land. Agnes Proctor. The Alliance Publishing Co., New York. 75 cents.

The author received these really poetic effusions clairaudiently, from one claiming to be the spirit of Adah Isaacs Menken, known as the author of "Infelicia." These poems are certainly strikingly characteristic of that author's style and peculiarities of thought, in poetic diction and quality.

WE are trying our best to establish libraries in every Spiritualist family of the United States, hence we are offering Seven valuable books as a premium. Those seven books have been sold for $10.75. A single one has sold as high as $25. The first edition of Art Magic sold for $5 per copy. As high as $15 has been paid for a single copy of Ghost Land; yet we furnish these seven books to our subscribers for $2.35, when ordered in connection with a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker. Read our premium announcement carefully.

"He That Loseth His Life Shall Find It Again." An Address By Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown, at The Temple, Fort Worth, Texas.

INVOCATION.

Our infinite Father and Mother in all love and sweetness filling the world with its varied blessings, giving us light and shadow, the glory of the morning and the peace of the twilight, the solemn and sacred rest of night, we turn our faces toward the morning's gladness and lift our hearts in thanksgiving. We turn them toward the peace that cometh in the twilight, and feel that goodness fills our lives. We stand beneath the solemn arch of night and lift our faces heavenward with the sense that Thou art everlasting in thy love and that beyond the shadows of our world and its strange changes, its light, its glory, its darkness and its drear, the worlds of thy magnificence and truth stand in the light that hath not shone upon the land or sea; that there in the Eternal City waiting for the souls of men is that sweet radiance that comes from perfect love and from the law that lifts the soul upon its journey thither.

We ask to-night that we who watch in the by-paths may sense the hills, the foothills that are near; and we who climb the foothills toward the level plain may sense the mountains that are just a bit afar; and we who have gained the rugged cliffs and stand halfway amid the mountain heights may sense the peaks and have the strength and courage left to climb, knowing that when we reach the top we still shall see the everlasting hills of God above our happy eyes, and all the pasture lands of peace and all the meadows, all the plains of love. Oh, make our hearts courageous and our spirits brave until their muffled beat shall be to us the sound of courage, and the shadows that are on our paths the banners floating in the land of truth. And make us all to feel that life in its vicissitudes and joy is but the school wherein we learn, is but the school wherein, as athletes grow, we learn the skill of strength and brawn and power, and when we dare to climb and rise above the level of to-day we can ascend to higher, holier things.

Fill every heart with courage and with peace, and give us those examples of great love, of sacrifice of self, of generous deeds, of noble lives of holy one's e'en as the Christ's hath been; and lead us through the plains and valleys across the bridges that are set for us until at last we stand within the City Beautiful, everlasting in the heavens and not made with hands. Amen.

The subject of my evening lecture is, "He That Loseth His Life Shall Find It Again."

There are two mysteries that confront the world. One is the strange mystery of life and the other the strange mystery of death. And what is death, and what is life?

Some one will tell you that life is the active vital expression of existence, the partaking of the world's activities, the by-path in all this central existence; and they will tell you with equal brevity that death is the end of this active life, that when we die we cease to act and we are placed in the earth and that is the end; that is death, and they are satisfied with the answer. They have told it all to you according to their opinion. But find the student and ask of him the meaning of those words. He stands before you with the deepest perplexity in his heart when he holds a flower, as I hold these roses to-night in my hand. He looks into the petals, he finds the wonderful fragrance, the light and the color, and he says, "This is life, but what is it?" It is the painted glory of the sunlight; it is the kiss of the breeze; it is the whisper of he wind; it is the tears of the tempest; it is the light of the day and the shadows of the night; it is all of these blended into color and fragrance. And as he looks at them he asks the question, "Why is the one the blending of all colors into the purity of whiteness and the other the suggestion of the red rose of June?" Each is a part of life. Each of these flowers is a scientific problem. They are in existence and they are life. They are something more, they are the strange mystery of death, for their stems have been severed from the nourishing roots that lifted them above the earth, and they are dying now. But they will never cease; they will always have their place in nature, in life and in death.

We may turn anywhere, it is the same story. You and I are living and dying every moment; each inhalation of our breath gives us life and each exhalation carries out something that has been ours never to belong to us again. Each day we have a new beginning and a new ending of life. The sun has never set upon the same life twice. We are living more each hour and we are dying more. This is a part of the great solemn story of the endless waves of the sea of life that forever kiss the sandy shores of death.

And is life to be especially asked for, and is death to be especially shunned? Do you feel that the ocean with its active crest rising and falling under the skies to-night, far on the Pacific coast is more than the great shining rocks that are there under the moonlight? No. And is life more than death, and is death more than life? Let us follow the question a little way and let us take it with its broader, sweeter spiritual sense.

There are men and women who move among us in their daily walks who have died, who have passed through the shadows of the agonies of great griefs, who have passed them without a sign, without a word and who, through the ashes of buried hopes and buried loves, have risen triumphant into that higher existence which makes them invulnerable to the narrow shafts of sin. There are brave hearts that sing the song of courage into our weaker ones and make us hear the notes of hope. It brings a picture to us of one who journeys out into the wide world with the purpose of aiding himself. He begins his life by looking about to see what he may do to benefit his own personal existence. He does not stop to think of others but he toils for self, to gain this to-day, to gather more to-morrow. He steps upon the lives of his fellow-men; he crushes the bleeding hearts of women; he reaches over a trembling child to seize something, in what he calls his splendid strength of life; he goes on and the world says, "See him, how successful he is, how much he has gained. That man is living, I am proud to see him succeed so. He is winning fame, the world will know him. He is a great light. How much he is doing." And he runs on scarcely looking to the right or left. His strong eager hands grasp whatever they will; they hold it in such a grip that it is his. The weak perish in his path, and the strong who meet him wrestle with him, and with panting breath of success he hurries on to see what next shall be his. He gathers glory, shining, bright. He wins fame and renown. Look about you, these are his large buildings, yonder are his warehouses, and listen to the whirr of machinery that tells you of his triumphant march through the land.

Another man stands out on fancy's magic screen. He sees a weary girl who is breasting hard against the tide of adversity. He knows that if he stops to help, his own success will be delayed; but he cannot pass her by and so he puts into the frail little hands that which means so much to him and gives her hope and courage. He speeds along hearing only the echo of her whispered words of thanks. The world says he has begun with a mistake; he is full of sentiment and folly and he will be sure to run astray.

Again he stops; old age comes in his way. He cannot leave it; he knows that he, too, will one day be old and feeble, so he waits to give a word of encouragement and of cheer, while the world laughs at his philosophy. He journeys on. Once more he is confronted by the great heart-hunger of humanity, and from what he has he stops to give to others less fortunate than himself; and while he is giving to others and they are forgetting his name, the sounds come wafted back to him, the echoes of the great man's life, and he looks with admiration and with calm eyes upon the prosperity of his neighbor. His prayer is for strength and his word is for courage, and by and by there comes a time when right stands upon one side with folded hands and a great temptation with outstretched arms upon the other. She looks upon him with her wanton face. She whispers to him the words of her endearment. He stops, he trembles, he sways, when all at once the thought of the real meaning of life comes to him and he says: No, he who giveth his life shall find it again, and I shall find mine in that path of rectitude and virtue which leads down through the shadows of Gethsemane and up upon the hills where trembling, bleeding feet have trod.

Time passes and the gliding years cover the history of our two travelers, and when one day they meet, age has placed his hand upon the man of success; his brow is marked with deep wrinkles; the clear shrewdness of his eyes is still there, and passing back and forth he watches what belongs to him. The other man whose brow is placid with the consciousness of efforts in behalf of others, with the power that comes from the vanquishing of his own temptations, with the knowledge that death has been conquered, that greed and hate are forever slain, slowly approaches the great man of the world and taking his hand would give him congratulation. But the other bids him stop, and says to him: "You have lived a life of simple, holy deeds. You have sought, through the paths of unselfishness, through the death of your own ambitions, the path to eternal life. I have been selfish and held my place in the world. Take my hand and walk with me through the tomb that I have found!"

And lo, the man that the world has called a king of life leads his brother into the dark vaults where the tombs of a soul's mistakes are. He points to this one where generosity was buried; to that one where morality faded and sank into the arms of death; to this one where truth was laid aside; and among these funeral piles and with these tombs around him, with the mocking faces of the skeletons of memory, the mistakes of past experience floating by him, he stands naked and unfolded before this one who would be his friend. The world calls his life successful and grand; it is filled with dead men's bones; it has the smell of the tomb and the mouldery dust and decay of avarice. He who seeks too much of life finds death. The Dead Sea fruit that his eager boats had brought back from the blackened, stagnant pool of time was about him, bitter and full of slime. The heights of his own ambition have been rather the roads leading downward; and the man whom the world calls living sleeps in the depths of his own follies. He who finds his life through avenues of this kind takes the straight road to death. For it has been truly said, "It is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die."

A man who forgets his moral obligations is dead; a man who forgets the purity of the soul he has in charge is dead; a man who forgets to reverence the high and holy things is dead. For him must be in the long line of futurity a resurrection and a birth, for God is good and his children who die in the darkness and shadow of their environment must be reborn through the pain of their own consciousness, unfolded from the womb of agony and remorse into life's higher and better comprehensions; and the man who forsakes jealousy and hate, who sacrifices his own seeming interests for the good of others, lives. He cannot die. He who loves his brother so well that he would give his life for him, finds rather than loses it, and his failures are the arteries of triumph through which his white soul walks unto the avenues of God's reward.

Seek not in this world to gain all its glitter and its glory, but rather seek with patience, tender souls to cheer, broken hearts to comfort, some life to uplift, some trembling hand to place in your strong one, some one that you can point to the stars above and whisper in their despairing ears the words of hope and benediction.

Life is a never-ending mystery; death is as great, but I never confound that silent change from this physical inheritance to that life beyond as death. We are given the key to immortality when we are given existence, and we bear it with us safely in our hands through this world and into worlds beyond. The only death that can possibly come to us is the death of error and of sin, and the resurrection from this must be in God's good time. If not in this world, then in those other worlds that wait for us.

After the man who had been the world's life had passed through the long vaults and amidst the gleaming skeletons of his life, he turned to his friend and said: "This is my empty cellar of despair. This is my grave, yet wherein the world thinks me living. What have you to show?"

The other answered: "Very little indeed. I have only the white hands of a neighbor that are lifted in prayer. I have only the blessings of an old man that fall from trembling lips. I have only the kind words of the poor and simple, and these I prize."

The men stood looking at each other, when suddenly a light illumined all the place and the glory of God seemed upon them, and the man found by his side instead of the hand of a feeble girl the strong arm of an angel of light; and instead of the trembling words of an old man a chorus of voices singing "Peace on earth, good will to men;" and instead of the prayers and thanksgiving of old and feeble women the symphony of the choir invisible saying, "Greater is he who giveth his life for his friend than all others; and he who gives his life gains it, and he who loses finds, and he who places his hopes in the hands of others and trusts in the infinite Lord, walks calmly through the shadows into the light that fadeth not."

And lo! where he thought the dark stream rolled between him and his soul's desire the bridge of gold was builded, set with the sacred gems that glisten forever on the finger of time, and his trembling feet walked across it into the garden of Paradise, into the Eden of Peace. For unselfishness is the world's redemption, and love is the crown that shall lift the souls from out the shadow into the light; and though the thorns may pierce, its eternal glory is set with the white light of tenderness of purity. God is good and loves his children who understand him and who are near to him.

My brothers and my sisters, forget to be selfish and learn to be generous. Know that when your hearts have reached that place where you can stand at the white altar and lay them tenderly upon it, surrendering into that infinite hand what you love most, you gain it and you cannot lose. Eternal light shines through the gates of the City Beautiful and it touches the brow of the unselfish and the brave, and God's children are known by the two marks on the forehead.

The man of pleasure should more properly be termed the man of pain.—Colton.

True happiness consists not in the multitude of friends, but in the worth and choice.—Ben Jonson.

OLD AND NEW PSYCHOLOGY.

BY W. J. COLVILLE.

Reports of twenty-four distinct lectures, recently delivered in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Philadelphia and other prominent cities of the United States, have contributed the basis of this volume.

The chief aim throughout the volume has been to arouse increased interest in the workable possibilities of a theory of human nature, thoroughly optimistic and at the same time, profoundly ethical. As several chapters are devoted to improved methods of education, the writer confidently expects that many parents, teachers and others who have charge of the young, or who are called upon to exercise supervision over the morally weak and mentally afflicted, will derive some help from the doctrines herewith promulgated.

SCIENCE OF THE SOUL

BY

LOREN ALBERT SHERMAN.

Sets forth the Philosophy of Existence, with detailed evidence. It appeals to Christians and Spiritualists alike, as it demonstrates the truth of the spirit manifestations of Jesus Christ, upon which the Christian religion is based, as well as the actuality of modern spirit manifestations. Its title page claims that the book is

A SCIENTIFIC DEMONSTRATION of the Existence of the soul of man as his conscious individuality independently of the physical organism; of the CONTINUITY OF LIFE and the ACTUALITY OF SPIRIT RETURN.

The first eleven chapters are devoted entirely to manifestations of the soul incarnate, with a clear exposition of the psychic philosophy.

The succeeding four chapters set forth the philosophy of the Infinite.

The last twenty chapters are devoted to an exposition of spiritual philosophy, with evidence in detail, much of it being personal experiences of the author.

The price of the book is $1. For sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker.

THE

World's Sixteen Saviors,

—OR—

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST.

BY KERSEY GRAVES.

New and startling revelations in religious history which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles precepts and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Original Crucified Gods. This wonderful and exhaustive volume will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which the author has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape, the student of free thought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, 330 pages. New edition, revised and corrected, with portrait of author.

Price $1.50. Postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

WORDS OF PRAISE.

"The Arcana of Spiritualism."

The volume bearing the above title is a rich store of spiritual treasure.

From its opening sentence, to its closing paragraph, it is filled with bright and sparkling thought.

Its tone is clear, harmonious and free from the jar and jolt of personal prejudice. Its logic is sound, its reasoning forceful and comprehensive, its diction lofty, pure and sublime. A broad, deep vein of spirituality shines on every page.

It is a spiritual chart with every shoal and reef constructed by false religions laid bare to the mental eyes of the readers.

It sheds unerring light upon materialistic science, and weighs its unyielding dogmas by the just balance of natural laws, and exposes the pitfalls in all man-made creeds.

It conducts the young and inexperienced student in safety through the narrow defiles of the dark mountains of false theology. Its ever-increasing light dispels the mist and clouds of doubt and fear which hang in dark folds along the path from the cradle to the grave.

Its comprehensive and clearly defined philosophy embraces all the vital principles, the potent energies and spiritual forces which have evolved the race of immortal man from the lower levels of the pre-silurian age, conducting it through the intervening stages of development, till crowned with immortal life.

"The Arcana of Spiritualism" is like a silver cord bedecked with rubies and sapphires—it stretches across the vast continent of human experiences, and unites in bonds of fraternal relation all the family of mankind.

It presents a well-founded hope, based upon the immutable laws of the universe, ultimating in the complete emancipation of a soul and spirit from all the evil effects of the misapplication of the laws of mortal existence and spiritual development.

Its recorded facts disarm cruel orthodoxy of its oft-repeated boast, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," and extends the scepter of clemency and justice to every erring son and daughter of suffering mankind who will turn to the light, and walk in the path of purity and peace.

Its radiant light dispels the awful gloom of the solitary grave, which has been made dense and gruesome by the founders, and advocates of a false religion. Like a herald of spiritual life and liberty, it stands between the two worlds proclaiming eternal progress, and ultimate emancipation to all.

It sets forth in clearly defined outlines the exalted intelligences in the planes of immortal life, who are projecting their pure and noble impulses upon the thought centers of deluded mortals, who are blindly led by spiritually blind guides, whose teaching of time-honored errors is inducing the people to still reject the only true light which shines in the mental and moral darkness of the present hour.

The subject matter of "The Arcana of Spiritualism" is as fascinating as the purest and most exalted romance in the broad field of literature. Yet the thesis and the theme is fraught with the most serious and weighty subjects pertaining to our eternal interests.

A volume complete, unique, and highly instructive, written in such style that the toiling millions who have not the advantage of literary culture, can trace with pleasure and profit the inspired thoughts as they flow from the trenchant pen of the venerable sage of Berlin Heights.

"The Arcana of Spiritualism" in its vast scope and compass, is an encyclopedia of reliable information, of great value to all who desire to know their true relation to the realm of spirit.

It begins to unfold its treasures by presenting the "Evidences of Spiritualism," which are not the mere opinions of men, but the testimony of demonstrated facts.

"Matter and Force. Their Relation to Spirit." This is not an essay, written to support some sect, or to sustain a certain class of individuals who like parasites feed upon the flock—but reason, logic and fact fully demonstrated, is the trinity that presides over this department.

"Spiritual atmosphere of the Universe" is not the dream of an erratic writer, who revolves around one idea, with mental vision bounded by materialistic prejudice, nor one who views all things through the obscure medium of ancient manuscripts, bearing the trade-mark Sinai and Patmos, but a grand display of spirit power, manifested through the mentality of an ardent student in the spirit plane of pure thought.

"Animal Magnetism, Hypnotism—Mesmerism." These mysterious subjects are stripped of their confusing elements, and presented to the sage or the toiler for daily bread in such clear-cut terms, as to be of practical value to all.

"Spirit. Its Phenomena and Its Laws" equips the philosopher or the rustic with ample means to meet all carping objectors with a full, and fair answer for the hope that is in the soul of the Spiritualist.

"Philosophy of Death," more beautiful in its relation to mortal existence, and immortal destiny, than the loftiest flight of inspired thought written by seer or apostle within the scope of the "infallible (?) word."

"Mediumship, Its Laws, Phenomena and Cultivation. This is a valuable department in the book, and of greater benefit to benighted and oppressed humanity than all the written dissertations of the "Fathers" who claimed immediate association with the "Divine Mind," who planned, and executed the "scheme of salvation by faith."

"Heaven and Hell, the Supposed Abodes of the Departed." Let the student of orthodox theology gather all the infallible (?) promises, commands, aids and props scattered through the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, and view them from the standpoint of spiritual truth—the eternal principle which underlies this valuable work, and they pale and shrink into idle tales when compared with the natural legitimate abiding place of those who have passed from the mortal to the spiritual plane of existence.

"The Spirit's Home." This portion of the book is pregnant with the springs of life. It is the "earnest of the spirit." A glimpse of real life in the future. A prospectus of a never-ending, and ever-unfolding source of peace, joy and spiritual progression, where the famishing souls of men and women may bask in the sunlight of wisdom, love and power; where the effects of error and the deformities of a lifeless system of vain religious efforts are outgrown; where ignorance and sin are eradicated from the soul and spirit, where, in the oncoming ages humanity will be clothed in the beautiful garments of righteousness, peace and good will to all the vast family of mankind.

"The Old Religion of Pain; Spiritualism the Religion of Joy." A grand, concise, and harmonious summing up of this most comprehensive theme—"The Arcana of Spiritualism." It takes the readers from their round of drudgery in the Egypt of orthodoxy, where "bricks are made without straw," takes them from under the rod of the oppressor, who "adds to the daily task" greater burdens; it brings them into the light, liberties and blessings of the spiritual home, abounding in eternal actualities. More real than our most valued interest here.

This book should be read with care, and digested by the mental powers, its spirit absorbed by the burdened soul, and acted upon in the daily life of all who read its glowing pages.

The neophyte will find rich and wholesome food that will strengthen every fibre of his yearning soul.

The sage and philosopher can ponder its weighty principles, and rejoice in the rich heritage of his heirship to immortality. The bereaved and stricken souls can be assured, that "the broken strands of earth-life will be united there, and that loved ones await their home-coming."

With sincere desire that this valuable work may shed its radiance within the home of every Spiritualist in the land, we bid it good-speed upon its sacred mission, as the harbinger of wisdom, love and power. C. F. COLE.

Briggs Park, Mich.

We had an enthusiastic crowd again to-day. Mrs. R. W. Barton, of Rochester, was the speaker of the morning. The subject of her discourse was "The Class-rooms of Eternity." The question was ably handled and all who heard her were instructed. At the close of her lecture, she gave a number of spirit messages and descriptions which were all recognized.

At the afternoon service, Mrs. Lee Norie Claman, of Chicago, began her engagement with the camp. She conducts her services in a different manner from what the majority of the mediums do. She gives her descriptions before her lecture. This is out of the ordinary, as the rest of our workers usually give the lecture first. She won her way into the hearts of her audience with little trouble. Her descriptions were all good and were recognized. In answering the questions by raps on the table on the rostrum, they were given so loud and distinctly that they could be easily heard at a distance of thirty feet.

The evening service consisted of descriptions and messages entirely. This meeting was the best attended of any meeting of the day. In fact they always are at our camp. The mediums who took part in the service were Mrs. Blake, Mrs. Claman, Mrs. Payne, Dr. Knowles, Mrs. Coffman, Mrs. Fritz, Mrs. Barton, Mr. Ripley, Mrs. Carpenter, Mrs. Ferris, and Mr. Carpenter.

This portion of our science is what proves our position and gives us the right to say "We know." Others say that they "believe," but we say we know!"

Mr. Mitchell arrived on the grounds, and will remain with us for a while. He is of too great renown to need comment, as a materializing medium.

Mr. King is also here from Benton Harbor, and Mr. Cain, of our own city.

THOS. J. HAYNES, Sec'y.

"The Gospel of Buddha, According to Old Records." Told by Paul Carus. This book is heartily commended to students of the science of religions, and to all who would gain a fair conception of Buddhism in its spirit and living principles. Spiritualist or Christian can scarcely read it without spiritual profit. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Will C. Hodge at Lake Brady, O.

Mr. Hodge opened with a poem, the idea of which was that the most beautiful story for mortals to read is found in the blush of roses, and other phenomena of nature. Holy Scripture is traced in the rocks as well as in the suns and planetary systems.

Mr. Hodge said in part: "Heaven will be no heaven unless I meet my mother there. In 1848 certain sounds were heard in Hydesville, N. Y., called the Rochester knockings. The discovery was afterwards made that they were the result of an intelligence, and those spirits said that they once had mortal bodies, and although dead they were never more alive. Immortality then became a proven fact, and although persecution followed, Spiritualism persisted and we now have phenomena enough to fill a hundred bibles.

"In my thirty-two years' experience, I have never seen an honest person investigate Spiritualism without becoming a convert. Spiritualism was not of the world's seeking, but came to us from the invisible side of life, as soon as the world was ready to receive it. The Salem witchcraft was a Spiritualistic manifestation. Spiritualism is the basis of every religion in the world. The Bible is filled with it. I want to say to my hearers that you are going to see your departed friends in the light. I have already had these manifestations. The genius of Modern Spiritualism is its cosmopolitanism. There is no good thing that Modern Spiritualism destroys, and truth will always remain truth. Anything that will not stand investigation will have to fall. We teach that the best thing any human being can do is to think.

"Is it reasonable that people who lived 2,000 years ago should form a code of ethics and morals that would answer for all time? We do not say, believe or be damned; but think and accept, if it agrees with your sense of right and justice. We have no particular hell to put you in if you reject our theories. We never persecute any human being. I heard a man say that he had investigated Spiritualism and was convinced that there was nothing in it. I found that he had attended just three seances. Think of one getting a full knowledge of chemistry or astronomy in just three sessions!

"Spiritualism is the philosophy of life in its entirety here and beyond. It is philosophy. It is fact. It is here to stay in spite of all that may be said against it. It is based on actual knowledge. We know there are frauds. There are black sheep among our people as well as among others, but our people are just as good as any on the globe. The tendency of Spiritualism, when understood, is to make people better. Spiritualism is the best thing that ever came to this work-a-day world of ours. The knowledge that comes of our continuance beyond the grave is worth more than all the creeds. God is beneficent and good. We have not fallen from Eden, but are on the up-grade. If we have a creed it is that of Ingersoll: 'The place to be happy is here, the time to be happy is now, and the way to be happy is to make others happy.'

"Modern Spiritualism allows you to lead just such a life as you choose, either good or bad, but you yourself must pay the bill, and you will reap whatever you sow. Heaven is a condition and not a place. We are going to the one we make ourselves, and each one must work out the problem. Wait before passing your judgment on Spiritualism, until the blossoming time comes. The beautiful water lily must come up through the mud and slime."

Mount Pleasant Park, Ia.

Will send a brief review of opening work at Mt. Pleasant Park, Sunday last. The following clipping embodies the main features:

The eighteenth annual encampment of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualist's Association opened Sunday morning at Mt. Pleasant Park, a large crowd being present at the opening ceremonies, consisting of flag-raising at 9 o'clock, and at 10:30 the annual address of welcome by the president of the organization, W. F. Peck, of St. Louis.

The day was an ideal one for the ceremonies, and a large crowd attended, about five hundred people passing through the gates, in addition to the large number who are in camp for the season, on the ground. President Peck's address was a masterly one. For two hours he held the closest attention of the auditors, who gathered in the spacious auditorium at the park, to listen to the address. The subject was "The Spiritual World." President Peck is a talented orator, and his hearers were delighted with the interesting and instructive discourse.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon the platform was occupied by Willard J. Hull, the editor of the Light of Truth. Mr. Hull is one of the most effective and impressive speakers on the Spiritualist platform, and his lecture on "Natural Law" pleased all the hearers. He will remain at the park until August 2, lecturing each afternoon. A test seance at 4 o'clock by Dr. H. M. Temple closed the day's programme.

Brother Will C. Hodge, our old coworker, was present and took part in the opening exercises.

DR. J. C. PHILLIPS.

Maple Dell Camp, Ohio.

Yesterday was a very interesting day on these grounds. All things conspired to make the meetings a success. The day was delightful. The grounds were attractive. The band was in tune. The speaking was excellent. Mrs. Curran, who gave proofs of spirit presence, was at her best. Mr. Weaver made an earnest plea for Spiritualism and for Maple Dell, and Mr. Dunakin gave an able address. It was pleasant to notice that nearly all who were on the grounds assembled in the auditorium to hear the speaking.

The interest was greatly increased by the attendance in a body of the First Society of Spiritualists of Cleveland. They came unexpectedly, but were received with warm hearts and open hands. At their head were the officers of the society, Mr. Barker, president; Mr. Kerr, secretary, and Mr. Eberhard, treasurer.

During this week there will be public lectures every afternoon at 1:30 in the auditorium, by Mrs. Curran and Mr. Weaver.

On Friday Mr. and Mrs. Kates will commence their work. They will have full charge of the meetings on next Sunday, which will be the "yearly meeting day."

The Maple Dell Summer School has opened with upwards of twenty in attendance. It has four departments: The Psychic, under Dr. D. M. King; Oratory, under Miss Inez May Hill; the Scientific, under Prof. Kerstetter, and Lessons in English Language, by A. J. Weaver. The new school building is not yet completed, but it is a fine structure and is more in the direction of a permanent institution of learning on these grounds. Interest in school work is growing everywhere among Spiritualists. A. J. WEAVER.

"The Spiritualism of Nature." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

Island Lake, Mich.

Wondering why you do not (or rather wishing that you would) attend our camp-meeting, the thought struck me to say through your widely-circulated journal that we are having a great spiritual refreshing at our Island Lake camp, through the inspirations of our speakers, and the beautiful messages from our mediums.

It is the combined testimony not only of the campers but of all the visitors, that our grounds, considering the beautiful lake, the grove, the pure water, the capacious hotel, the magnificent auditorium, daily trimmed and festooned with flowers and twining vines, and our orchestra conducted by Prof. Hudson, of Bay City, if equalled, are not surpassed.

Mrs. Sheets, one of our best speakers, and president of the Grand Ledge camp-meeting, was with us the first Sunday, and her inspired messages were well received. The Rev. B. F. Austin, the ex-Methodist preacher and late college professor, and Giles B. Stebbins, the pioneer, the following Sunday. Last Sunday, the old traveler, pilgrim and patriarch, Dr. Peebles, addressed us twice, with all the stirring vigor and eloquence of his younger days.

Our president James H. White, of Port Huron, entertained the Doctor, he informs us, 48 years ago, while he was delivering a course of lectures in the above-named city; and a page and a half of the reports of his lectures were shown us to-day, printed at that time in the old Port Huron Commercial. These lectures bore a stirring testimony against slavery which had not then been abolished, and orthodox creeds, as well as giving the proofs of the spiritual philosophy. Brother White said that these lectures would read well if republished, though delivered nearly 50 years ago.

Sister Baade, of Detroit, makes an excellent presiding officer. She is to address the camp next Sunday. Then comes another of the old pioneers, Lyman C. Howe, a worker who has a golden record both on earth and in the higher spheres above us. Other speakers of national fame are to follow. We earnestly hope that the editor of The Progressive Thinker will some day visit our camp and take a vacation rest. He will be more than welcome.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

The Progressive Thinker goes to press early Monday morning of each week. Camp-meeting reports should always reach the office on the previous Friday or Saturday at the very latest. Bear that in mind.

"L." writes: "Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, of Chicago, Ill., addressed a large and appreciative audience at Corry, Pa., Sunday, July 29. 'The Question of the Hour' was the subject for the discourse, and was handled in a masterly manner, and to the great satisfaction of all present. This address has been reported expressly for The Progressive Thinker. Mrs. Richmond has made annual visits to Corry for several years, speaking each time, and a great interest has been awakened in her, and in the grand teachings by her guides." The lecture alluded to in the above will be published shortly.

Mrs. S. Augusta Armstrong has been in Chicago for a few days. She came direct from California where she has been doing an excellent work. She goes from here to Grand Ledge Camp, then to Buffalo, and the Freeville Camp.

The Logansport (Ind.) Reporter speaks as follows of the Chesterfield Camp: "The officers of the Indiana association are fully determined to protect their members and the public against false claims of pretenders, and have taken every precaution to rid their camp of all but those regarded genuine by the state association."

The Chicago Chronicle says: "Eugene Blanc, who has been persistently claiming that the spirit of his dead wife has been haunting him, cut his throat with a razor at Perryville, Mo., and will die. Mr. Blanc did not get along with his wife very well and they separated. Mrs. Blanc frequently threatened that if she died first she would come back and haunt her husband and make life miserable for him. Shortly after the separation the woman died. Since her death Blanc has frequently declared that Mrs. Blanc's spirit has appeared at intervals in his affairs and has so annoyed him that life was not worth living. He has threatened to commit suicide on several occasions."

Mr. and Mrs. Lindsey write from Mukwonago, Wis.: "Myself and wife, of Grand Rapids, Mich., are doing the work assigned us by the spiritual intelligences. We are holding spiritual seances at the Universalist church on Sundays, to large and interested audiences. During the week our sister, Mrs. S. J. Andrews, opens the doors of her magnificent mansion and invites the people of Mukwonago in, and we have enjoyed several very interesting and social greetings from both sides of life. This place is quite new as regards the spiritual work. We expect to remain here a few days longer, and will then go to Waukesha, and fill engagement."

The Chicago Journal says: "It took a patrol-wagon full of police to prevent a score or more of Catholics from forcibly compelling a preacher to cease his tirade against their faith. The preacher was Henry A. Sullivan, who says he was a Catholic priest, now ex-communicated, and the church was the Onward Presbyterian church, North Leavitt and West Ohio streets. The announcement of a sermon containing many exposures of the Catholic church drew a large congregation to the church. Before the preacher had proceeded far a woman in the center of the church arose from her pew and exclaimed: 'You are a liar, and you know it!' The whole assemblage was in great commotion and the police who had been stationed at the door were called upon to remove the disturbers. A wagon-load of police arrived, but could not pacify the audience. When the service was over the preacher left under the guardianship of the police. His exit was greeted by cat calls, eggs and stones. Several windows in the church were also broken." No doubt every word uttered by Mr. Sullivan against the Catholic church was true. The savage Catholics present would undoubtedly have killed him, had it not been for the timely arrival of the police.

W. H. Simpson writes from Grahamtown, South Africa: "We who have thought our way out of dogmatic Christianity have no wish to be regathered into the fold by some shepherd on the look-out for sheep. In fact we have no desire to be regarded as sheep or goats, and strongly object to being driven into the fold to be periodically fleeced. There can be no reasonable objection raised to Christians endeavoring to revivify into some semblance of life their dead dogmas and dying beliefs by means of our living facts. Let theologians spiritualize Christianity if they can. But we for our parts should resolutely resist all attempts to Christianize Spiritualism or convert into a formulated religion what should simply be a scientific investigation of occult phenomena. It can no more be considered a religious exercise to talk with a friend out of his body than if he were in it."

H. L. Bigelow writes from San Jose, Cal.: "The First Spiritual Union of this place is making preparations for and anticipating a good time when the State Convention of Spiritualists holds its meeting here in September. Henry H. Brown has been our speaker for the present month, and has also had a class in psychometry, which was a success. He has many warm friends in San Jose."

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

The Chicago Daily News of July 26 says; "According to a letter written to the police by Miss Lizzie Gasser of Skaneateles Village, N. Y., she was made the dupe and then swindled out of $11,000 by two spirit mediums, mother and son, who she now supposes are in Chicago. Chief of Detectives Colleran has been requested to find them."

The Indianapolis (Ind.) News says: "A crowd of 8,000 or 10,000 people were at the camp of the Association of Indiana Spiritualists, July 27. It was the largest number of visitors the camp has ever known on the first Sunday. Mrs. Carrie Twing, of Boston, lectured at 10 a. m., on 'Visions.' She has caused something of a sensation by her declaration that any person could be his own medium. She said she would be glad when the dollar and the medium is divorced. The Rev. Moses Hull, of Buffalo, lectured in the afternoon, and there were numerous platform tests. The names of mediums who have been authorized by the directors to hold forth at the camp have been announced, and includes about fifteen men and women."

According to information obtained in London, some friction has arisen between the Vatican and the Washington Government, respecting the rights, privileges and property of the church in the Philippines. There is a suspicion in Cardinal Rampolla's mind that negotiations are proceeding secretly between the American authorities in Manila and the insurgent chiefs, in the course of which a demand of the latter that the present Spanish clergy should be expelled from the Philippines and their property confiscated has not been rejected with indignation. The Cardinal and ambassador Draper have had several unofficial talks and the Pope is said to be keenly interested.

Arnold Stulting writes from Kalamazoo, Mich., of a very satisfactory seance with Mrs. Amy Buchanan, of Jacksonville, Fla., at the residence of Elijah F. Rice. While her hands were held on either side voices spoke through the trumpet. Correct answers were given to mental questions. A question was written in the Holland language on a slate and correctly answered in English. Slates were written on when held by a person ten feet away from the medium, one message being written in Holland.

The Indianapolis Sentinel says: "The first lecture at the Chesterfield camp by Moses Hull will be heard Friday afternoon. The third Sunday will be the banner day of the six weeks' session. One of the chief attractions will be Swami Abhedananda, the Hindoo, a recent convert, who will in his peculiar style demonstrate the benefits and his knowledge of the religion. On Sunday, Aug. 12, Ignatius Donnelly, of Minnesota, populist candidate for president, will speak. Others with national records will be J. Clegg Wright, George P. Colby and Oscar Edgerly. The interurban line between Chesterfiled and Anderson was thrown open to-day and hundreds of visitors will patronize this mode of reaching the grounds forom the west."

T. H. Sketchley writes from Seattle, Washington: "A medium in Webster City, Iowa, wrote me a few days ago that she was not taking a Spiritualist paper at present. I told her she was not consistent, and for myself I would rather do without a coat than The Progressive Thinker." What is true of the medium at Webster City, Iowa, is true of hundreds of others scattered through the country—they take no Spiritualist paper. Whenever a medium, however, gets into trouble in consequence of some odious law on our statute books, then they want the assistance of a Spiritual paper, and of course get it at once.

The Democrat of Canton, O., says: "In conversation with one of the bright lights of Spiritualism who is located near the auditorium, Lake Brady, the writer was informed that Spiritualism is not a religion, but is considered simply in the light of scientific investigation. It does not pretend even to supply a code of ethics or morals, and every individual is free to do as he or she pleases."

T. H. Sketchley writes from Seattle, Washington: "I enclose to you a clipping from the Post-Intelligencer, a daily paper published in the City of Seattle. The religious crank, like the 'star of empire,' has 'westward made his way,' and has arrived safe and sound upon the Pacific Coast. All vocations are represented here, and I suppose it is only fair to let the crank have a show. This D. L. Fordney is a 'defunct' preacher, but it seems that he still regards it as duty to warn sinners of the wrath to come."

The Indianapolis (Ind.) Daily News says under date of July 26: "The saloons near the grounds of the Chesterfield Camp were wide open last Sunday, but a demand will be made on them to close, and an officer will see that the order is enforced. The directors of the association have decided to expel August Koch and wife, after a trial in which there was a good deal of bitterness. They have been forbidden to hold seances on the grounds of the state organization, but insisted on doing so. They have a cottage at the camp, and say they will go into court to establish their rights to occupy it." Spiritualists generally have great faith in the Anderson camp, and believe its success in the future will be great.

Critic writes: "The following is from the Religio-Philosophical Journal: 'A certain class of people, small in number, but loud and continuous of voice, aptly designated as 'Calamity Howlers,' infest the world to-day. The intelligent man and the good citizen, if he sees a possible evil or pending danger, feels impelled to seek or invent a method to overcome or obviate it; but the calamity howler only howls. He is never an instrument of good, but sometimes does evil because his baneful noise frightens the timid or grates the nerves of those within its influence. There are many of such in the ranks of Spiritualism, as well as in other avenues. We are optimistic; we look on the bright side; we try to see the good, the pure, the true, and desire to be blind to all that is untrue, unreal and deceptive. If we are doing our duty, trying to overcome evil with good; to build up instead of tearing down, we shall have no use for pessimistic ideas, or calamity howling.' As a Critic I desire to say that the pessimist has a niche to occupy just as much as the optimist. If Brother Newman desires to be blind to all that is deceptive, how about counterfeit money? Would that be taken in exchange for books and subscriptions? The fact is, in this world of ours a man of necessity must never be blind to that which is untrue, unreal and deceptive. Supposing our police officers adopted Brother Newman's tactics, how long would it be before our city would be completely ruined."

Cale Williams, of Richmond, Ind., formerly a resident of Economy, has recalled a dream he had sixteen years ago. He declares that he related the dream to many persons at the time and he denies that he invented it to prevent present circumstances. He dreamed that he saw a railroad train rushing through a corn-field adjacent to the village of Economy, and exactly following a course since laid out by the surveyors of the line of the C., R. & M. railroad. Many persons recall the fact that Mr. Williams related the dream at the time. The road will be built along the line definitely traced by Williams as the course of the train seen in his dream.

D. R. Higbie, M. D., writes: "The premium books, Vols. 1, 2, and 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World came to hand all right. Thanks. They ought to be in every family in the United States, there is so much of value to all in regard to conditions of spirit life, and so cheap, so cheap!"

That there are more camp-meetings in Ohio than can be sustained, seems apparent from the following taken from the Columbus Post of July 22: "The Spiritualist camp-meeting, near Worthington, was slightly interferred with Saturday evening, by Constable A. E. Thomas, of Andrews' court, serving replevin papers upon Amos Davis, president; W. D. Noyes, secretary, and Cora B. Noyes, treasurer of the Columbus, Ohio, Liberal Spiritualist Camp Association for the large 60x90 and the two 14x24 tents occupied by them. The suit was brought by Geo W. Sellars, Jr., of the firm of McAuliey & Sellars, tent and awning manufacturers, to collect a claim of $260, alleged to be a balance on the tents, and which amount was secured by a mortgage on the same. Mr. Sellars stated to the Press-Post that he learned that a receiver is to be appointed for the association, and to protect himself, he desired to get in on the ground floor, before such action was taken and his property tied up. Constable Thomas allowed the property to remain, and the meetings will proceed, probably to the end of the time which they have set for the continuance. The replevin suit is set for trial in Andrews' court on the 26th."

E. S. Bishop, secretary, writes from Glasco, Kans.: "W. W. Aber, of Spring Hill, Kansas, will be at the Delphos camp-meeting."

E. T. Dickinson writes: "Elder Myrick seems quite proud of the fact that he is a 'doubting Thomas' regarding spirit inspiration, and seems to think Mrs. Richmond could have given that masterly Ingersoll lecture herself just as well as not. Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond has been in the spiritual lecture field at least forty years, and been more constantly employed in the arduous labors of spreading the spiritual philosophy than any other medium that could be mentioned. Let anyone who is not laboring under prejudice, read her lectures on 'Life, Its Origin, and Its Mysteries;' or the lecture on 'Spiritual Chemistry,' inspired by the late Prof. James J. Mapes, and then to say the medium herself is equal to all this, unaided, is indeed most preposterous. The great Ingersoll lecture is certainly one of the most remarkable productions that could be given to show the personality of the silver-tongued orator. Let the Elder get genuine tests from the spirit side of life, and he will without a doubt become a changed man. As it is, he might as well contend that A. J. Davis and Hudson Tuttle wrote two or three dozen sturdy volumes on the spiritual philosophy, minus spirit aid, or that Miss Lizzie Doten's poems from the Inner Life, and Poems of Progress, took shape after a brief mental pastime of a few moonlight nights."

A two-story cottage at the Chesterfield Camp, Ind., belonging to the late Mrs. Colby Luther, has been dedicated to the use of speakers.

The State Spiritualists' Association of Minnesota will hold their annual convention in the Unitarian Church, Minneapolis, September 7, 8 and 9. Special railroad rates to the State Fair, held that week, can be obtained. Amongst the talent engaged are G. W. Kates, Mrs. Zaida Brown Kates, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Max Hoffman, Mrs. C. D. Pruden, and the excellent local workers of the State. A large convention is expected.

She had been wrestling with a new cook in the kitchen and she had found her to be sadly deficient in the needed art. For two weeks she had been expecting company before whom she wished to show herself in the light of an excellent housekeeper. The guests were some relatives of her husband whom she had never seen. She was a young wife, noted widely for her outspoken ways and her native wit. The day came and the hour and she realized that not in one particular but in many the dinner fell short of her expectations. They had sat down at the table, which, she thanked her stars, looked pretty enough for a better meal than was to follow. Turning to her young and proud husband, who was at the head, she said in tones of deep conviction: "Now, Frank, ask a good blessing, for we have a devil of a cook."

C. W. Burrows, M. D., pastor of the Spiritual Union, sends the following: "The fifth in the Union course of summer lectures at the Occult Temple, 132 Michigan avenue, Detroit, Mich., will be delivered by Lyman C. Howe, the noted trance speaker, August 2. The sixth and seventh lectures by Rev. Moses Hull, on August 21-22. On the 21st Mr. Hull will deliver his famous lecture on 'Joan of Arc,' the mediumistic heroine of Orleans, for the first time in this city. On the 22d Mr. Hull will deliver the dedicatory address of the newly re-built Occult Temple. The dedicating to the cause of Spiritualism of a place sacred to spirit communion marks an epoch in the history of our cause in the city."

The Philadelphia Item says: "For some time each morning Mrs. Amanda Kerr, of Connelsville, Pa., has noticed that the board walk in her yard has been displaced or overturned, the sod dug up and the flowers uprooted. When Mrs. Kerr, a boarder named John Grindell and several other people were sitting on the poarch, a figure of a woman approached and said: 'Will no person here help me find my husband? I murdered him somewhere about this place years ago and I cannot find his body, although I have been digging up the yard here and all around for many nights.' The spook seemed to address her queries especially to Grindell. 'You,' she said, 'are old and must have known something of the deed at the time I killed my husband.' 'But I have no shoes or socks on,' answered Grindell. 'Wait till I put them on and I will help you find your husband's body.' 'No, come at once, or it is in vain,' was the answer. And while Grindell went in to get his shoes the spook, to the wonder of all the people on the porch, suddenly melted into the air and disappeared. Mrs. Kerr's house was formerly one of the best boarding houses in Connelsville, and has an interesting history connected with it. Mrs. Kerr says she is not afraid of the spook, but she insists that her premises must not be dug up in the future. It is said that in the early days of the house a man and woman stopped over night in the place, and that in the morning the man could not be found."

R. A. C. Mack writes extolling the late article by Dr. Peebles. He doesn't like the harsh views of Mr. Loveland when speaking of the Savior and the Bible. Nor does he like the views expressed on prayer. He says: "God does answer prayer, but not in accordance with its quantity, but according to its sincerity and quality. If most of men's prayers were granted as they request, it would put them in the insane asylum, because a nation's ignorance or selfishness, like that of India, or the Boers of Africa, is so great and widespread that the spirit of God cannot permeate and control the masses to know what is for their good and best interest, and lead them to act accordingly, and they become the victims of famine and subjects of a stronger power."

A special dispatch to the Inter Ocean from Washington, D. C., says: "A fraud order was issued to-day against Francis Truth and the Francis Truth Institute of Divine Healing, of Boston, Mass., by the Postoffice Department. Francis Truth advertised himself as a divine healer, capable of successfully treating any disease that flesh is heir to, the only requirement being that the suffering patient place his faith and a fee at the disposal of the healer. It was not necessary that the patient be in the presence of the healer to obtain the treatment, as the divine power was supposed to flow free and unobstructed for any distance, provided that it was the will of the healer that it should do so. In fact patients from a distance were more desired than those who could observe the actions of the healer. In a criminal trial held in Boston recently Truth pleaded guilty to the charge of obtaining money through the mails under false pretenses, and the mail coming to his address, which has been held at the postoffice at Boston since his arrest, is now being returned to the writers."

A Grand Rapids (Mich.) paper says: "Even the spirits of the upper world can't get news from Pekin. According to Frank Ripley, one of the mediums now in attendance at the Briggs Park Camp-meeting, the condition of affairs in China is such that the inhabitants of the ethereal world cannot penetrate to the scene of hostilities or gain a knowledge of the happenings here for those who are anxiously awaiting it there. He says the whole world will war with China; Russia first, because she will never forgive China for the wrongs done to her diplomats, and the other nations quickly after. America will hold off as long as possible, however, on account of her varied interests in that country and because of her philanthropy."

F. H. Coggeshall writes from Lowell, Mass.: "There have been a few changes in our executive board, among them is the retirement of Mr. J. Banks, our secretary. Mr. Jos. J. Devine has been elected to fill the vacancy. We are having excellent results at our grove meetings, the attendance running between 150 and 200, and much interest is being manifested. I am also pleased to inform you that your efforts through the columns of The Progressive Thinker are reaching quite a number here, and trust ere long that we shall feel obliged to increase our order."

The Banner of Light well says: "It will be seen from the letter of Lyman C. Howe, on our sixth page, that our esteemed friend and co-worker, W. H. Bach, the wide-awake editor of The Sunflower, is seriously ill at his home in Lily Dale, N. Y. Mr. Bach has been an indefatigable worker for Spiritualism ever since the knowledge of spirit communion was vouchsafed to him. Whenever the call came he was ready to respond; wind and rain could not stop him, and he never failed to appear at the post of duty according to promise. He has ever been keenly alive to the needs of our beloved cause, and has freely given of his best to make Spiritualism represent the best and truest thought of the age. He has worked with might and main to sustain the idea of practical co-operation, and has verily turned night into day to accomplish the purposes for which he labored As a natural result, he has overworked, and is now suffering from the consequences of the same. He seemed a tireless worker, but nature has at last rebelled, and demanded a respite. W. H. Bach cannot be spared at the present time; his services to the cause, and his worth as a man, are too valuable to be dispensed with now. He must get well; therefore, we second Brother Howe's suggestion that the thoughts freighted with the balm of healing be wafted to him on his sick bed, coupled with the invigorating mental suggestion that he must at once begin to get well. Brother Bach, the best wishes of thousands are with you in your hour of suffering, as well as their sincere sympathy. All say with us, 'You must get well!'"

The Chicago Tribune of August 4, says: "Mrs. Elizabeth Fitzgerald, a medium, who, it is said, is wanted in almost every large city in the United States on charges of swindling, has been arrested. She is now on her way to New York in custody of Detective Sergeant Murphy, of that city, where she is wanted on a charge of extortion. On this charge Mrs. Fitzgerald was arrested in Chicago four months ago, but was released through habeas corpus proceedings. She eluded the police until Tuesday night, when she was arrested on Sixty-third street, near Stony Island avenue. Detective Sergeant Murphy came to Chicago to take back to New York John Clark, deputy collector of the municipal revenues in New York City. When he arrived here he found two prisoners to go back instead of one."

Mrs. C. H. Mullins writes from Owosso, Mich.: "Mrs. Hattie B. Sears and I left Reed City, July 31, having spent three weeks at Dr. Spinney's sanitarium. Fifty or more attended the Freedom meeting last Wednesday, which was held in the sanitarium hall. Many were present who had never attended a Spiritualist meeting before. After being at the sanitarium, and seeing and knowing how Dr. Spinney is struggling to reach out to the needy ones, I feel that every Spiritualist ought to help him in his noble work. Kind thoughts and cheering words are helpful, but they will not buy bread and butter. Dr. Spinney needs financial aid, I feel he deserves it. We found Reed City ready to accept our truth. We started the ball to rolling, and I know no better way to keep it rolling than to have everyone to read The Progressive Thinker. I herewith send names and hope ere long that many more will subscribe."

Sam A. Foss, physical and business medium, has removed to 592 W. Van Buren street, Flat C.

Thos J. Haynes writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "A pleasant affair was the surprise on our chairman, Mr. Carpenter, on last Tuesday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter were the workers for the society in the city when the camp was started, and their efforts were a great help to us at that time. As an expression of our appreciation, we presented to Mrs. Carpenter last year a diamond ring. In order that the public might know that Mr. Carpenter's work was appreciated equally with that of his excellent wife, the friends of our chairman among whom we wish as officers to be classed, got together and purchased him a ring. While it was not a diamond, it was an emerald of purity and great value, the purchase price being $40. It was presented to him by our treasurer, Mr. Baldwin. He was greatly surprised and I think pleased as well. He will take with him from us our kindest love and best wishes when he leaves us."

Columbus Wells writes: "Did it ever occur to the re-incarnationists that their theory of re-incarnation has never been proved? Scientific facts always carry with them the proof of their truthfulness, therefore re-incarnation must fall to the ground; for the want of proof it must remain a theory and a belief."

Dr. A. B. Spinney writes from Reed City, Mich.: "Mrs. C. H. Mullins and Mrs. Hattie Sears, of Chicago, have been visiting at my sanitarium the past three weeks, and doing some good work for the cause. Mrs. Sears gave a fine intellectual spiritual address in Sanitarium Hall, each Sunday at 3 p. m., followed by Mrs. Mullins with tests. They gave a satisfactory seance, delighting and instructing the Spiritualists of Owosso, Mich., on August 1, at the home of Mrs. John Steggall. Sunday, August 5, they will be at Haslett Park, later at Grand Ledge and other camps. They are workers who are unselfishly giving their lives and gifts to the cause of Spiritualism of the good of humanity. They did not forget The Progressive Thinker, but spoke of its noble Mission, and were actively engaged in obtaining subscribers for it."

D. E. Griffith writes from St. Paul, Minn.: "The third annual convention of the State Spiritualists' Association of Minnesota will be held in Minneapolis, Sept. 7, 8 and 9, at the Unitarian church, 8th and Mary Place. Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, president of the New York State Spiritualists' Association, Dr. J. M. Peebles, of Battle Creek, Mich., Max Hoffman, the celebrated slate writer and test medium, of Chicago, G. W. Kates and wife, and other promising workers will take part in the convention. Our State Association has made a splendid record for the year. Through the excellent work of Brother G. W. Kates and wife, who have been doing missionary work throughout the state, we now boast of seventeen chartered societies."

Ben F. and Mattie E. Hayden write from Hickman, Neb.: "We passed through Iowa, stopping at Webster City, Fort Dodge, Atlantic, Avoca and Council Bluffs; then to Omaha, Lincoln and Beatrice, Neb. At each of these places we find quite a number of honest and sincere Spiritualists; but in every place we have to confront the same general condition, the same complaint, viz., 'We have been duped and swindled so often by wolves in sheep's clothing that we are compelled to hold all at arm's length for fear of again being duped.' Everywhere we hear the same general remark: 'If a good, honest medium would locate here, and prove their work by close acquaintance, they would have all the work they could possibly do, but our folks are afraid of strangers, and are slow to extend fellowship to such for fear they may have reason to regret having done so.' The limited time we had to spend in each locality we visited, prevented our coming in contact with all who are quietly interested in our cause; but we feel that we have sown seed in each place that will finally ripen into a harvest, and we are proud to say we have made many warm friends, who increased in numbers daily with our stay, and always many regrets were expressed at our not remaining longer. For the past two weeks we have been visiting among relatives, but the coming week we will again take up the work at the camp at Ottawa, Kansas, where we are engaged for the entire meeting; after which we will be glad to serve societies anywhere at a reasonable compensation. Our guides have dedicated anew our lives to this grand philosophy of uplifting humanity, and helping man to understand his nature, usefulness and destiny as an immortal entity in the realm of nature."

James Boyd writes from Riverside, Cal.: "Allen Franklin Brown, a well-known eastern lecturer, psychometrist and missionary worker, recently from Texas, has been holding meetings in Riverside and San Bernardino with much acceptance. He is also in the interests of the Southern California Camp-meeting Association, of which he has been chosen presiding officer and conductor for the coming meeting in September. His work here was much appreciated by those who heard him, and the camp-meeting association appears to have selected the right man for the work."

Dr. Peebles, after having a sitting with Mrs. M. St. Omer Briggs, at Island Lake Camp, states that the reading was not only excellent and spiritual in quality, but was convincing and uplifting. Such messages as come through her inspired lips are freighted with the very breath of heaven.

Stephen R. Allen writes from Allegheny, Pa.: "There recently appeared in our midst a young man who called himself King Turner, and who posed as a trance medium. He had a suite of room at the Victoria Hotel (our leading hotel) and advertised extensively, and did a large business. Not until he left did any of us know he was a fake. After he had humbugged the community to his hearts desire, he left, leaving behind his 'test book,' it containing the names of some of our leading citizens, and also the names of those who were in spirit life. So you see all he had to do was to look over his book and then go into a 'trance' and tell you some startling things. There are several people whom he humbugged and who are desirous of locating him. I have investigated the case fully and now believe he is Lionel J. Hartwell, who has until a short time ago been associated with the notorious Jules Wallace. They had trouble in New Haven, Conn., where Wallace was arrested for practicing fraud under the name of Prof. Warde, and they dissolved partnership, and he is now working the gullible as easily as the malodorous Jules has done. I hope you will publish this and do all you can to help locate this smooth-tongued fake. He is about 6 feet 2 inches, weighs about 175, black hair, gray eyes, and about 25 years of age. He is a handsome fellow, and while here had several of our best-known young ladies out riding and to places of amusement, and no doubt some of their well-filled purses are missing along with him. If this succeeds in locating him, telegraph at my expense, at the following address and I will be very thankful. 1118 Washington street, Allegheny, Pa."

Island Lake Camp, Mich.

After such lectures given by Rev. Dr. Austin, with his eloquence and logic, next in order came the veteran Dr. Peebles, who spoke of the creeds and orthodoxy, as back chapters and dead issues the preachers were afraid to defend. The Doctor's lectures have been historical, inspiring and constructive. Spiritualism has become an established fact. It has its millions of devotees. How are we applying its truth and principles? It is not enough to know we exist, but how we do exist, and under what conditions. The Doctor answered the question of what became of idiots, murderers and suicides after death. His illustrations were apt, and some of them very pathetic, that many wept for the 'poor in spirit,' and some in joy. His lecture on India was greatly enjoyed. It was said by some who heard him forty years ago that he speaks now with more eloquence and vim than he did in his younger days, although he is now almost eighty. The 31st was his day to bid us adieu, which was done with all the pathos of a man who never expected to see us again, although he is preparing for another tour around the world.

The camp is progressing nicely, with new campers.

Lily Dale Camp.

The speaker for Grand Army Day was Rev. Morgan Wood, whose unique style and vigorous handling of his subject was greeted with much applause. Mr. Wood is a careful man, and prudently stays within the pale of the church while preaching the essence of Spiritualism. We hope he is as free as he thinks he is—and possesses for himself the strict adherence to principle which he so much admires in others. The broadness of the platform at Lily Dale is an indication of the broadness of the principles of Spiritualism; and no matter whether in the church or out, there is room for all liberal-minded thinkers. But a Lily Dale audience is quick to detect the ring of genuineness, and is critical while it is tolerant.

President Gaston assumed the duties of chairman for the afternoon, while Bro. Brooks took a half holiday.

Prof. Lockwood has followed Mr. Wright with a series of private classes which are well attended. These classes along scientific lines are doing much to instruct, and lead the investigator into broader fields of thought and places them upon a solid foundation whence the different phases of phenomena can be more accurately judged.

Hon. A. B. Richmond occupied the rostrum Tuesday afternoon, Methodism versus Spiritualism being the subject of his address, and it was an able effort which was well received.

A pleasant feature of the camp are the Forest Temple meetings held evenings and mornings in the wood.

We have with us this week Cora L. V. Richmond, Prof. Lockwood, Mr. Wilde and Mr. Grimshaw, beside many other prominent workers whose names I cannot mention.

There are many Canadian visitors and we are told there are more coming. The attendance increases and the interest unflagging—and more strangers than ever before.

So the good work goes on while the field of Spiritualism broadens, and the seed gathered here will find soil in every State in the Union.

MARY WEBB-BAKER.

Anniversary of the Wigwam, Onset, Mass.

On Monday, July 30, there was gathered together a large company of friends to re-dedicate the Wigwam which was erected to commemorate the memory of the Red Men, and to the credit of its president and co-workers is now free of debt—something to be proud of, for the fact of them giving free meetings and to aid in the development of spiritual gifts which constitute every form of manifestations of spirit. It was not a gathering as some would say of the lower order of intelligences, but of bright-looking men and women if we are to judge by what is expressed in thought. Then Onset and her judges need not be ashamed of the patrons of the Wigwam, and I predict, gifted with prophecy, that in years to come some of the crude talent or infantile mediumship will be shining lights in the future of Spiritualism, for Spiritualists must go back to their first principles. That is to say, as the churches have cornered God, so have they cornered mediumship. They have catered to a few knowalls, have selected a few to voice the truths of Spiritualism regardless of many essentials, have voiced none practical, and ignored the plain, practical, everyday facts of life given to the few, the higher ethical presentation of Spiritualism, while there are thousands starving as infants of the larger growth, seeking the a b c of Spiritualism.

I have been a worker for ten years, have witnessed many manifestations of spirit power, but never in all my experience have I ever seen such demonstrations of spirit as I did on Monday, July 30. It was the experience of the mediums and those that have been benefited by practical Spiritualism.

The Wigwam is a place of liberty and freedom of expression that I have failed to find in other organizations. Seated in the heart of nature and her glorious surroundings, its walls decorated with the beautiful, cleanliness and order, inspiration and power must come to those that sit within, and I must confess that I can breathe in my soul the spirit of truth and independence. I have never felt this in the selfish organizations I have mingled with in my many years of toil for the spirit world.

When we affiliate with nature and natural law, practical harmony, so little understood, then indeed, will be the dawn of the new dispensation. May God and the angel world sustain all those who are sacrificing their lives for the sake of humanity, and while they are so little appreciated here, there is a life where compensation is their inheritance. May the noble woman who has worked as an officer in the Wigwam since its erection find compensation in the angel world.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

—OR—

DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the several loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

The Arcana of Spiritualism.

Now that all subscribers to the Arcana of Spiritualism have at last received the book, I ask their pardon for the delay which has been as annoying to me as possibly to them. The publication was entirely in the hands of the English house, and farther than forwarding subscriptions I had no voice. The book was larger than at first anticipated, and hence the cost greater. Subscribers received their books at the stated price, but the orders cannot now be filled for less than $1.50 postpaid, for the muslin bound, or $2.50 for full morocco, gilt. A small consignment has been imported, to avoid too long delay in forwarding orders.

I take this opportunity to thank the many friends who not only sent their subscriptions, but have since the reception of the book, sent what is more valuable, words of their appreciation of its pages, and fraternal greeting. It is quite impossible for me to write, as my heart desires, personally to each and every one. HUDSON TUTTLE.

A. H. Frank: Q. In a recent publication on vegetarianism is the following, and it has been puzzling me very much:

"Do animals have rights? If no, what is the excuse for the existence of our humane societies? Why prevent pounding, beating, laceration or mutilation of lower animal life? Why call flagellation and persecution of our brother creatures inhuman? On the other hand, if they do have rights, by what law? Is there any standard of right to living beings other than the law of justice? Not that is known to ethics. Then must we not inevitably come to the conclusion that all animals have equal rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that ultimately man will recognize that his more lowly brother-animals must be his companions in life and not his clothing and fodder?"

A. To admit that all animals have equal rights with man to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, commits to the most absurd conclusions. The microbe which breeds fever in the veins, or destroys the tissue of the lungs, must not be destroyed, but go on in "life, liberty and pursuit of happiness." The wild animals that destroy the products of cultivation, the insect pests against which perpetual warfare must be waged to save the fruits and grains, all have a right to live as they please! Man must not resent the attack of the mosquito, who has a right to its natural diet of blood! The writer in his sympathy for lower beings, forgets the fundamental law which overrides all palliative conceptions of morality. The highest law known in the realm of living beings is that those who make the best use of their environments have the right of existence over those who do not. This is true of the races of mankind—the race making the best use of the earth, has the title deed against all inferior races. The Indian had no right to hold 3,000 acres, for his miserable support by the chase, against the Anglo-Saxon, who for all the advantages of his superior cultivation requires not half a score. The race that uses the land to best advantage has the right to the land.

If this be true of the races of mankind, it has far greater force applied to the supremacy of man over the lower animals. If the doctrines quoted were practiced, the multiplication of animals would extinguish the human race. Mankind in its infancy had a desperate struggle against the animals of the wild. Armed only with a club or stone, he fought for existence against the huge bear, the terrible lion, and smote the huge mastodon. He was physically weakest of all, but more crafty than the wolf, or the tiger, and his art outwitted the strength of the lion. He fought his way to supremacy. He had no choice. He must kill or be killed, feed or be fed upon.

His diet was mixed; wild fruits, grains he learned to cultivate, and the products of the chase.

Briefly such was his early estate. With the increase of knowledge, and growing density of population, the products of agriculture more and more supplied the demands for food, and domestic animals the place of those of the chase.

These domestic animals are truly creatures of his creation, and are not found in the wild state. He has through ages cultivated the wild stock until he has modified it to suit his purposes.

Now, aside from all questions of justice, right, morals or sentiment, man, to exist, must be lord of the world. The condition of India shows the result where, by superstition, this law is ignored. These animals are sacred because the doctrine of reincarnation declares that these animals are embodied spirits—perhaps relatives and friends—and thus at least 20,000 people a year perish by bite of poisonous serpents, or feed beasts of prey.

The wild animals, when they interfere with man must be destroyed. The domestic animals are well fed and cared for during their lives and perhaps the sum of enjoyment is greater for them than for the wild races.

In this discussion all turns on the meaning of Right. That which must be; which is of the order of the world, must be right, whatever be our conceptions of its morality.

That which gives the best results, and for generations has been observed to be of greater benefit to all, has been called right.

While the necessity for the destruction of animals exists, that man may have a place, there should be no cruelty, and as little pain as possible. Man's supremacy does not imply the right to inflict unnecessary pain. The best interests of all are subserved by humane treatment.

When man becomes spiritualized, he will shrink from flesh as food, with more and more aversion, but this does not enter into this question.

Mrs. Mary Brewerton: Such automatic movements when sitting in a circle are of common occurrence, and cease to be incongruous when there is perfect yielding to the control.

Student: Q. Why is the term "Modern Spiritualism" used in distinction from Spiritualism?

A. Spiritualism is as old as mankind, but there is a marked distinction in what is known as "modern."

"In the olden times a spirit appeared as a ghost, an intangible being that came uncalled and left the affrighted spectator a subject of ridicule. Spirits were lawless and came as warnings or without purpose.

"Modern Spiritualism came as a reaction against materialism, and the single idea which gave it birth was that ghosts or spirits were individualized entities subject to law. It is distinguished from the ancient by its sweeping claim that all spiritual phenomena and the evolution and existence of spirits is by the operation of fixed and ascertainable laws. Scientific men have investigated spirit phenomena in all its phases and have become satisfied that behind all the mystery there is the fact of spirit being and return.

"When the new Spiritualism was instituted fifty years ago, on March 31, intelligent answers were first received from ghosts or spirits. That day we celebrate as the advent of the new conception of the spirit world and spiritual existence. We have the means to communicate with the spirits at will by methods conforming to well fixed laws. We claim that the spirit is evolved as the last term of a long line of beings, the protoplasmic monad being the first. Death is only a transition to a higher plane. We are able to comply with the conditions which allow the spiritual beings to communicate with us in an orderly and legitimate manner. There are demands made by all religions of to-day or the past to have faith, to believe. The demand made by Spiritualism is to know."

The Delpit Outrage.

That marriage-annulment case in Quebec—the annulment by the ecclesiastical court of the marriage of one Delpit to Miss Cote—which marriage the priests now declare is null (after the wife has borne Delpit three children) because the couple were not married by a priest—should not be forgotten, because Rome boasts that she alone "keeps the marriage tie sacred." A writer in the Montreal Witness says:

"I always supposed that the civil code of this province expressed the laws relating to marriages performed within the province, but the Delpit case apparently ignores that code as if it never existed. Clause 128 orders 'that marriage must be solemnized openly by a competent officer recognized by law;' clause 129 states that 'all priests, rectors, ministers and other officers authorized by law to keep registers of acts of civil status are competent to solemnize marriage;' and clause 134 recognizes the validity of marriage licenses where bans are not called. So far, the Delpit marriage was no doubt in full accord with the code, for the Rev. Mr. Barnes is a competent officer, and he married the parties without any opposition, presumably under authority of a license granted by one commissioner to issue such documents. After living with his wife for a sufficient length of time to become the father of three children, Delpit seeks to have his marriage annulled on the plea that both himself and his wife were Roman Catholics when Mr. Barnes, a Protestant minister, married them, and consequently no real marriage was solemnized.

"One cannot understand in a free British country the Church of Rome saying to one of its members, and that a woman, 'Even though you are legally married in accordance with the laws of the country, even though you have borne three children to your husband, even though to annul your marriage is to degrade you to the lowest depths of a woman's degradation, we annul your marriage as if it never existed; we brand your children as illegitimate, and we brand you as an unmarried mother.' Under what laws of God or man has the Roman Catholic Church in the Province of Quebec received power to issue such a cruel, audacious, and I, according to my light, would say, disloyal judgment? And under what law has any Canadian judge the liberty of passing on a case justly brought before him to the barbaric cruelty of such a court? If such laws exist, let them be made known in the cause of humanity, to say nothing of religion, in order that members of the Roman Catholic Church may avoid marriages celebrated by Protestant clergy, and that such clergy may be saved the shame of being unconscious participators in acts of ultimate cruelty towards innocent people, that in the nature of things, as men, their souls would revolt from.

"Is there any act, law or agreement which places the Church of Rome in the Province of Quebec outside of and above the law of the province, and, if so, why? The various Protestant Churches are given power by law to regulate their own discipline of members, to appoint, depose and deprive officers, but they are given these powers on two distinct provisos—first, that they shall not interfere with the rights, etc., of other religious communities, and, second, that nothing they shall do shall be contrary to any law or statute, now or hereafter in force in this province; in other words, they are righteously and wisely bound, by the laws of the province. If the Church of Rome is not so bound the sooner it is bound the better, if only, as this Delpit case demands, in the interests of conjugal morality and common humanity.—Citizen, Boston.

Belvidere Seminary.

The fall term of this Home School for Youths of both sexes will begin September 24. Location healthy and beautiful. Adults prepared for college or business by experienced and liberal teachers. Its art departments include music, painting, mechanical drawing and literature. Its government is based on the Golden Rule; its coercive force is, therefore, the law of love; its motto "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city"; hence, in principle, its management is opposed to war, capital punishment and injustice in all the relations of life. Spiritualists and all progressive people are cordially invited to co-operate with its principals in their efforts to sustain a liberal and harmonious institution for the intellectual, moral and spiritual education of their children. Terms moderate. For circulars address Seminary, Belvidere, N. J. 5592t

Lake Brady, O.

Lake Brady still continues to be the center of attraction for all interested in spirit communion throughout the Western Reserve. However, we hear good reports from our sister camp, Maple Dell, situated at Mantua, O.

The social features of Lake Brady during the season so far have been above the average. A literary or musical entertainment and two public dances each week besides an occasional camp dance.

The delightful open air concerts given each evening by the orchestra add greatly to the general enjoyment. The orchestra is under the management of the famous Haines family, the present leader being Miss Lillie Haines, who is only fifteen years of age. She is a beautiful, spirituelle-looking child, and while playing seems inspired. Indeed, the phenomenal rapidity with which she has mastered the violin would indicate assistance from the higher powers.

The Mothers' Meeting address by Mrs. McCaslin was highly appreciated and many wish a repetition of it.

Lake Brady is well supplied with musical talent this season. Prof. Hans Metke and Frederick Fabrican are both exquisite performers, the former on the piano and cello, and the latter on the violin, and Mrs. Florence Russell, of Alliance, and Miss Fanny her daughter, respectively vocalist and accompanist, prepare the way for each lecture with their sweet inspiring songs. Mrs. Sadie Herrick, also a sweet singer, sometimes assists.

Oscar A. Edgerly gave us four excellent addresses during his engagement. He claims no education, no knowledge even of the utterances crossing his lips, and yet in grammar, rhetoric and all that goes to make up a pleasing address he has few superiors. The most remarkable discourses he gave were two, one immediately following the other, in which a deceased clergyman and a profound and scholarly atheist expressed his own peculiar views. Though both admitted they had been much modified since passing from earth life, they were still distinctly characteristic.

Lake Brady is still well supplied with mediumistic talent, two materializing and two trumpet mediums; Mrs. E. W. Sprague and Mrs. Ebertshauser, both excellent healing and business mediums, besides the famous Shepherd Brothers, magnetic healers, who have averaged from forty to fifty treatments a day. Then we have Madam Virginie Barrett, a French psychometrist and inspirational artist, and others.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague are still with us doing excellent work as speakers and test mediums.

MRS. M. M'CASLIN.

Onset, Mass.

I just thought we would waft a breeze from Onset to our friends in Chicago, and say to them that Onset is delightful, that the weather is perfect, that the nights are cool, and the days just right to make it an ideal place to spend your vacation. The management are doing all in their power to present the best philosophy and phenomena to the public, and it is appreciated by those attending the meetings. We have had lectures by Dr. G. A. Fuller, Prof. W. F. Peck, Mrs. Henrietta Kimball, Mrs. Sarah A Byrnes, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Dr. N. F. Ravlin, Prof. E. H. Griggs and Mrs. Ida P. A. Whitlock. Mediums so far Dr. Louis Schlesinger and Mrs. Effie I. Webster. All have done a grand work. Each one has a peculiarity unto themselves. Dr. N. F. Ravlin has awakened the people; he is so earnest and his lecture upon how he became a Spiritualist was one that touched the hearts of all who heard him. Prof. Griggs' lecture was an intellectual feast, and one could well afford to sit long at the table. We have many noted ones to come, and the month of August will be enjoyed by those having the privilege of attending the meetings.

Mr. A. J. Maxham is the singer of the camp and he is enjoyed by all who listen to him.

The large steamer comes in every Sunday and brings large crowds and there are excursions most every day upon the water in the steamer Genevieve.

Our conference meetings are quite a success, and are of profit to all.

There are many mediums upon the grounds—Mrs. C. B. Bliss, Mrs. Allbright, Mrs. Ritchie, Mrs. E. I. Webster and so many that it is a very easy matter for one to have an opportunity to learn as to the continuity of life.

The wigwam under the wise direction of Mrs. M. A. Weston is doing good They hold two meetings a day, one for healing in the morning, and the afternoon for whatever the spirit moves.

The bookstore is open, and anyone wishing to procure a copy of or subscribe for a year for The Progressive Thinker can have this opportunity at the camp. We hope the friends will respond. HATCH.

HOME CIRCLE.

Striking Experiences of an Attorney-at-Law.

To the Editor:—I occasionally see mention made in your paper of the "Home Circle," with encouraging editorials for their extension and inviting statements of the experiences of others, and herewith avail myself of that invitation to give you some of the experiences we have enjoyed in our home circle in this city.

Until very recently we have been meeting weekly at the beautiful home of Brother Markley, where six or eight, and not to exceed ten congenial friends form our circle, with the assistance of our little medium friend, Mrs. Inez Wagner, of this city, whose control is "Blossom," and whose revelations and phenomena are something wonderful. She generally gives full names, and her descriptions of spirit friends are so exact and minute in detail that we rarely ever fail to recognize them, and we feel very fortunate indeed, and greatly favored in having her most valuable assistance. She is certainly rapidly developing into one of the finest mediums in the West, and gives promise of a great future.

At our sittings we have raps in abundance, table tippings, and table raising clear of the floor, and messages and communications from the spirit friends of nearly every member of the circle, some of which I will give here.

A few years ago there was committed in this city one of the most bloody and atrocious murders that history has ever recorded. An old lady by the name of Matson, living alone, was brutally and foully murdered in her home, in a most cruel manner, by some unknown person. Shortly thereafter a young mulatto by the name of Frank Nevils was arrested charged with the crime. In connection with other attorneys I defended him, and the first trial resulted in a hung jury, but at his second trial he was convicted, and shortly thereafter committed suicide in jail.

To the time of sitting in this circle I had always believed in, and stoutly maintained his innocence, believing he was the victim of a conspiracy and was offered up as a sacrifice to appease the clamoring of an outraged community, that must needs have a victim.

On the evening I speak of, however, "Blossom," the medium's control, turning to me said: "Judge, here comes a colored man to you who is in great distress. His head is bowed so low I can't see his eyes." I told her to get his name, and she replied: "He says his name is Nevils, Frank Nevils." I then said: "Frank, I always believed, and do yet, that you were innocent of the crime with which you were charged, but I want to ask you this straightforward question, "Did you kill Mrs. Watson?" And much to my surprise and consternation, and against my own belief, his answer was "Yes." I then said, "What did you kill her for?"

He replied, "Money."

I again asked, "Did you get any money?" and he said, "Not very much." But I further insisted, asking him "How much? Was it as much as ten dollars?"

To which he replied, "No, I only got five dollars."

I respectfully refer this instance to Dr. Hudson, who claims in his "Law of Psychic Phenomena" that clairvoyancy is nothing more than telepathy, or mind-reading. Yet these disclosures were the exact reverse of my mind, I believing all the time that he was innocent. There certainly could be no mind-reading about that, for had it been, the disclosures would have been the opposite of what they were. Remember that the medium through whom this was gotten, was not a resident of this country when the crime was committed and knew nothing of it.

One more instance I desire to give you, with which I will close.

On the 28th day of October, 1899, I lost by death one of the dearest little wives God ever gave to man. Her taking off was rather sudden. I was then an infidel, a believer in nothing supernatural or hereafter. I stood at her bedside as she breathed her last, the doctor on one side of me and the nurse on the opposite side of the bed. She had been unconscious for more than a day and her eyes were closed, but just as she was gasping her last breath, a most wonderful expression came over her features as of wonder or surprise. I called the doctor's attention to it at the time and said: "Doctor, what does she see? What does she see? Look at that expression."

But the doctor shook his head, saying, "I don't know."

At one of our circles the spirit of my mother came to me through "Blossom," of course, and I asked her, "Mother, have you met Emma, my wife, in the spirit land?" and she replied, "Yes, we are constantly together. I stood at her bedside when she passed out. My arms were laden with flowers, and when she looked up and saw me, she looked surprised. Do you remember that look?"

No one present in that circle knew anything about that occurrence.

To an investigator as I am, such evidences are simply paralyzing, and particularly so when unaccompanied with any mercenary motives, as money formed no part of the consideration, and was no feature of the circle, only a small home gathering of friends, earnestly seeking the truth.

MOST WONDERFUL BOOKS.

The Warfare of Science With Theology.

A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom. By ANDREW D. WHITE, LL. D., late President and Professor of History at Cornell University. In Two Volumes. 8vo. Cloth, Five Dollars. For Sale at This Office.

In these two large volumes are combined information that the reader could not find in the libraries of the world in fifty years. It shows the constant and determined opposition of Theology to the advancement that has been made in every branch of Science. To the Student it is indispensible. Every Free Thought Speaker should have it. It should circulate in every community. It goes into minute details, citing in all cases the authority, showing the persistency of Theology in fighting new and advanced ideas in Science.

"The magnum opus of the eminent ex-President of Cornell plants a new and notable milestone along the highway of ever-advancing human thought. The work is the masterpiece of a mind as devoid of wanton iconoclasm as of moral cowardice. It is a definite statement of where the best thinkers of the world now stand in the religio-scientific conflict. It is clear, honest, brave, and must be given a place among the great books of the year."—Chicago Tribune.

"The most valuable contribution that has yet been made to the history of the conflict between the theologians and the scientists; struggles that have alarmed timid Christians, but, as Mr. White shows, there was no occasion for alarm. The several chapters are extremely interesting, and while President White never flinches in telling the whole truth, as he thinks science has ascertained it, he is nowhere irreverent. He confronts truth, takes its hand, and follows boldly wherever truth bids him come."—Buffalo Commercial.

"The book is written almost colloquially, and so interestingly as to enchain the attention at once, and keep it enchained. Concise as a history of the universe could be made, tabulated so that instant reference to a particular bit of history, theory, or biography may be had, it will be valuable as a lexicon relating to religious controversy. It is crammed with information, sorted, sifted, winnowed, and prepared for the consumer, as reading it is of an absorbing interest, and it will probably provoke answering arguments."—Chicago Times-Herald.

"Undoubtedly the most exhaustive treatise which has been written on this subject. It is able, scholarly, critical, and impartial in tone."—Boston Daily Advertiser.

"A literary event of prime importance is the appearance of 'A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom.'"—Philadelphia Press.

These two large volumes, containing about 900 pages, will be sent to any address on the receipt of the price, Five Dollars.

"THE LANGUAGE OF THE STARS."

A Primary Course of Lessons in Celestial Dynamics.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LIGHT OF EGYPT."

This important primary work is the first practical exposition of the Astro-Magnetic forces of Nature—in their relation to man—that has yet been issued by the American press. It contains fourteen special lessons, embracing each department of human life, in such plain, simple language that a child can understand the elementary principles laid down. And in addition to these lessons is an Appendix, containing a full explanation of all technical and scientific terms in general use upon the subject, thus forming a brief, yet practical Astro Dictionary. This work is illustrated with special plates.

ENCYCLOPEDIA ... OF ... BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM ... OR ... A CONCORDANCE

To the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism;

Together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible.

BY MOSES HULL.

Much that is in this book appeared in an abridged form in a series of nine full pages of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. These articles were prepared at the call of hundreds of Spiritualists who felt the need of some kind of document for ready reference. They only seemed to whet the appetite for more; hence the publication of this work.

The author, Moses Hull, has written many volumes on Spiritualistic and other themes and each one is full of careful study on the subject chosen. Mr. Hull, in his introduction of this work says:

"Hoping that this book will serve to lead the people out of the wilderness of doubt and despair; and that when Spiritualism shall have wrested the Bible from its 'sanctified' enemies, it will not 'spike' it, but will use it to batter down the walls of Christian superstition and ignorance, I send it out on its errand of enlightenment with the humble prayer that it will prove a divine benediction to every reader."

ROBERT OWEN.

"Book of the New Moral World."

THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF THE RATIONAL RELIGION.

"1. That all facts yet known to man indicate that there is an external or an internal cause of all existences, by the fact of their existence; that this all pervading cause of motion and change in the universe, is that Incomprehensible Power, which the nations of the world have called God, Jehovah, Lord, etc.; but that the facts are yet unknown to man which define what that hitherto Incomprehensible Power is.

"2. That it is a law of Nature obvious to our senses, that the internal and external character of all that have life upon the earth, is formed for them and not by them; that in accordance with this law, the internal and external character of man is formed for him and not by him; and that the knowledge of this fact, with its all-important consequences, will necessarily create in every one a new, sublime, and pure spirit of charity for the convictions, feelings and conduct of the human race, and dispose them to be kind to all that have life—seeing that this varied life is formed by the same Incomprehensible Power that has created human nature and given man his peculiar faculties.

"3. That it is man's highest interest to acquire an accurate knowledge of those circumstances which produce evil to the human race; and of those which produce good; and to exert all his powers to remove the former from society, and to create around it the latter only.

"4. That this invaluable practical knowledge can be acquired solely through an extensive search after truth, by an accurate, patient and unprejudiced inquiry into facts as developed by Nature.

"5. That man can never attain to a state of superior and permanent happiness until he shall be surrounded by those external circumstances which will train him, from birth, to feel pure charity and sincere affection toward the whole of his species—to speak the truth only, on all occasions—and to regard with a merciful and kind disposition all that has life.

"6. That such superior knowledge and feelings can never be given to man under those institutions of society which have been founded on the mistaken supposition that man forms his feelings and convictions by his will, and therefore, has merit or demerit, or deserves praise or blame, or reward or punishment for them.

"7. That under institutions formed in accordance with the Rational System of Society, this superior knowledge, and these superior dispositions, may be given to the whole human race, without chance of failure except in case of organic disease.

"8. That in consequence of this superior knowledge, and these superior dispositions, the contemplation of Nature will create in every mind feelings of high adoration, too sublime and pure to be expressed in forms or words, for that Incomprehensible Power which acts in and through all Nature, everlastingly composing, decomposing, and recomposing the material of the universe, producing the endless variety of life, of mind, and of organized form.

"9. That the Practice of the Rational Religion will therefore consist in promoting to the utmost of our power, the well-being and happiness of every man, woman and child, without regard to their class, sect, party, country, or color; and its worship, in those inexpressible feelings of wonder, admiration and delight, which, when man is surrounded by superior circumstances only, will naturally arise from the contemplation of the infinity of space, of the eternity of duration, of the order of the universe and of that Incomprehensible Power by which the atom is moved, and the aggregate of Nature is governed."

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

Passed to the higher life from his home in Lynn, Mass., July 23, 1900, Mr. M. V. B. Stevens. He was a charter member of the Lynn Spiritualists' Association, and its vice-president. Funeral services were conducted by Miss Lizzie Harlow. He leaves a widow who fully realizes the comfort and consolation to be found in the spiritual belief.
A. A. AVERILL.

Passed to spirit life, at our home, near Evansville, Ind., July 20, 1900, Cora Ellenora, infant daughter of George and Louisa Schmitt, at the tender age of 4 months and 10 days. Though it is sad to part with the mortal, yet we know that it is only temporary, and our loss is the spirits gain.
FRANK L. SCHMITT.
Evansville, Ind.

Passed to the higher life, from her home in Ottawa county, Mich., July 19, Maria C. Fellows, wife of J. M. Fellows, aged 74 years. Mrs. Fellows was a pioneer in the cause of Spiritualism, having embraced it forty-three years ago. Her fidelity to her religion, her kindly charity to any one in need, and her unfaltering trust in the highest meaning of Spiritualism, were well known, and with this knowledge of the beyond she welcomed death, and passed on without a struggle. 'Mid a profusion of flowers we laid her body away as she would have wished. She leaves a devoted husband and six children to mourn her physical absence. Her four sons acted as pall bearers. Mrs. Amanda Coffman, of Grand Rapids, officiated. She paid a tender tribute to the deceased and in a touching manner gave consolation to the mourners, teaching that death was but a birth into a higher life.
A. L. C.

Again, on the 26th ult., at the family residence, No. 2817 Columbus avenue, Minneapolis, the medium family of Mr. P. J. Dempsey has been called to mourn the passing away of another, in the person of the lovely daughter, Miss Marie, aged 22 years (the third within one year and four months, consisting of the mother and two daughters; all of whom were mediums). By request of the deceased, her remains were cremated at Forest Crematory, on Saturday, July 28. Many friends were in attendance. Services were conducted by Mrs. Whitwell and Mrs. Sauer, and while standing by the remains at the crematory, the spirit of the deceased controlled the latter lady, and spoke words of cheer and comfort to the family and friends. Having known deceased from her childhood days, I can speak from personal knowledge of her great worth to the cause, and that the many who through her mediumship have been led to embrace the grand truths of the spiritual philosophy, will greatly miss the genial companionship of this faithful sister.
St. Paul, Minn.
M. T. C. FLOWER.

Another one of our members has gone on to spirit life, in the person of Mr. Jonathan S. Rubicam, of Denver, Col. He passed over on May 24, of Bright's disease, aged 89 years In 1894 Mr. Rubicam was largely instrumental in forming the present society known as the Liberal Spiritual Society, and has been a trustee ever since. The society feels his loss, as he was such a great help every way to the society. The members all turned out in a body, with emblems, in appreciation of his noble deeds in behalf of humanity. The temple was filled with sympathetic friends who listened to the consoling words as given by the guide of Rev. W. E. Mansfield. W.
Denver, Colo.

Passed to the higher life, from his home near Sunfield, Mich., July 25, Dr. George W. Lusk, aged 70 years. He was one of the old pioneers in the spiritual field; a good lecturer and a grand healer; a kind and sympathetic friend; a loving husband and father. He left the world better for his having lived in it. He was a member of the G. A. R., also the Odd Fellows. Both societies attended the funeral in a body. He leaves a faithful wife and loving daughter to mourn his loss.

OUR PREMIUMS.

There are many Spiritualists who know a good thing when they see it. There are others, however, who do not seem to realize what is going on around them, and therefore miss many chances to enrich their minds and enlarge their understanding. Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World is furnished to our subscribers at less than cost, and should be in every family in the United States, whether Spiritualists or not. Volumes 1, 2 and 3 constitute a wonderful magazine of thought on Death in its multifarious phases; in fact you can not find in all the libraries of the world as valuable information in regard to Death as you will have presented to you in these three volumes. They are nicely printed, neatly and substantially bound, and are an ornament to any library. Volume 3 is furnished at 25 cents, much less than the actual cost to us, and the three volumes, when ordered in connection with a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, only cost $1.10. The aggregate cost of the three books to the trade is $4.50. At this price, these three books ought to be in every Spiritualist family.

The Progressive Thinker is the first Spiritualist paper to inaugurate the Divine Plan—a portion of the profits of the office returning to subscribers in valuable books.

"Origin of Life, or Where Man Comes From." "The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter Through Organic Processes, or How the Spirit Body Grows." By Michael Faraday. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"Poems of Progress," By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

"Heliocentric Astrology or Essentials of Astronomy and Solar Mentality, with Tables of Ephemeris from 1830 to 1910." By Yarmo Vedra, For sale at this office. Price, $1.50.

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism. A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, lecturer upon physical, physiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the molecular or spiritual hypothesis of nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THOUSANDS CURED!

Marvelous Has Been the Success of This Well-Known Healer in Curing Chronic and Obstinate Cases.

J. M. PEEBLES, A.M., M. D., PH.D.

If Sick Read His Liberal Offer, Then Consult Him and Be Healed.

Half a century spent in successfully treating chronic diseases and the unsolicited testimonials from thousands of those whom he has cured, after the best local physicians had failed to give permanent relief, have gained for DR. J. M. PEEBLES a reputation that extends from ocean to ocean, as the most successful practitioner and healer in AMERICA.

This eminent man, whose life has been devoted to the relief of suffering humanity, is not only a graduate of the best medical colleges of this country, but he has counseled with the best medical men in every country on the globe, and his study and research after knowledge that would enable him to benefit those around him who are suffering from chronic diseases, has taken him three times around the world, and to-day his advice and counsel is sought after not only by chronic invalids who have learned his ability to cure these troubles, but also by many physicians as well.

This great and true Healer was one of the pioneers in the study and investigation of the Psychic Science, one of the greatest and most wonderful of all the sciences, and one which is destined to do more for the sick and suffering than any other agency ever discovered. He has made a study of this subject for over half a century, and is to-day considered by the advanced students of this grand science the greatest Psychic living. You should read his late essay on this subject, entitled, "The Psychic Science in the Art of Healing," which he will send you free of cost with the diagnosis if you desire it. Learn for yourself of this wonderful power which may be developed by all. The learned physician who fully understands the Psychic Science can read the human body like an open book. All Dr. Peebles' diagnosing is done by the aid of this occult science. All that is necessary for you to do to receive a complete and accurate diagnosis of your case is to write the Doctor a plain honest letter in your own handwriting. If you will do this, he will send you a diagnosis free of all cost and special advice concerning your case, also his essay spoken of above and other literature explaining fully his methods of treatment and testimonials showing some of the most remarkable cures ever performed.

Thousands of sufferers are treated by physicians who do not know positively where the seat of trouble lies. They experiment for weeks trying to hit upon the right point. The result is that instead of getting relief, the patient gradually grows worse and the case becomes, as they term it, "chronic," and at last the poor sufferer receives that awful sentence, "Your case is hopeless." With Dr. Peebles there are no hopeless cases. His life has been devoted to conquering disease, and the tens of thousands of lives he has saved, the thousands of so-called invalids he has made healthy men and women, and the countless number of homes in every part of the world his wonderful skill has brightened, are testimonies of his ability to treat all kinds of chronic diseases.

Remember that Dr. Peebles does not cure by Christian Science, Mesmerism, or any other "ism," but uses mild magnetized remedies in connection with his Psychic treatment. "These Psychic treatments," says one of his patients, "seem as if they would almost raise the dead." Every effect has its cause, and if the cause is seen and removed the effect will cease—health will ensue. What is your condition? It is within your power to know. If he can tell you the exact cause of your trouble, he can bring relief and without doubt a cure. This he can do, and it will cost you not one cent to test it. In order to inspire confidence in those who have been given up beyond hope, he will diagnose all cases free of charge. All that is required is for you to write the Doctor an honest letter, giving in your own writing your name, age, sex, and leading symptom. If you will do this, he will return your diagnosis at once and will also give you special advice concerning your case. A letter of advice from this great and true physician, whose life has been devoted to relieving the suffering of his fellow-men, drives back the cloud of despair and comes like a ray of sunshine into the chronic invalid's darkened sky.

Remember that it costs you nothing to write the Doctor and learn your true condition. Write to day and learn your exact condition, and also ask for literature that will give you a full knowledge of this wonderful method of curing disease.

Send in notice of meetings held on Sunday at public halls.

Bear in mind that only meetings held in public halls will be announced under the above head. We have not space to keep standing notices of meetings held at private residences.

VOLUMES 1, 2 and 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Art Magic, Ghost Land, The Next World Interviewed, and the Occult Life of Jesus (including the Hull-Covert Debate) constitute our premium list. Those seven books have been on sale, costing the buyer in the aggregate, $10.75. We, after paying the postage and expense of mailing, realize only $1.50 for the seven—far less than cost to us. We desire to form the nucleus of a library in every Spiritualist home, hence this remarkable offer. By subscribing for The Progressive Thinker, you then have the privilege of purchasing these books at the premium prices. See terms on another page.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull For sale at this office. Price ten cents.

"The Bridge Between Two Worlds." By Abby A. Judson. This book is dedicated to all earnest souls who desire, by harmonizing their physical and their psychical bodies with universal nature and their souls with the higher intelligences, to come into closer connection with the purer realms of the spirit world. It is written in the sweet spiritual tone that characterizes all of Miss Judson's literary works. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 75 cents. For sale at this office.

"Principles of Light and Color." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A truly great work of a master mind, and one whom Spiritualists should delight to honor. The result of years of deep thought and patient research into Nature's finer forces are here gathered and made amenable to the well-being of humanity. Medical men especially, and scientists, general readers and students of occult forces will find instruction of great value and interest. A large, four-pound book, strongly bound, and containing beautiful illustrative plates. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $5. It is a wonderful work and you will be delighted with it.

CLUBS!

CLUBS CLUBS

We want ten thousand clubs formed in every part of the United States, for which we present inducements never before offered by any Spiritualist paper. These clubs must consist of ten subscribers, and each one will get Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death; or if they would prefer it, they can have the Next World Interviewed. They can have their choice of the two. Each subscriber in order to avail himself of this offer must pay $1.15. The fifteen cents is to pay expense of postage and mailing, and the books sent out are practically a gift. They are not cheap affairs; they are nicely and substantially bound in cloth, neatly printed in clear type and are ornaments to any center table. The contents are indeed valuable, such as every Spiritualist family should have. The aggregate price of these two books to the trade is $2.75. To each of our club subscribers one of these books is a gift, and when they receive the one of their choice they will be delighted with it, and will wonder how we can afford to do so much for them. The one who gets up the club will be entitled to The Progressive Thinker for one year, and Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, and also the Next World Interviewed. He will not only get The Progressive Thinker for one year, but both books. He gets what is equivalent to $3.75 for his trouble. There should be no difficulty whatever in getting up hundreds of clubs.

Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World will not only interest Spiritualists, but church members will be attracted to it. The Rev. M. J. Savage, a leading liberal divine of New York, leads off with several of his masterly productions, treating Death from an advanced standpoint. He is followed by leading Spiritualists who treat of Death in a philosophical and fascinating manner.

The Next World Interviewed is also a very excellent work. The plates of this book were donated to the office of The Progressive Thinker by Henry J. Horn. It consists of communications from the spirit side of life from leading minds there. Fifty-five communications are given by prominent personages, among them Prince Albert, Harriet Martineau, Judge Edmonds, Horace Greeley, Lord Lytton, Fanny Fern, Dr. Livingstone and the Czar of Russia.

TO CAMP-MEETING GOERS

And Spiritualists Generally Who Take no Spiritualist Papers, Greeting:

If you are a Spiritualist and read no Spiritualist paper, then, of course, you cannot know what is going on in our movement. To you it is midnight darkness in that one respect, however wise you may be in other directions. The Progressive Thinker, being the largest Spiritualist paper published, combining cheapness and excellence, it will be a splendid agent to keep you apprised of what is transpiring in the great Spiritualistic Cause. Thousands of Spiritualists who attend our camp meetings, take no Spiritualist paper. They will go there to have a spiritual feast, and then return home to remain in utter darkness and ignorance as to what is going on in our ranks throughout the world. We ask this class particularly to subscribe for The Progressive Thinker, and thus have their homes illuminated throughout the year.

We don't believe that more than one Spiritualist in ten who visits the camp-meetings takes a Spiritualist paper. We greatly desire to reach this class. We are sure The Progressive Thinker will be a benefit to them while they will be a benefit to us. The benefit derived will be reciprocal.

RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.

BY S. WEIL.

Cloth, $1.25. Paper, 50 cents.

This is a work of great value, written by one of the keenest, most powerful and most truly religious minds of the day. It is particularly a work which should be put into the hands of those who have freed themselves from the dogmas of orthodoxy and from the dogmas of materialistic science, for it will strengthen the conviction of the free mind that mind and senses are not the whole of life.

The chapters reveal a new method in psychic and spiritual research. They show vivid glimpses of a stupendous moral cosmos that will supersede mere confusion; that only veridable tenets can survive, and the childhood period of faith and creeds will be superseded by knowledge and facts. A Compendium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1, New White Cross Literature.

BY AUGUSTA W. FLETCHER, M. D.

In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well-handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. It will prove a rich addition to any Spiritualist's library, and a most excellent book for any one seeking information concerning Spiritualism and its teachings.

Discovery of a Lost Trail

BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,

Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by this wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail"

is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

The Soul of Things;

Or Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. By Wm. and Elizabeth M. F. Denton. A marvelous work. Though concise as a text book it is as fascinating as a work of fiction. The reader will be amazed to see the curious facts here combined in support of this power of the human mind, which will resolve a thousand doubts and difficulties, make geology plain as day, and throw light on all subjects now obscured by time. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

In three volumes, cloth bound, $1.50 each.

The Christ Question Settled

JESUS, MAN, Medium, Martyr.

A Symposium by W. E. Coleman, J. S. Loveland, Hudson Tuttle, Moses Hull, J. R. Buchanan, B. B. Hill, Rabbi I. M. Wise, Col. Ingersoll—and what the spirits say about it. By

J. M. PEEBLES, M. D.

Whether this book settles the question or not, it will be found eminently entertaining, and brings together a mass of evidence to establish the historical character of Jesus. A large volume, cloth, $1.25. For sale at this office.

TALLEYRAND'S LETTER TO THE POPE.

"The great mystery of existence consists in perpetual and uninterrupted change. Everything is immortal and indestructible—the smallest worm as well as the most enormous of the celestial bodies—the sand grain or the water drop as well as the highest being in creation, man and his thoughts. Only the forms in which being manifests itself are changing; but Being itself remains eternally the same and imperishable. When we die we do not lose ourselves, but only our personal consciousness. We live on in nature, in our race, in our children, in our deeds, in our thoughts—in short, in the entire material and physical contribution which, during our short personal existence, we have furnished to the subsistence of mankind and of nature in general."—Buchner.

"Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophical writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

By Charles Dawbarn.

The scientist distinguishes "live" matter from what he calls "dead" matter. So long as atoms and molecules have not found the mates with whom they can settle down permanently, and go to housekeeping, they contain a certain amount of unexpended energy which is at the service of Homo as soon as he has learned how to utilize it. This is called "live" matter to distinguish it from molecules that have blended into primary rocks, etc., and in a myriad combinations have squandered their energy, usually in the form of heat, eons before man and beast struggled for life on our little planet. As such combinations have nothing left of their original capital, they can yield no more energy than is newly imparted to them by Nature or man. Such matter is therefore counted as "dead" matter.

As the writer has insisted that there can be no such thing as "dead" matter, it is well for the student reader to stop for a moment at this point, and assure himself of the truth of such an assertion. It is not quite enough to fall back on Ego, and say that as he is alive, and himself an atom, blending intelligence, energy and matter into his oneness, therefore every gathering of atoms must itself surely contain and express life. The shrewd scientist will reply that all he means by "dead" matter is the blending of molecules into a form which yields him no energy he does not himself first put into it. Such molecules have used up their surplus energy in the process of mutual attraction, and are, therefore, dead to him. He is quite willing to concede and believe that the atoms in that molecule are still in motion, and that they are moving freely in space, no matter how solid the molecular gathering may seem; but they exhibit no energy he can control or compel to his service. So they are really "dead" to him, and have usually been cremated long before he was ready to attend the funeral.

This has therefore become a question of fact. The writer accepts the issue as such, and now proposes to prove that a molecule is no more dead than the atoms of which it is composed. It may have to appeal to a different faculty of Homo, but that is all the change possible to intelligent atoms, eternal in active existence, because children of the divine.

There is a point in vibratory action up to which Ego appeals only to the sense of hearing. When Ego becomes silent to that organ the scientist does not call the human form dead, because he knows that at a certain point of increased movement the vibrating atom will be recognized by another faculty called "sight." But when sight becomes blind, and the machine that grasps vibrations beyond sight has also lost its power, it is then that the scientist scratches a boundary line, and says "thus far, and no further." He thus marks the line at which physics is seen gasping for breath. Here, for a brief hour, we must leave the belated physicist, and enquire if Homo has a faculty that can recognize movements in matter which are beyond the limit of his five senses. This, as we have said, is a simple question of fact. If matter offers intelligence to the investigator outside and beyond the limit of the physicist then it is without warrant that he calls it "dead."

Here is a speck of lava composed of molecules that have done their work for the physicist, and have been cremated by their own fierce energy, transmuted into heat. For the scientist that speck is dead. He declares it contains no lesson for him other than the wasted expenditure of its energy that has left it lifeless. But other students of nature have discovered that the speck of lava has kept a faithful record of its own experiences, and will tell its tale to the proper mortal sense, through mortal faculty, if one be unprejudiced enough to listen. Intensely interesting were those experiments described by the talented Denton in his work entitled Soul of Things. They were records of little journeys beyond the boundary scratched by the College physicist, and thus it happens that Homo's possession of a sixth sense remains even yet unknown to the great world of science. The point for us herein is, that we have a proof, lying to hand of every unprejudiced seeker, that Ego is not silent at the so-called "boundary," but is alive and active, working inside the "awful gap" which we took for our text when recently exploiting The Size of Man. We therein claimed that Ego is ever alive, and active within the entire limit of his vibrations, although broken into various personalities by the narrowness of mortal sense. And here, at our very first step across that imaginary boundary marked "dead line" we find Ego; and every student can find Ego alive and ready to talk with Homo through a sense faculty Homo did not know he possessed.

It is a wonderful discovery that Ego is alive in that so-called "dead" matter, just as he is alive in mortal brain, and in every other molecular gathering in the universe. We have seen in a recent article that brain and human reason have been locally evolved by Ego's necessity in certain limited conditions. At the same time we noted that intelligence was just as active without brain. We saw that if to KNOW be knowledge, then Ego as God Junior was not dependent on mortal brain, for even in earth life he withholds all important processes of Homo's organism from interference by the newly evolved brain and human self conceit.

We have tried to watch Ego while posing as an inhabitant of Earth, but we must explore Cosmos if we would hope to learn his real size. And a most important lesson is that mortal brain, however needed in earth life, becomes itself a barrier and a limitation when it would grasp details of Ego's higher and fuller life history. The work before the student reader and the writer is to follow Ego into vibrations beyond school-taught mortal sense and evolved instrument of skilled inventor. And our task is to gather facts for the trained scientists, many of whom are to-day overstepping their own boundary.

The 19th Century may wear a shroud woven by science, and wireless telegraphy may echo the glory of the departed from shore to shore, yet intelligence can talk only to intelligence trained and disciplined to listen and interpret. There must be trained intelligence at both ends or even wireless telegraphy is an unprofitable fact in nature. And the communications we are seeking with intelligences outside and beyond even the dead matter of the scientist necessarily demand yet more sensitive instruments and specially trained intelligence than the wireless telegraphy of earth life. The discovery that every atom is an intelligent Ego is a solid foundation fact for the explorer. But although German and English and French manhood, and that of every other nationality is permeated with intelligence, their citizens must learn mutual expression before they can exchange thought. This is granted as a matter of course. But we must keep it in mind as a factor in our exploration beyond present boundaries. And as still more important we must draw a line between molecular intelligence and that of the unblended Ego atom. As mortals we have never sought, or even deemed it possible that we might communicate with Ego in his own atom life. We have dealt only with molecules, and, with the absurdity of ignorance, have always dealt with these molecular gatherings as if they were single individualities. We have loved, hated, punished and rewarded these molecular gatherings as if they were eternal individualities. The universe is itself but a gathering of molecules, with different individualities of attraction and repulsion, blending into infinite variety of manifested selfhood.

Each system of suns and planets is composed of Egos necessarily gathering experiences. The individual freedom of every Ego is warped, twisted and confined to the necessities and sometimes the whims of the majority. Man himself recognizes an individual life outside himself in the gatherings he calls nations, cities, and every partnership down to the modern trust-company of to-day. A nation is recognized as cruel and blood-thirsty, or occasionally exhibiting an unselfish philanthropy, as much as the smaller blending we call Homo. The individuality of cities is just as marked as that of man. London, Paris, Berlin, New York, Chicago maintain a distinct individuality, no matter how many single citizens come and go. And we may, if we will, note the resemblance in their life history. Every city the world has known experiences youth, maturity, old age, and then death. It disintegrates into its remaining particles when its time comes. Such is the fate of all molecular life. Nothing in nature is, or can be indestructible save the eternal and individual atom. From speck monad to the whole universe every form is a blending, and therefore sooner or later falls apart.

The student must here keep in mind the Size of Man, and recognize that Ego being right royal by divine right within his own limitations, all the disturbance we have been noting is but the dissolution of his partnerships, which were always temporary, no matter whether science called them live or dead. And yet further, to mortal sense every manifestation of Ego will always be molecular. That is to say Homo cannot sense either God Senior or God Junior save as molecular expressions. He has therefore built up his thought creations (molecular blendings) into gods, angels, devils, and, last but not least, into molecular men and women he has called spirits.

The student must further remember that the creations of God Senior are very different from those of God Junior, although the difference is only a question of degree. And in our exploring expedition the student will find it useless to hunt for the unparticled atom or unblended Ego. We have been tracing Ego as in form life from the vibrating atoms of Cosmos up to Homo in earth life. Everywhere Ego was manifesting a blended sovereignty, with intelligence always manifesting itself according to conditions. The power of Ego has thus been dominant in all below man, and now we have to explore regions where science itself gasps for breath and see if Ego is at home there also.

Psychometric sensitiveness, the pet hobby of J. Rodes Buchanan, its discoverer, and scientifically demonstrated by William Denton, as recorded in The Soul of Things, has proved that normal manhood is endowed with a faculty that KNOWS without any exercise of reason. We all recognize the existence of an intelligence in Homo that directs and controls many of his organs, and most of the movements in every mortal form, beside healing wounds and injuries. We have thus a demonstration of a power that is, as it were, interior to reason, and occupying a territory where reason cannot follow. But psychometry shows us that in the other direction, that is to say, traveling outward, intelligence again leaves reason behind, and exhibits a power apparently almost unlimited.

I am not belittling human reason, within its own limits. But I am asserting that it is a product of earth life, where a brain has been evolved as a necessity of existing conditions. And it does not follow that brain as an organ, and the consequent reasoning faculty, are needed in other worlds, or amid other vibrations of Ego's own individuality. And here, to-day, in our present earth life, we have but to watch such mortals as have, however imperfectly, learned to so concentrate as to silence reason for a brief hour, and we soon find evidence that this Ego life and intelligence not merely inreaches to a control of form, but outreaches, and KNOWS facts impossible to reason.

The student reader will here take note that we are not now discussing or examining Ego apart from earth life, but noting and recording that his powers as a mortal are not limited by reason. Denton found a speck of lava, though secreted from even his own identification, told its tale to sensitives the world over. The language differed with age, sex and education of the sensitive, but the history was always there in vivid reality. This is the record of intelligence in form that we call below man, and which the scientist calls dead matter. It can easily be tested, as the writer has tested it, by every patient and unprejudiced investigator. The point here specially noteworthy is that Homo can thus hear the tale and make the record for himself if he will but cultivate his own faculty.

It is when we have reached the level of manhood in our investigations, and would outreach beyond the lordly mortal brain, that we begin to discover that Ego's powers are not limited by human form. This faculty outreaches to every molecular organization. The planet is but a molecule of Cosmos, and Homo himself a molecule of the planet. The planet is a sensitive, and records the happenings to her solar mother in magnetic pulsations, that science is striving to read by the candle-light of reason. It is when Homo drops reason, and uses the inner light of Ego, that he discovers and manifests a power which to reason is impossible. Let the mortal try the experiment. Here, for instance, is a photograph, never seen or touched by the one it represents. The parent sun has, as we all know, imprinted features and form, but the universal intelligence has flashed in that ray of light a biography of that form, perfect in every detail, to be read only so far as reason is for the time silent. The writer has seen this demonstrated again and again through man, woman and child sensitive, sometimes with startling clearness, and again partial and incomplete, because, at best, the faculty is barely alive in the human form of to-day. Give it a few generations of exercise and intelligence will voice truths that science cannot deny.

The point we want to note in this experiment is that reason must be asleep before this faculty wakes at any given hour. The mortal using this sixth sense has no reason to offer for details in health, character, and conduct which flash through his brain. They come as from one who KNOWS, and afford a glimpse of the outworking of the wondrous power whose inner life we have noticed as manifested in every organism. The faculty itself has, so far, been little but a child's plaything to the investigator. It cannot be analyzed any more than the intelligence that holds the heart to its rhythmic beat. And, as in that case, a very little interference will silence it forever, so far as that form is concerned. Its discoverer unfortunately never learned to distinguish the "still, small voice" of this power from the utterances of auto-suggestion and unavowed spirit control. Yet the name of J. Rodes Buchanan, and that of his co-worker, William Denton, will be reverenced by all future workers in this untilled field.

This sense, being shared by lower, and indeed in measure by all forms not dominated by reason, is worthy of careful study. Unfortunately we have but little data from other than human lives. We have seen Ego manifesting everywhere in form, from ultra microscopic speck to parent sun. We discern him in the molecular groupings of town, city, nation and world, as much as in Homo. Each has its own marked individuality, diverse as that of Chicago and New York, or the United States from that of England. Egos come and go for, sometimes, thousands of years in city or nation, but the general character of that form is practically unaffected save perhaps for a brief hour in its history. At times there may be a frenzy of excitement, if the form have such a tendency, or if conditions compel. But as we look back through a long series of years we always discover that something molded and shaped its destiny which was not cool reason, but a tendency born of the faculty or sense which acts without calculation. In the life below man, such, for instance, as that of the ant, it is specially interesting to find densely populated cities deserted because something or somebody KNEW that a mighty flood was coming within a few weeks or months. And we may depend upon it that every form composed of intelligent units could offer abundant evidence, from its own experience, of collective action that has not been the result of scientific forecast or collection of statistics to determine the immediate future. At this point the student reader faces the most startling discovery that has yet greeted him as an explorer in this outside realm of space.

We have noted that every form is composed of units that come and go. There is no one dominating, age-lasting Ego to any form. The individual life from the first molecular blending up to that of city or nation, is very brief, although the form always goes on to its own maturity, old age and death. The one history may be of but a few seconds, and the other may comprise thousands of years. The result is precisely the same. As this is a fact in form life that cannot be disputed, it applies as much to Homo as to any other form. This startling fact seems to have escaped human attention because it has been befogged by theological conceptions of the special creation of man, as quite distinct from that of other forms. Such an idea will not bear examination by the explorer. Man is only a conglomeration of Egos, like every other form. His form has its civic history and experience as much as the city and the nation. Ego comes and goes. I believe science has now counted the stay or visit of a new comer as limited to some six or eight weeks. At best the atom gathers in but the experience of a few months, whilst the form life may continue three or four score years. But in every form life where intelligence has become active there seems to be an Ego, who at the particular moment is a dominating factor in its every day experience. Presently that Ego departs, and his place is perforce taken by another and another, to the very end. The civic records which we call memory are not placed in safeguard of reason, but are left under absolute control of the intelligence which KNOWS. This is, as we all know, the rule of form life with Homo. Startling as it may seem, we find, by comparing him with the larger form life discerned in city and nation, that one Ego can only dominate for a time, whereas the activity and the experiences of the form will continue to its last hour. So you and I, reader, being forms, are necessarily dominated by different Egos. Each of us has a collective history and collective tendencies which we have called individuality, and have theologically marked for eternal weal or woe.

This in indeed startling, because it shows us the extraordinary limitations under which we have been educated as forms, and trained to our present beliefs. The Ego of boyhood is surely not the Ego of manhood; and whether Ego shall play rascal or benefactor to other Egos is a question of form, tendencies, and compulsion. It is form which is subject to hereditary influences, and whose conduct we watch. The mother loves her form child, but as we have seen, not the same Ego from year to year. The lover is, perhaps for a whole life, a worshiper of many different Egos who have, one by one, dominated the same loved form. Parents and children can have no permanent relation as Egos, but only so long as form life may continue. And the world goes on in its yet broader relations towards form, with the Egos of its nations coming and going, month by month, in a universal brotherhood that remains silent because form life is still exhibiting its ignorant prejudices, with mutual jealousy and hatred.

Such discoveries should make us very cautious as we continue our explorations. For we discern that we who explore are only forms, and that Ego himself eludes us. We have discovered him aggregated into molecules, but never in naked individuality. It now becomes important, and deeply interesting that we seek what we may discover of Ego's experiences in form outside the coarser aggregations we call material life.

SUMMER BELLS.

Sifting through the spaces,
Come transcendent sounds of sweetness,
Nature in all places,
Fills the sum of her completeness.

From the far and nearest
Realms, where she is ruling ever,
Ring in tones the clearest—
Bells that time can ne'er dissever.

Chiming bells that thrill us,
Sending out, in waves of beauty,
Flower-truths that fill us,
With the force of life and duty.

Bells of color, singing,
Flood the earth with tones of brightness,
Rhythmic tints, up-springing,
With the fairy touch of lightness.

Meadow-grasses bending,
Trembling leaves on trees o'er arching,
Chant their songs unending—
Ring their bells to Nature's marching.

Birds with tones of sweetness,
Thrill the air with rapturous forces,
Fairy notes of fleetness,
Mark the songsters in their courses.

Bells of summer ringing,
Bidding all to Nature's graces,
Merrily they're swinging,
In their God-appointed places.

ELLA DARE.

QUEEN SUMMER.

In wood and field the sunlit green
Smiles to the sky above her;
The sky adorned in azure sheen,
Bends o'er, a happy lover.

Within the branches overhead
I hear the wind's low moaning;
And 'mongst the flame-tipt clover's bed,
The bumble-bees' lone droning.

The humming-bird darts in and out,
Exploring Nature's bowers,
Nor questions, with delicious doubt,
To kiss Earth's fairest flowers.

In mystic music of the breeze,
I hear Queen Summer singing;
She's hung her hammock 'neath the trees,
And I am in it, swinging.

In undulations gently slow,
I feel the tree-tops swaying,
While Summer breathes in music low
The love-thoughts she is saying.

In lazy listlessness I lie,
Nor thought nor care oppresses—
In heaven of dreamy ecstasy,
With Summer's sweet caresses.

POTENT FACTS.

Science, Philosophy and Religion.

It is at least questionable whether we, Spiritualists, have as a body anything we may justly claim as a science, a philosophy or a religion.

For more than half a century we have been busily engaged in collecting what we have been pleased to call facts. Some of these have been genuine. More probably have been otherwise. Even so far our work has been, almost entirely, individualistic. It could not well have been anything else, from our total lack of system in observing and arranging our facts. Every man has had his own personal experiences. It has been generally taught that only that is of value to the individual which comes to himself. The experiences of others are of no account to him.

Well, they may be of no account since there is no arranged plan for observing, testing or recording them. But in this manner it will ever be impossible to construct a science, a philosophy or a religion which will be anything else than a one man's opinion which no other man will, or ought to accept.

Perhaps it may be said that this is exactly what we want. Perfect liberty of thought. Entire freedom for every human being to build his own edifice, have his own ideas and know what he knows independently of every one else. True, but if every one has to begin with the first crude experiments, which have been made thousands of times before he was born and must draw no conclusions from these experiments but those he can arrive at by the use of his own unaided brains or the assistance of such intelligence, little or much, which his particular spirit guides may afford him, we have small chance of making much progression. Not by any such method have we arrived at our present knowledge of astronomy, chemistry or any other branch of learning. If we all had to commence by gazing at the sky in the search for stars and were forbidden to learn anything about those shining orbs except what we could find out by watching them and guessing at their orbits and distances from the earth and from each other, the information most of us would possess in that direction would be exceedingly limited. Even if we made a few accurate guesses and proved their accuracy to our own satisfaction it would be of little use. The first man to whom we endeavored to impart our intellectual acquisitions would say, "I have eyes as well as you and can see the stars as well and perhaps better. I can guess as well as you and I guess your guessing is all wrong." Very absurd, certainly, when we think about it in connection with astronomy. Yet this is precisely the way we all or nearly all, act with regard to Spiritualistic phenomena.

We pretty generally admit that some of these phenomena are genuine and more of them, as said above, otherwise.

Practically the position most Spiritualists take is something like this: "My powers of observation are so much keener and my critical judgment so much more accurate than other peoples' that I know what I have seen and judged to be true, is true. As for what others have seen and what they think about it, it may be correct enough, but personally I know what I have myself witnessed and I know no more."

The result of this is that the average Spiritualist employs his time (as much as he devotes to the subject anyway) in taking mental notes of phenomena and storing his memory with facts. As for the causes of these; they are spirit work, of course, produced by departed human spirits. By what other agency could they be produced? Ask him how they are produced and he will confess his ignorance. Enquire why departed human spirits produce these phenomena and he will say, "to prove that they still live." Possibly he may make a bolder assertion and declare it to be an evidence of immortality.

Now there is no great fault to find with all this as far as it goes. The fault is that it does not go far enough to make a satisfactory showing for fifty and odd years of work.

The consequence is that what Spiritualists will not do or have neglected to do with their own materials others are doing and will continue to do instead of them.

It matters not who brings truth to the world provided it is brought. If Spiritualists are content to carry the hod and let the man at the top of the ladder do all the work they must not grumble because they obtain no credit for building a house. The hod carrier of facts is just as necessary in his way as the hod carrier of bricks and mortar in his. But he is not the bricklayer, the builder nor the architect. If Spiritualism is to erect its own temple of science, philosophy and religion, other work must be done in its own ranks than carrying materials to the builders. The materials, as far as they are of value, will never go to waste. If we do not, other hands will separate that which is good and useful from the rubbish. If we do not form some design for a temple (or many temples) grand and useful to mankind and build after our own plan or plans, others will after their plans and with the bricks and mortar which we carry to them.

If we choose to let it be so, so it must be. But we should not afterwards complain if the buildings are not to our taste. If we elect to be hod carriers, let us stick to the hod and the ladder and leave those who will dare to build unmolested by criticism after they have completed their work which we might have done but did not.

THE BEST KNOWLEDGE

And the Method of Its Attainment.

In answer to this question, it is necessary to know what knowledge is. We often use words without attaching to them a clear and definite meaning, because our ideas are not clear and definite. Ambiguity of language has its rise in ambiguity of ideas. The word knowledge is the symbol of a vague and indefinite idea when we come to its final analysis; so it must be clearly defined.

Knowledge is the clear and actual recognition of facts and events, and the clear comprehension of principles and their logical significance. But to know, there must be something to be known which must have existed prior to the knowing; therefore, the question at the head of this article presupposes that something previously existed to be known. That something is the essential thing to consider.

Education is a great and popular idea. But what is education, really? This word presupposes something to be educated; that is, to be led out, from "e," out, and "ducere," to lead. The etymology of the word is true to the idea; but we have associated it with a false idea, and in this lies the difficulty. The meaning we attach to the word is instruction—acquiring knowledge.

Education proper has its basis on the fact that man is endowed with the germs of faculties, (feelings, desires, passions, appetites and other sensations) which are the primary source of all his activities; and with intellect to devise the ways and means for their gratification. To develop and unfold these faculties in their full, complete and harmonious order, is education in its true sense. But when we attach a false meaning to the word, that is, the acquisition of knowledge, without determining what knowledge is, we find ourselves in a wilderness of doubt and uncertainties; hence, the question: What knowledge is of the most worth?

We exist; this fact involves the considerations of How? What? Whence? Whither? The brief span of earth life is but a link in the endless chain of human existence; and considered by itself, it has neither meaning nor significance. As to the How? we must pass it by, for it belongs to another inquiry. The What? we must briefly consider, leaving the Whence, and the Whither? for future consideration. What is life? What is its meaning? The answer to this question will determine our inquiry.

We seek in vain for this knowledge in our so-called educational institutions. Knowledge? Certainly; but knowledge of what? Surely, but not of that which is of the most worth; for it is a fact of daily experience that many men possessing much knowledge are the meanest and most dangerous men in the community. It is well known that knowledge is employed as readily and effectively in schemes of villainy and rascality, as in those of just and noble enterprises. And yet the clamor is for knowledge, more knowledge that the schools and universities afford. How inconsistent! How absurd!

Knowledge is instrumental, and not initiative and directive. If we do not have the right kind of instrument, we can not work to advantage; if we do not have the light, must grope in darkness. The first and most important knowledge is to understand the meaning of life. No one can use an instrument unless he knows what it is for; and the serious misuse of life proves the sad want of this knowledge. Men spend thousands of dollars and years of unfiring effort in the acquisition of knowledge that proves useless and worthless, while the most reliable knowledge is either ignorance or regarded as valueless—knowledge that would cost but a trifle in comparison with that which he values so much and acquired at such great cost.

The meaning of life carries with it the fact of immortal existence. The condition of the future life is largely determined by our conduct in the present life. When that fact is known, due preparation will be made for entrance into the future life. Knowledge of immortality can be acquired only by statements of those who are known to us, and have returned from that life; and these statements could not be made without a knowledge of such life. Simple faith or belief in such existence will not suffice. Real, living, inspiring knowledge of its existence and its relation to this life, and how our conduct here affects our conditions there, is knowledge of the most worth. But the general sentiment of mankind is such that we neither desire nor appreciate that knowledge.

But there are some who desire such knowledge; and it is to them this article is addressed. Among the many sources of such knowledge, I shall describe only one, because with that one I am acquainted; otherwise I would not be able to speak accurately of it. It is the knowledge I have of it that enables me to say what I intend on the subject.

There lives in Spring Hill, Kansas, an elderly gentleman, a retired farmer, by the name of J. H. Pratt, widely known and respected in all the community, who for many years has been deeply interested in Spiritualism. Learning of a medium for materializations, he wrote to him in effect: "If you are an honest medium, I want you to come to my house and give a number of seances." This was in 1890. Mr. Aber (the medium) came accordingly, and as Mr. Pratt was satisfied of the medium's honesty and the genuineness of the manifestations, he employed him for an indefinite time for the purpose of accomplishing a great work as it had been stated to him sometime before by another medium that a great and important work was to be accomplished at his house, and he was desirous of its accomplishment.

Accordingly arrangements were made to that end. A band of spirits, among the most prominent are Dr. Reed, who on earth was an eminent chemist, Prof. Denton, who for many years was a writer and lecturer, Thomas Paine, the patriot and philanthropist, and Prof. Faraday, an eminent English scientist, together with many American scientists, clergymen and scholars, was deputed by the Star Circle, one of the strongest and best known organizations in the spirit world, to give to earth's inhabitants such knowledge of the future life as was most needful, and to prove the same by the most infallible tests.

The first of the seances was held in May, 1890, and they were continued with some unavoidable interruptions, for a number of years. The result of these seances was the production of a most unique, remarkable and valuable book ever presented to the world, of over 500 pages, entitled "Rending the Vail." The messages given were entirely free from human agency; the medium lying unconscious, serving as a connecting link, as it were, between the physical and spiritual states of existence; affording an open door for the transmission of intelligence by any spirit who desires to communicate. The method of materialization, so-called, is by drawing aural and magnetic emanations from the members of the circle (ten or twelve in number) and by some process of spiritual chemistry made visible to mortal sight. With this preparation the attending spirits are clothed, thus rendering them visible to the circle and visitors.

These seances afford the acquisition of the knowledge we seek—knowledge infinitely of more value than all the schools and universities can afford.

The same band of spirits, the same medium and character of seances, the same house and supported in the same manner, are now engaged, and have been since last December (1899), in the production of another book. The former work has rent the vail; this one will lead the searcher after knowledge into the inner temple where he may find the knowledge so valuable to him.

I have been a member of the circle since the first of last April, and will continue one until the work is completed. I am well acquainted with the medium and all the members of the circle, and reside with Mr. Pratt, at whose house the seances are held. "Rending the Vail" is a scientific exposition of spiritual philosophy. Its teachings are too well authenticated to admit of doubt. Mr. Pratt will fill all orders for it; so will The Progressive Thinker. Price $2, postpaid.

Spirit Slate-Writings.

The enclosed historical facts regarding messages received from the next world, between sealed slates, as in the so-called seances for slate-writing, at Hon. Willard L Lothrop's, 90 Berkley street, Boston, Mass., are submitted for explanation by those who ought to know. First, the man says he received on one slate 11 independent slate-written spirit messages, one of which was 56 lines long, finely engraved, as if cut into the slates, which were six by nine inches in size. On one side were four sky-blue golden center forget-me-nots with stem and green leaves, all oil-painted, although slates were clean when sealed. Indian Bright Feather (spirit) wrote six lines in bright yellow crayon and "Sida" had two lines in brick red (none furnished). The other side, companion slate, had eight messages; three engraved, one in purple color, one in green, brown, gray and drab; also oil-painted Easter lily, with bud, stem and leaves; four purple forget-me-nots, with green stems. No crayons furnished, but eight messages looked as if written by crayon methods. At another seance 1949 words were given in finely engraved letters on one side of a 6x9 slate, all of which could be read in a good light. On companion slate were nine messages (all recognized in colors, green, yellow, yellow red, silver white, bright red, drab, dark purple, light purple and silver gray. Also oil-painted flowers of three kinds with green leaves and stems. Again, on a 6x9-inch slate, 94 lines of 2374 words were received from spirits, engraved so as not to rub out, etc. Moses got his commandments engraved on stone, and this medium gets his messages the same way. He does not want any newspaper notoriety. He does not want his name published. He charges 25 cents a seance, is well known in Boston, does not care a cent for the press, and has refused to accept their representatives, to my knowledge. New York has a similar medium, Fred E. Evans, (103 West Forty-second street, New York City, and they say Rev. Hillis has a wife who is a medium and aroused his bold pulpit statements about God, etc., which caused his resignation, lately, from his creed. These facts are authentic and can be verified, therefore it is folly to ignore them.

COMMUNICATION WITH BESIEGED MINISTERS

Remarkable Statement of a Prominent Rochesterian.

"I have had actual communication with the besieged legations at Pekin, and can state that with the exception of Baron Von Ketteler, all the ministers are alive, though they are very hard pressed." This statement was made yesterday by a prominent Rochesterian who has a made a very exhaustive and careful study of telepathy, or rather of spiritual communication, which science he claims to have used in getting in touch with Pekin. The man who makes this assertion is a professional man in this city whose name would be instantly recognized in almost any part of this state. It is withheld at his own request for personal reasons. When urged, he consented to make a full statement, explaining his position and the method by which he communicated with the foreigners imprisoned in the Forbidden City. The statement follows:

"My attention has just been called to an editorial in the columns of the Democrat and Chronicle of July 30, on 'A Chance for Telepathy.' I am not sponsor for any of the dogmas mentioned in the first paragraph of the editorial referred to, not even for telepathy, that indescribable something to which the skeptic in other matters is sure to ascribe phenomena that puzzle him and for which he has no explanation. The world, or at least a large part of it, is marvelously afraid of coming in contact with anything that is denominated 'Spiritualism,' and so the world, or that part of it referred to, when it discovers something that it cannot promptly or easily comprehend or explain, at once alleges that it is due to telepathy. Of course that satisfies so much of the world as is fearful that something will be demonstrated that will prove the existence of a future life, but it leaves quite unexplained the theory or the philosophy of the very intricate phenomenon that it pleases to designate telepathy. At least its explanations do not explain, and the other part of the world still asks 'What is telepathy?'

"I have been greatly interested in investigations that have been going on, both in the United States and in Great Britain, of the occult sciences, and I have read with exceeding care and unconcealed interest the articles that have appeared in Harper's Monthly Magazine on 'Results of Psychical Research' and 'Life After Death,' written by Professor Hyslop, of Columbia University. These point to one especially important fact, and that is that the world has commenced to think on this subject, and when the world gets to thinking carefully and deliberately upon a matter worthy of investigation the end is certain—enlightenment will follow and we shall know what now we do not know pertaining to these hidden mysteries. It is worthy of note, I think, in this connection that those who have entered into these investigations that are referred to by Professor Hyslop and others, as they have proceeded in them, have become convinced of the existence of a future life, and of the good faith and honesty of certain manifestations that go to prove that those who have individual existences here retain their individualities in a future life and are able to make those individualities felt or known to those they have left behind them in the physical existence.

"Possibly I ought, before going further, to identify myself so that there will be no mistake as to my own individuality in the physical world. The readers of your paper may recall that, a little more than a year ago, a citizen of Rochester held communication with the alleged spirit of the then recently translated personality of Robert G. Ingersoll, who passed out of this and into the future life at Dobbs Ferry on the afternoon of July 21, 1899. It was I who, unexpectedly, investigated the phenomena at Troy in communication with a lady then on her way to Saratoga. An account of this circumstance was published in the Democrat and Chronicle on the morning of July 25, 1899, and I therein stated that my investigations in this direction had not caused me to change my religious opinions in the slightest degree.

"I may, therefore, add to what I then said that I have been pursuing these investigations during the year that has intervened under circumstances that have given me opportunity to secure manifestations and results altogether beyond my most sanguine expectations. These investigations have led me to what I claim to be the incontrovertible conclusion that what is often denominated telepathy, that one phenomenon that is so little understood by the world at large, is in fact and in truth, very many times at least, manifestations of the spirits of those who have left us in the physical life. My investigations have been pursued with care and deliberation during the year. It is not my intention at this time to go into any details in regard to them. I have taken data and it is my purpose later to publish in such form as may be most satisfactory to myself and to the reading public an account of such investigations. For the present, however, I desire only to refer to so much of the investigations as may be pertinent to the inquiry made in the editorial referred to.

"In the first place, I desire to say that, in my opinion, we have barely commenced investigations that will eventually lead to a perfect understanding of the phenomenon known to the world as 'Spiritualism.' There is much yet to be investigated, many truths connected with this philosophy to be demonstrated, and the world is yet to be taught what there is in this science of communication between the seen and unseen. I will say simply that my investigations have gone far enough to convince me that communication may be established between the two worlds, one the physical, the other the spiritual. If this be a fact—as I claim it to be—then there is no reason why communication may not be established between widely separated sections of the globe.

"The writer of the editorial in question suggests that here is an opportunity for telepathy to demonstrate what there is in it and to communicate to the people outside of the capital of China what is going on within it. If telepathy be what its definition indicates, namely, the communication from one mind to another of what is contained in the mind of the first person, or the reading by one mind of the contents or the thoughts of another mind, and that is all there is of telepathy, how can there be any opportunity in this case to serve the world by the application of this principle? The mind of Minister Conger, who is some thousands of miles away from his own seat of government, can hardly be guessed at or read by one at the seat of government of the United States.

"It seems to me to be the height of folly to suggest that by the simple process, if it be a simple process, of mind-reading a person on one side of the globe can determine what is in the mind, or what is occurring to the person and the surroundings, of one who is on the other side of the globe. If such a fact can be in any way established it occurs to me that it is far more reasonable to assume that there is a greater and more intricate power called into activity than the power of one brain over another in reaching such results. I choose, without regard to the opinions and sneers of those who know nothing of this subject, to believe that if such communication can be secured, it is by the unseen forces that surround us and not by the power of brain over brain as they exist in living beings.

"Now I make bold to say that in the investigations that I have been quietly carrying on during the twelve months past I have come a little nearer to the solution of this problem than has been attained by others in their investigations, at least, as far as others' investigations have been communicated to the public. In fact, I am prepared to say that with the help of these occult forces I have secured such communications from the imprisoned representatives of the nations at Pekin as has convinced me that we are making progress in the right direction and that after more study and investigation we may yet establish such commuication as will baffle prison bars and set the spirit of the living free to communicate with kindred spirits in distant parts of the world. True, I am quite ready to concede that the investigations I have thus far been able to make have been as yet very imperfect, but they have been such as to convince me personally of the truth of the claims that I am making and of the certainty of future demonstrations.

"The lady to whom I have already referred as the medium is one who has an excessively sensitive temperament, and this fact prompts her to avoid publicity and to shrink from contact with strangers. Because of these conditions I purposely avoid identifying her to the readers. The time may come by and by when this condition can no longer be maintained. It is sufficient, however, in this connection to say that the editorial referred to alone has prompted me to make some statements which are in advance of a more extended discussion of the whole subject.

"This lady has been for some weeks where I have been able to conduct these investigations without very much difficulty. I regard her as the most perfect 'sensitive' —if I may be permitted to use the term applied in the Democrat and Chronicle editorial—that I have ever known, and she is probably the most perfect 'sensitive' at the present time living anywhere in the world. The reader must take my statement for this, for I shall not attempt to give illustrations to prove what I now say, at least, not at the present time. The only way, in my opinion, that perfect communication may be established between one section of the world and another is to have 'sensitives' in both sections. For example, assume that this lady readily passes under the control of a disembodied spirit and that this spirit when not thus controlling the 'sensitive is able to travel speedily to any part of the world.

"Now while under the control of the spirit assume that I request that communication be established with some occult force in the city of Pekin, it must must at once be observed that when the spirit leaves the 'sensitive' here it cannot well establish communication in Pekin, whither it may go at once, without being put in touch with a 'sensitive' also at Pekin. True it may make the journey to Pekin, and, if able to find the location in that city where there are imprisoned representatives of foreign nations, it may see and return whence it came and through the same 'sensitive' communicate what it has seen in the distant capital.

"Some days ago while this lady, whom I have designated the 'sensitive,' was under the control of an alleged disembodied spirit, I requested the spirit to visit Pekin. This was a request that I found not so easily complied with, because the spirit at once said that she had never been in China but that she would endeavor to get someone who had been there to go and investigate at my request. The next day she returned and stated that she had been to Pekin; that she went with another person and found great distress, but was unable to give the definite information I sought. I then gave into the hands of the 'sensitive' a slip of paper carefully folded and contents concealed. The medium very soon afterwards stated that she felt the influence of someone who was not living. I did not communicate the name of the person written on the paper, neither did she then give it. I destroyed the paper. I know no one ever saw the contents of it.

"The next day, while again under the influence of the same person, she gave me the name of the person written on the slip of paper, and said that it was that of Baron Von Ketteler; that she had found him and he had gone with her to Pekin; that he was familiar with conditions there and had taken her, the spirit, to the British legation, where he had pointed out the members of the different legations; that she had been misled in her first visit and had gone, she thought, to a cathedral where there was great suffering due to the Chinese mob besieging these people shut up in the cathedral. She then stated the condition of those confined at the British legation. She also stated that the foreign ministers were all alive! that there was much suffering and the ladies belonging to the legations were greatly alarmed and some of them were sick. She stated further that the ladies had shown great bravery and were encouraging in every manner possible the defense of the legation.

"All of this was prior to the receipt of news from the legations at Pekin. I am conscious that I am asking belief in matters that some people will question, but this does not matter. I have not yet sought to make public any of these manifestations. The question may be asked why I have not made these announcements before. I reply simply that I have no desire or time to go into controversies or to publish matters pertaining to these investigations in advance of the time when I can give them more fully and perfectly to the public. I need only add that every day I have received information through this 'sensitive' of conditions now existing at the capital of the Chinese empire.

"The last information I have is that a mob surrounds the British legation building; that this mob is frequently firing on the legations, but that the conditions have materially improved within a few days past. Just what the outcome is to be, whether the advance of the allied forces upon the Chinese capital will result disastrously to the imprisoned legations, I have not attempted to divine. My purpose now is only to point to the fact that there is room for much future investigation that may lead to many valuable discoveries. I should say that this disembodied spirit thus communicating tells me that the German ambassador comes for her every night and accompanies her to the Chinese capital, where she can observe the conditions that there exist. She goes, as she explains, at night, because it is then daytime at Pekin, and returns here in time to give her communication the following day.

"Possibly the critics may ascribe all these communications, admitting what I have said to be true, to telepathy, but I choose to believe that these manifestations and exhibitions have been such as to establish, at least to my mind, the truth of the claim that the spirit of one who once moved in and out with us in the physical life is still interested in us and is prepared and anxious to serve us in the spiritual existence.

"I will give one other illustration that I believe fully answers in the negative the claim that telepathy is responsible for the communications that are made under such conditions as I have recited. One evening recently, while this 'sensitive' was under the control of an alleged spirit she told me where I had been during the day. She said that she had been with me, had heard conversations that I had held and told the substance of these conversations. I knew that no one else could possibly have heard conversations and that there was something very remarkable in thus being able to communicate them to me.

"Telepathy, of course, will easily explain this circumstance because I knew what she was then telling me; but she went further and said that after leaving me at a certain office she went to the office of another person, who is a friend of the medium. This was something that I knew nothing of. I had never been in the office of this friend, and while I had casually met him I had no further acquaintance with him. She stated that while she was at the office he was engaged in writing a letter to the medium. Of this I had absolutely no knowledge, neither had the medium, for while in this condition she did not know what was transpiring. The following morning the letter that was written, as stated by the medium while in this condition, or by the spirit while in control of her, was delivered. Many such instances have been demonstrated in my investigations and they lead me, naturally, to the conclusion that telepathy—if I know what telepathy means or signifies—can have nothing to do with them.

"I do not abandon my faith in the omnipresence and omniscience of an allwise and over-ruling Providence in accepting the belief that in carrying out His plans He is privileged to employ such agencies as are at His disposal and thus to confound the wisdom of the learned and even of the devout of the closing year of the nineteenth century. I am at a loss to understand why the disembodied spirits of those who loved and cared for us when they were in physical touch and communion with us, may not with perfect propriety—and in furtherance of His great purposes—watch over and care for us while in the spiritual existence and respond to our desires and petitions sent to the throne of 'Him who doeth all things well.'

"Why may not the disembodied spirit of my mother, whose tender solicitude for my welfare can be no less than it was when she folded me close to her bosom in my infancy, bowing before His throne around which sit cherubims and seraphims, when my cry goes up to Him for comfort and consolation, be sent on his mission to answer my supplication? I believe that it is not His purpose to deceive me, and when, in the soft tones I remember in my childhood that mother speaks—using simply the vocal organs she finds passive and at her service in the physical structure of a pure and sensitive living being—and calls me by endearing titles known only to her and to me, shall I strive still to grieve her by doubts and misgivings and in an insistent determination to account for her presence and solicitude for me by ascribing these manifestations to forces I can neither comprehend nor explain?

"I am still pursuing these investigations and trust that I am doing so with a perfectly unbiased mind. I am not disposed to give credit to any investigation that is not free from criticism and certainly remote from anything in the nature of fraud or deception. When a proper time shall arrive, and I am fully prepared to do so, I shall give to the public my careful statement of the investigations that I am making."—Rochester (N. Y.) FOR a moment stop and consider. The Progressive Thinker is the one original dollar Spiritualist paper. It introduced a new era in the ranks of Spiritualism. Its success financially has been all that could be desired. Notwithstanding the rise in the price of print paper, it has still maintained its status as the only one dollar Spiritualist paper. Not only that, but it introduced the Divine Plan in its business with its subscribers—a portion of the profits of the office returning to them. Just think of the Seven Premium Books being sent out to our subscribers for $2.35. After paying the postage of these seven books, and the expense of mailing them, all that we have left is $1.50. You can readily see that we are furnishing them for less, by far, than the actual cost to us. We do this work in accordance with The Divine Plan, in order to assist in forming the nucleus of a library in every Spiritualist home. Read carefully our premium list, and you will certainly want to become a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker, if not so already, and obtain the books we announce.

SELF DEVELOPMENT.

The paper on Self Development read at the last discussion meeting of the Victorian Association of Spiritualists, and published in another column, led to a consideration of the whole aspect of mediumship, and particularly of the attainment of its higher phases; the consensus of opinion being favorable to Mr. Waschatz's thesis, that self development is the primary essential to high and widely useful mediumship. The bald affirmation frequently made that "everyone is a medium," though true in a sense, is somewhat misleading; it would better express what is meant to be conveyed to say "everyone may develop by application some form of mediumship." This would naturally suggest to any aspirant for the possession of mediumistic powers, inquiry as to the nature and extent of the application requisite in his case to evolve the essential condition, the result of which would test the strength of his aspiration and probably deter a large proportion from attempting the task. This would be no disadvantage to them, it would save them much unprofitable work and clear the road for those who cry, and mean, "Excelsior."

Some people are born with an

either inherited from their progenitors or imparted during the period of gestation through favorable mental and spiritual conditions of the mother. But, as a rule, the environment during youth does not favor the development and expression of the power this confers. Such persons by coming in contact with a developed medium, or being introduced into a harmonious circle of investigators, have their hitherto latent powers quickened into manifestations, they were already budding, and only wanted the stimulus of genial magnetism to bring them into bloom. This is the only use of a developing circle, to give an impetus to the expression of powers that are ready for efflorescence. To place a person whose latent mediumship is deep set and immature, in a mixed circle, is like placing a weak and sickly plant in a hotbed and forcing it into flower before it has developed the necessary stamina, the result is a weak and imperfect blossoming. Natural development is attained by pure living, the cultivation of the intellect, self-control, and high aspiration, all these tend to the harmonization of the individual, and harmony is the one essential for communion with the denizens of the higher or wisdom spheres, whence reliable teachings come. It is necessary that the intellect be cultivated and the mind familiar with the full range of the language the individual is accustomed to use. Ideas are expressed in words; our vocabulary at its best is inadequate to express many things which the spirit world desires to transmit, and for an advanced spirit intelligence to communicate through an uneducated person on high themes, is like a maestro having to perform a complicated composition on a piano of two or three octaves. There are instances of illiterate persons under spirit influence using words outside their vocabulary and uuttering matter far beyond their normal powers, but these are exceptions where, for a special purpose, power is brought to bear to control the vocal organs to articulate what the controlling intelligence wishes to convey, and good as this may be of its kind, it falls short of that which could be given through a cultured medium attuned to the requisite pitch for accord with the communicating intelligence. As Mr. Waschatz indicates in his essay, these qualifications will not come without effort, nothing of real value can be obtained without this, or costly sacrifice. But is not the attainment of communion with glorified spirits an adequate inducement to devote a lifetime (if necessary) to? apart from the pleasure incidental to the progressive harmonization of both mind and body.

THE PRACTICE OF THE VIRTUES,

We are asked very frequently what is the best way to develop mediumship, meaning, as a rule, "what is the most direct way to open communication with the spirit world." It is easy to point this out to a person having though when they connect the line between the two states, the communications are often indistinct, yet even when they are so, whilst they give satisfaction for the time, they lose their zest and pall upon the mind unless progressive. In the pursuit of Spiritualism, we must progress or stagnate, and so (as a rule) with mediums; the exception being with those who are used by the spirit world as test mediums to prove the reality of the other life, and the nearness of the spirit world; they are often kept to the work on the same plane in the interest of humanity, but they have their reward when they come to realize the use they have been to their fellows.

Except where bands of teaching spirits operate to communicate truth to man, the communications come from planes of development approximating to those of the investigators, hence the one who is pursuing natural development is gradually bringing himself into rapport with higher intelligences and reaping the reward of his self-sacrifice, and forbearance from indulgence in the more carnal pleasures of life; he finds in a higher appreciation of nature and the influx of spiritual ideas a greater joy than they can give, whilst on the other hand the uncertainties of artificial development are often productive of mental suffering and disappointment. Hence it is apparent that whatever the latent mediumistic capacities may be, there is no better or safer road than self harmonization and development, even if your mediumistic gifts are few, you will reach a higher plane of thought and action, and thus realize that your efforts have not been in vain.

THE SPIRITUAL REVIEW, LONDON, ENG.

What a magician is the sun, what a transformation is effected when its glorious light is poured upon the earth! Personally I know of no analogy or comparison that will adequately describe the influence of other than which is represented by the rising of the god of day, with the mighty, the inevitable, the incalculable transformation and effect of that familiar phenomenon. How welcome are the first streaks of dawn, and how welcome were those first gentle rappings at Hydesville, "Whose vibrations," in the words of Mrs. Richmond, "have reached the uttermost parts of the earth, whose gentle tintinabulations like a bell striking upon the atmosphere, have reverberated to every land beneath the sun." Familiar in our literature have been the significant terms Dawn, Daybreak, etc., and one long established and influential Spiritualist organ has for its title Light. Its object and raison d'etre being from its special centre, to radiate light upon every conceivable subject, and particularly upon those questions which relate to man's higher nature and immortal well being. It is of course possible that as we are yet only in the very early morning of the New Dispensation, it may not be our lot to behold on this earth its noon-tide splendor; or more probably, the term "noontide" can only be appropriately applied as relating to personal spiritual development. Thus it may even now be the mere glimmer of dawn with some, whilst others are basking in the radiance of noon-day. Let us apply the expressive simile of sunrise to the upon the Bible, and upon human life generally. Of course, even at night you can to some extent distinguish objects, and see your way about. The intermittent light of the moon, and of the twinkling stars is helpful; and so likewise apart from Spiritualism, the grand moral and spiritual truths of the Bible including all that is necessary for practical conduct, are discernable, provided that these great truths are kept clearly and distinctly in view and acted upon. For instance, scarcely anyone can mistake the purpose of that super-excellent piece of literature, the Sermon on the Mount. But how are human beings to perceive what course to take, when the light of those moral and spiritual truths becomes obscured by the murky clouds of a priest-invented theology; and what will be the fate of earth's travellers, who under the guidance of an ignorant and self-interested priesthood, forsake the paths of practical obedience, and go astray into the fogs and morasses of theological creeds. In the darkness everything is distorted, exaggerated, obscured and seen in disproportion. In proof of this look at the groping and floundering, the uncertain, hesitating, and contradictory utterances of the teachers of orthodoxy. After nineteen centuries of preaching, no two of the conventionally recognized religious teachers agree as to the meaning of the great questions of atonement, inspiration, future state, etc. They themselves are for the most part lost in a maze of theological dialectics, and metaphysical subtilties, and being blind leaders of the blind, how can the inevitable fate of such be avoided?

THE TWO WORLDS, MANCHESTER, ENG.

VIEWS OF J. J. MORSE.

Could it be possible to aggregate the past and present intellect of the world into one huge metarama, and to be able to consciously relate ourselves thereto, so that it should occupy the same position towards us that our minds do, some would say it would be possible for us to revive the thoughts, actions, and phenomena of the individual histories of the world. Such supposition is within the bounds of reason, strange as it may seem. The aggregate of human consciousness is the measure of the unfoldment of the translation of the

into the consciousness of man, and just in proportion as we realize the fact that the barriers between individualities grow more and more attenuated as they approach the spiritual, so shall we understand that a community of mentality is just as possible as a community of sentiment or emotion, and that this colossal metarama is actually in existence, and constitutes a sphere of inspiration that contains within itself the essence of the accumulated experiences of all preceding times, and will continue to incorporate within itself the continued experiences of all future ages. It may be that in the distant and remote periods of the future, when the possibilities of that being which we are now commencing have been consummated, when, in a word, perception and reflection have accomplished all that can be done, that assimilation shall then assert itself, and the soul will then absorb the very essence of the laws, principles, and purposes pertaining to our present careers, and a new order of being shall spring from the central fountain, and we, then being better equipped than now, shall enter into a career of such ineffable splendor, brightness and possibility, that no words can describe to-day. And then it may be that the mind, as we call it to-day, shall become as a garment, clothing us each aright, and making us in our degree and order even as is God. For the present we must be content to accept mind as a vehicle for the manifestation of consciousness, carrying with it a forceful power that floats forward thought upon its waters until it becomes action, and realizing its potency in these regards, knowing by experience what a mighty and powerful engine it is, let our conscious effort be to direct it for the benefit of ourselves, the good of our fellows, the penetration of the forms of being, and the relating of our own natures to that divine nature beyond us all, yet from which we sprang and to which we sustain an eternal relation.

LIGHT, LONDON, ENG.

DO ANIMALS SEE SPIRITS?

I have frequently felt that I should like to ask some of your learned contributors to express their opinion regarding the immortality of animals, and seeing the article in Light for July 7, upon that subject, I take the opportunity to do so. I had a faithful bull-terrier which I have no doubt could plainly see spirits. Having been given to understand by mediums that some animals are clairvoyant, but that it is impossible to see spirits with our physical organs of vision—that only spirit can see spirit—what is it that enables dogs to see, if they have not a spirit body and are not spiritual entities? I have put the question to a very clever medium, but he could not give me a satisfactory answer.

These seven books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art will be furnished to our subscribers alone for $2.35. But bear in mind that in order to secure these SEVEN valuable premium books for $2.35, the order must be accompanied with a year's subscription for The Progressive Thinker. The paper one year, $1.00; the seven books, $2.35. Total, $3.35.

The aggregate price of these seven books to the trade is $10.75. In order to assist in forming a Spiritual and Occult Library in every Spiritualist's home, these seven valuable books are furnished to our subscribers for $2.35, which is less by far than their actual cost. The authors make no charge for the vast amount of labor bestowed on these works, and which extended over many years. The publisher receives not a single cent for the great expense he was to, hundreds of dollars being paid out in putting them in type, and electrotyping the pages, and making them ready for the printer. That is why you are getting these intensely interesting books for almost nothing. We are only carrying out the Divine Plan, inaugurated only by The Progressive Thinker. There are thousands of Spiritualists who take no Spiritualist paper, and this inducement is offered, in order that they may commence forming at once a Spiritual and Occult Library, and thus keep in line with the advancing procession. The postage on the above books and expense of mailing is about 85 cents, hence you are almost receiving them as an absolute gift.

By taking 85 cents from $2.35, you will find that all we have left us for those seven books is only $1.50.

Postmasters.

We have been swindled out of a large amount of money by postmasters, who knowing a person desires The Progressive Thinker, sends his money, deducting a large commission. The Progressive Thinker is one dollar per year. The great rise in print paper renders it utterly impossible for us to give any commission to news agents of postmasters.

Bear in mind when making a remittance, that only one book, the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3, is furnished for 25 cents. You must not substitute any other of the premium books for that one.

The To-Morrow of Death.

...OR THE...

Future Life According to Science.

BY LOUIS FIGUIER.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH
BY S. R. CROCKER.

A VERY FASCINATING WORK.

This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author is not a Spiritualist—he even mentions Spiritualists as "devotees of a new superstition," etc., etc., in which he manifests the usual animus of the "scientific class," yet he says again: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of Earth;" and he goes on to relate instances of fact in evidence. There is, to a Spiritualist, a manifest discrepancy in the author's ideas, but the well-read mind will readily select and arrange the pros and cons, and out of the whole will find not only good mental culture, but much valuable information. The author holds the theory of reincarnation. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

Joys Beyond the Threshold

A SEQUEL TO THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH.

BY LOUIS FIGUIER.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH was written to develop the idea of the principle of the permanence of the human soul after death, and its reincarnation in a chain of new beings, whose successive links are unrolled in the bosom of etherial space. "BEYOND THE THRESHOLD" continues on the same lines, enlarging and expanding the idea by reasons and considerations drawn from science and philosophy; claiming that the certainty of a new birth beyond our earthly end is the best means of arming ourselves against all weakness in the presence of death, and that the help offered by science and philosophy to that end is far superior to that of any of the existing religions. From beginning to end it is interesting, entertaining, instructive and fascinating, and whether one accepts it all or not, much will have been learned and much pleasure enjoyed in its perusal. Price $1.25. For sale at this office.

VOLNEY'S RUINS

—AND—

THE LAW OF NATURE,

TO WHICH IS ADDED

Volney's Answer to Dr. Priestly, a Biographical Notice by Count Daru, and the Zodiacal Signs and Constellations by the Editor;

Also, a Map of the Astrological Heavens o the Ancients.

Printed on heavy paper, from new plates, in large, clear type, with portrait and illustrations. One vol., post 8vo, 248 pages; paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

This is undoubtedly one of the best and most useful books ever published. It eloquently advocates the best interests of mankind, and clearly points out the sources of human ignorance and misery. The author is supposed to meet in the ruins of Palmyra an apparition or phantom, which explains the true principles of society, and the causes of both the prosperity and the ruin of ancient states. A general assembly of the nations is at length convened, a legislative body formed, the source and origin of religion, of government, and of laws discussed, and the Law of Nature—founded on justice and equity—is finally proclaimed to an expectant world.

ORIGIN OF SPECIES,

By means of natural selection, or the preservation of a favored race in the struggle for life. By Charles Darwin. Gilt top, cloth bound. This book is the grandest achievement of modern scientific thought and research. It has passed through many editions in English, has been translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and has been the subject of more reviews, pamphlets and separate books than any other volume of the age. Most of the great scientists of the age fully support his position. The thought of this book has become a part of the common inheritance of the race. For sale at this office. Price 75 cts.

"THE DREAM CHILD,"

A Fascinating Romance of Two Worlds. By Florence Huntley. Price, cloth, 75 cents. Books like "The Dream Child" spur humanity on to make more and more demands of this nature, and will open up new heights and depths of spiritual knowledge.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Will, I believe, take its place beside Bulwer's "Zanoni" and the "Seraphita" of Balzac.—Daily Capital, Topeka, Kansas. Although simple and unvarnished with any inflammable descriptions, enthralls the mind to the exclusion of other thoughts, until reluctantly the reader closes the last page.—Minneapolis Sunday Times. For sale at this office.

Conflict Between Religion and Science.

Just the book for progressive thinkers. By John W. Draper. Cloth. $1.75. For sale at this office.

THE TALMUD.

Selections from the contents of that ancient book, its commentarics, teachings, poetry, and legends. Also brief sketches of the men who made and commented upon it. By H. Polang. 859 pp. Price, cloth, $1.00. For sale at this office.

BIBLE OF BIBLES,

—OR—

TWENTY-SEVEN "DIVINE REVELATIONS"

BY KERSEY GRAVES.

THE TEACHINGS OF JESUS

Not Adapted to Modern Civilization, with the True Character of Mary Magdalene. By Geo. W. Brown, M.D. Price, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

OUR ECLECTIC MAGAZINE

THE SOUL IN DREAMS

Some Remarkable Incidents.

"The trail I should follow in order to apprehend a noted criminal was once clearly outlined to me in a dream," said Captain E. Halls recently. "It was on my first visit to Indianapolis and I had reached the depot late at night, almost worn out. I jumped into a cab, directing the driver to take me to the Spencer House, of which I had often heard. To my great surprise, he went across the street, turned around and opening the door said, 'Here you are, boss.' I paid him his fee without a murmur, thinking the joke was worth it. Entering the hotel I secured the key to my room as quickly as possible and went upstairs to retire for a night's good sleep. In pulling off my boots (they wore boots more then than they do nowadays) I noticed that the morocco tongue which reached down over the instep was in such a position that it caused my foot to chafe and gave me a great deal of pain. However, I continued undressing and at last tumbled into bed with a sigh of supreme satisfaction. Then came the dream. First, I was limping slowly downstairs into the hotel office. It seemed to be early in the morning. Nobody but the clerk was in the lobby. I felt like a good drink of something bracing would very materially aid me in digesting the meal which I was soon to order. Not wishing to drink alone, I invited the clerk to accompany me to the bar, which invitation he accepted with alacrity. When we reached the 'prescription counter,' the clerk ordered a cocktail and I nodded my approval. After we finished the beverage I repaired to the breakfast room, where I ordered steak and bacon. To this day I can recall the exquisite flavor of that bacon. I thought I had never eaten any like it before. After eating my simple meal I passed through the hotel office to the street, lighted a cigar and started leisurely north on Illinois street. When I reached the Bates House corner I turned west and continued my walk. I remember passing the old Metropolitan Opera House and the State Capitol. I kept on walking until I came to the canal and the bridge which crosses it. Attracted by the appearance of the water, I turned south on to the street which skirts the canal. I noticed the tumbledown appearance of the houses on the street.

ATTRACTED BY A HOUSE.

"My attention was particularly caught by a house standing near an alley. It seemed to be built of boards running up and down, with narrow strips running through the cracks between the boards, and the gable end towards the street. Just as I came opposite this peculiar house (in my dream, of course), I was greatly surprised to see Mrs. Carr, mother of the man I was hunting for, come to the door. I placed my hand on the gate and was in the act of opening it when I woke up. So vivid was the dream that my hand stung from contact with that decayed old gate, with its sharp edges sticking up. Of course, you will say that I had lain on that hand and it 'went to sleep,' causing the prickling sensation of numbness. Well, be that as it may, the dream seemed so real that I shook myself thoroughly before I could convince myself that I was in bed at the Spencer House instead of in front of old Mrs. Carr's ramshackle frame dwelling on the canal bank. Looking out of the window I saw it was full daylight and decided I would dress and go down to breakfast. In order to test the dream—just for fun, of course, since I do not believe in such things—I invited the clerk to take a drink with me. Contrary to the habit of hotel clerks, he took up willingly with my offer. My interest began to increase when he ordered a cocktail. Naturally, I took the same. At breakfast, soon after, I ordered steak and bacon, but there the dream failed to 'hold good.' The bacon was not a bit better than I had been accustomed to eating. The fact is I was so intent on that dream that I had no appetite. It really seemed as if I had just partaken of a full meal. Well, after I had 'minced among the dishes' a little, I sauntered out to the sidewalk, lighting a cigar as I went. I proceeded on up the street to the Bates House corner, where I turned west as I did in my dream. When I reached the old Metropolitan my nose went up in the air, after the fashion of a good hunting dog when he is on a keen scent. Then came the State House, and by that time I was walking pretty fast, I can tell you. When I reached the canal bridge I turned south and walked along in the certain expectation of coming to my 'dream house.' I found the corner all right, but the house which actually stood there did not quite tally with the one which I had seen in my vision.

MET A FRIEND.

"I passed and repassed the place, becoming more and more puzzled all the time. As I was about to turn and go back to the hotel I noticed that a man was coming from the house next to the one situated on the alley. I timed my steps so as to permit him to catch up with me, intending to make some inquiries of him. To my surprise it proved to be a man whom I had known very well in the town in which I formerly resided. 'Who are you after in this neighborhood?' were his first words. 'Oh, nobody,' I said. 'Can't a fellow take a walk along the canal without being suspected of wanting to make an arrest?' 'There are some people in that house next to mine whom you ought to know,' he said. 'Who are they?' I asked as carelessly as possible. 'Why, old lady Carr lives there,' he replied. 'Who has she got with her?' I inquired. 'Only a couple of girls,' he answered. 'Oh, yes, there has been a strange young fellow hanging around there for the last week. He doesn't show himself outside of the house, but I have seen him a few times from my kitchen window.' I could have fairly danced for joy. Of course, I knew who the stranger was, and within a few minutes had my man safely handcuffed and on his way to jail.

"A dream figured interestingly in another of my cases," continued Captain Halls, "but this time I did not do the dreaming. Some years after the occurrence of the incidents in my first story, a murder was committed in the little town of Oakwood, on the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western Railway, and I was sent for to assist in the detection of the murderer, who had successfully made his escape. I succeeded in locating him after a couple of weeks' search in a house down in the Wabash 'bottoms.' I managed to secure entrance to the house in which he was concealed and came upon him in a bedroom, apparently sound asleep, with the covers pulled up over his face. I supposed he was shamming, and, with a quick movement, jerked the covers away from him. Still he lay there motionless, blinking his eyes like a man who is just coming out of a deep slumber. I seized him by the shoulder and gave him a vigorous shake, exclaiming, 'Well, get up, Bill, I want you.' He did not move, but lay as one in a trance. I then took hold of his arm, gave it a violent pull and said, 'Why don't you get up? What's the matter with you, anyway?' At this he rose slowly, rubbing his eyes and saying. 'Tom, I was just dreaming of you.' 'Well,' I retorted, 'this is not part of the dream. You are now awake, of which fact I will convince you in a very few minutes.' He dressed slowly, just as a man would who was in a partly dazed condition, and allowed himself to be handcuffed without the slightest opposition. As we were riding back to the railway station I asked him about his dream. 'I was just dreaming you had come after me,' he replied, 'and that you were right there in the room, when I was awakened by a shock.' I was utterly unable to imagine why this man should have dreamed about me instead of the sheriff of the county, or chief of police of the city where his crime was committed. Of course, he was acquainted with me—in a purely business way—but had no reason to suppose I would be detailed on the case.

A DREAM VERIFIED.

"In still one other instance coming under my notice was a dream verified,' continued the detective. "It happened while I was stopping with a brother officer at the Planters' Hotel, in St. Louis. A bellboy came up to our room with information that a lady was waiting in the parlor to have a few words with me. Going to the parlor I found that the young woman was the sister of one of the most troublesome criminals this country has ever known. His first name was Robert, and he belonged to one of the foremost families in the land. I would scarcely dare to give you his name on account of the sensation it would create, to say nothing of the suffering it would cause prominent people. She plunged into her business without wasting time in preliminaries. 'Oh, Captain,' she exclaimed, 'do you know where Robert is and will you tell me?' I assured her that I hadn't the slightest idea of his whereabouts. She exhibited signs of the greatest mental distress, pacing across the floor several times in her agitation and wringing her hands nervously. Finally she evidently came to some decision and broke out with 'I guess I will have to tell you the cause of my trouble, after all. I had a dream about Robert last night. I saw him and a young man, whom I did not recognize, on the inside of a little grocery in a small country town. It was in the night. They had a wagon which resembled those used by grocers to deliver goods. This was stationed at the back door. Pretty soon they came out, carrying a large quantity of stuff, which they deposited in the wagon. The last bundle they brought out was a lot of silverware in a couple of coffee sacks. This was placed in the back of the wagon. Then they drove away at a rapid gait. I saw them go quite a distance through the open country and they were about to enter a strip of woods, when two men, one of whom looked like you, sprang out on each side of the wagon, grasped the reins of the horse, and cried out, 'Bob, we want you again.' Then I woke up. And now, for heaven's sake tell me, have you got him?' I again assured the young woman that I knew nothing about her brother's location at the time, but I promised to look him up and let her know what I might discover. In a few days afterward I found that Robert had, as a matter of fact, been arrested in identically the manner she had witnessed in a vision and for an exactly similar crime. I tell you these things without offering or attempting to offer any explanation of them. I know of none. I regard them as coincidences, but even at that they are very remarkable."—Indianapolis (Ind.) Journal.

IN THE OCCULT LINE.

Ghostly Warnings that Sailors Get.

QUEER SIGNS WHICH TELL POOR JACK WHEN TO SHAKE A SHIP AND STAY ASHORE—DREAM OF LOW WATER—THE SPIRIT HAND THE SAILOR WHOSE MOTHER'S SPECTRE LED HIM HOME.

Two sailors with their dunnage bags slung over their shoulders followed a shipping agent down a Bangor wharf the other day to go on board an old lumber hooker that lay waiting for her stores and crew. Just as the party reached the edge of the wharf a great grey rat was seen to cautiously and skillfully make his way along the taut bow hawser from the vessel to the wharf. The first sailor, seeing the rat leave the vessel and scuttle away up the wharf, stopped short in his tracks, dropped his bag and declared:

"That settles it—you don't get me aboard that hooker!"

The sailor's mate, a stupid-looking Swede, coaxed, and the shipping agent argued and swore and threatened, but all to no effect. The superstitious tar wouldn't join the vessel. "She's as good as gone," he declared—"they're all done for when the rats leave 'em." And he shipped in another vessel. The Swede went along in the rat-deserted schooner, with what luck is not yet known, and ever since then the shipping agent has been cursing the Jacks who go by signs and telling stories of vessels that have survived all sorts of ill omens.

While the shipping agent was talking away on this subject an old time sailor dropped in and took the opposite side of the argument, telling some stories that made all the Jacks in the place feel the need of something warming. "There," said the old man, "there was the case of the brig Starlight, that lost her second mate. The second mate dreamt the night before she sailed that he saw himself in his coffin, and when he came into Gillogly's place to take a parting drink with us he told of it, and we advised him to get another berth. He said he guessed it would be all right, but it wasn't. While helping the watch to reef her mainsail the footrope parted under him and that was the last of Jimmy.

"There was the bark Solferino, as pretty a little vessel as ever left this port. She sailed on Friday, drawing 13 feet and the cook killed a black cat the night before she got away. Some of the men got nervous over all this, and said so, but the mate took a handspike to them and, being anchored off, with all the boats up and lashed, and the harbor full of ice, there was no chance then to leave her. They never got a chance to leave her, for she went down in a northeaster two days out, and all hands with her.

"Now, a man of sense and with the fear o' God in him will get clear of a good deal of hard luck and stay on top of water longer than some of these smart Johnnies. There was Ned Hengler, who had shipped in the brig Rainbow, a gay old West India molasses and rum hooker. Ned he lived right here in Bangor, and he had good folks. The day before the brig was to sail Ned acted kind of dumpish, and he couldn't tell why. 'Long towards night he shook the feeling off and started down over the hill from the Hampden road to the river, with his bag on his back. It was a still moonlight night, and the tide would serve in a hour from the time Ned started from home. He got half way down the hill, and could hear the tug coming for the brig's hawser, so's to make her up with the rest of the tow. Just then he felt a soft touch on his arm, and turned 'round. There in the moonlight stood his own old mother—as had been in her grave eight years, and she looked just as natural, Ned said, as when she used to stand in the door bidding him goodbye when he was a young fellow going off to sea. She looked kind of sad and coaxing at him, and led him back over the hill, just as softly as a shudder, and pointed toward home. Then she went out of sight like a puff of smoke. Ned stood there a minute or two, not able to move, and his bag dropped off his shoulder. When he come to himself he felt cold, though it was August. He started for home and when he got there the first thing he did was to say his prayers. The Rainbow sailed without him, and she was never heard from.

"I remember Tom Scott, as others here remember him, and no one can say but what he was a man of sense. He was the best man that ever sailed out of this place, and he could lick any two men in Bangor in a fair fight. He was hard headed as they make 'em, but he wouldn't sail in the old schooner Harvest Home after he had got his dunnage aboard and stowed away and was turned in for the night. Why? Well, he dreamt that it was low water—chuck low water, and that's about the worst thing a sailor man can dream of, and he woke up. Then, as he laid there, thinking it over, he felt a hand passed across his face. First he thought it was a rat's tail, for she was full of rats, but the hand came again, soft as a feather—kind of smoothing him, like, and it felt like the hand of Death. That was enough. Tom turned out, got his duds and went ashore quick, while all the rest of them were snoring. She sailed in the morning, and the old man raved like Bedlam when he missed Tom—the best hand he had. Tom stayed to home that trip, and well it was for him. They got a stinger from the southeast just after the Harvest Home sailed, and all that was ever found of her was some of her deckload of pine boards and one of her quarter boards, with her name on it. I don't believe in being too fussy, but it pays a man to take a hint once in a while."—Bangor (Maine) News.

CHILDLESS MOTHER'S LULLABY.

Oh, many's the time in the evening,
When the light has fled over the sea,
That I dream alone in the gloaming
Of the joys that are not for me;
And oft in my sorrowful bosom
Swells up the mother-love flame,
And I clasp with arms that are trembling
My child that never came.

Singing, "Hush thee, hush thee; hush-a-by, darling;
Nestle thee deeper in mother's breast.
Oh, hush thee, hush thee; hush-a-by darling;
Tenderest angels will guard thy rest."

The candles far down in the city
Shine out thro' the purplish gray,
And the stars come out in the heavens
And glimmer across the bay;
The murmuring waves steal homeward
From the ocean's larger blue,
As I dream alone in the gloaming
Of the child I never knew;

Singing, "Hush thee, hush thee; hush-a-by, darling;
Nestle thee deeper in mother's breast.
Oh, hush thee, hush thee; hush-a-by darling;
Tenderest angels will guard thy rest."

Oh, the little warm cheek in my bosom;
Oh, the little wet lips at my breast
Oh, the clinging, wee, satiny fingers
To my longing lips that are pressed!
There was never a song that was sweeter,
Tho' its singer be laureled with fame,
Than the song that I sing in the gloaming
To the child that never came.

"Oh, hush thee, hush thee; hush-a-by, darling;
Nestle thee deeper in mother's breast,
Oh, hush thee, hush thee; hush-a-by, darling;
Tenderest angels will guard thy rest."

The hours swim on to the midnight;
The moon looks over the hill,
And the u-lu-lu of the night owl
Sinks mournfully and shrill.
The solitude aches with rapture,
And my heart with the mother-love flame,
As I sing alone in the gloaming
To the child that never came.

"Oh, hush thee, hush thee; hush-a-by, darling;
Nestle thee deeper in mother's breast,
Oh, hush thee, hush thee; hush-a-by, darling;
Tenderest angels will guard thy rest."
—Ella Higginson.

IS THERE A FUTURE LIFE?

Oh, where can I find rest?
Oh, how can I find peace?
How can I know I still shall live
When life on earth shall cease?

Oh, ever-present doubt,
Oh, all-consuming fear,
Shall I, as I, be blotted out
When life shall fail me here?

In never-ending space,
Is there no space for me,
Where I, still I, may find a place
My dwelling-place to be?

Oh, God, if God there be,
Who gave this mortal breath,
Wilt thou again bring me to naught,
And blot me out at death?

O Nature limitless,
Is this your stern decree?
Will you, who me to this have brought,
Now bid me cease to be?

O brother gone before,
Do you, my brother, live?
Oh, come and bid me doubt no more—
The blest assurance give.

Oh, rapture who can tell!
I hear my brother's voice—
That voice long known and loved so well—
It makes my heart rejoice.

"I am your brother still,
Your brother as before;
Fear not, fear not, there is no death,
But life for evermore."

HEAVEN.

A Message Given by a Spirit Visitant.

Again I find myself in seclusion with my spirit friends, and as usual I am commanded to "write." I ask what shall I write. And the answer is "Write," so I have written what I hear in a soul sense!

"I am a spirit who dwells in spirit life, or what is known as the realm of soul life, and I knew of this land of soul life long before I entered it, long before I left the earth plane, and I knew full well that as I should sow in earth life so should I reap a thousand fold over in this realm of spirit. And what heavenly conditions I have found here. I can safely say that the seed was sown or planted while I dwelt upon the earth plane here below, so when the hour of my departure came, when my spirit was to leave the mortal form, I was surrounded by a host of angel guides, and I slept the sweet sleep of earthly death, and my contented and willing soul was wafted to a realm of peace and quiet rest and joy in this land of beauty in soul existence.

"Blessed, thrice blessed is the mortal that has a knowledge of spirit life before he enters it. Thrice happy is the mortal that knows of the step he is taking, and thrice happy is he who can take this step with his soul unstained with the contact with the temptations that beset his every path in earth life. I made a heaven of my earth existence. I found a heaven here. Father and mother met me at the great gate that swings so lightly between this earth and spirit life—swings so lightly that the breath of the tiniest infant that ever left the lower plane can open it. Brother and sisters met me there at this new birth; wife and children with loving hearts and welcome embrace crowded around me, just at this gate between the two worlds, this gate which is but a thin veil, a soul shadow as it seems to us in mortal life, which vanishes as soon as the soul is freed from earth environments, and the glories of that higher life breaks upon the senses like a vision of glory, and you can through the gates ajar see rising through the radiant air the shining hills of a new Paradise. A host always surrounds me there, and I dwell in bliss. Oh, 'tis my fervent wish that every mortal that ever dwelt upon earth in its shadow-land might experience the glorious awakening; and all can do so, if they all could realize the fact, the very natural fact, that there is a life just beyond the coffin and the shroud, that is a grand and beautiful reality. Then none would come unprepared, no soul would then enter that beautiful gate stained with blood, none would come with a blackened soul, but all would come filled with the joys that belong to all mankind.

"No angry and frowning God met me at the awakening, and no grinning Devil beckoned me away to untold torture; but harmonious peace was mine.

"You may say that I overdraw this picture, or rather to me this reality, but no, I could not if I would convey to you the joy unspeakable that came to me at this second birth, and my awakening into a realm of eternal joy and peace, all in accord with the natural law of a Spiritual heaven. So can a soul in accord with the same natural law bring with him a hell from earth if he has sown of utter damnation while in earth existence. "As ye sow, so shall ye reap," and the harvest of good or evil is garnered in the realm of the great hereafter, the eternal forever.

"Your lecture last Sunday was upon "Heaven," and all your lecture was right, for I aided you from my standpoint in spirit life. For heaven is but a condition, and not a place. 'Tis a condition where man's soul is lifted from the depths of earthly despair to the pinnacled heights of spiritual glory, where the roseate hues surround us, and where we live and move and have our being in the sweet tender tones wafted to us from love-tuned voices, where we dwell amid the delightful odors coming from flowers that bloom in the gardens of loving souls' truest and best affections, where we meet with our loved ones in the supernal light of the life eternal.

"Yet even from this exalted height we drop at times, from our ecstatic and exalted state, down from this zenith point of joy, to the very nadir of despair, where the remembrance and sight of some misdeed of our earth life makes our spirit life a veritable hell. But we have taken so many steps and gained so much along the upward road of eternal progression that our return to these remembrances and misdeeds grows less day by day, as we strive to reach the glorious heights beyond, and none can dwell in this our heaven without being lifted up beyond our sorrows until the very hills of our Paradise are glowing and glittering with the glory of heavenly joy.

"My soul expands and beats with a quicker, newer vigor as I mount day by day higher and higher up the ladder of progression; step by step I go up and new heavens open up before me, and brighter and brighter grow the visions of glorious beauty that my soul views in the near-by summerland. I strive to go up higher and am rewarded by taking a step upward, a step higher. Oh, that I had striven in earth life to lift myself up, and to lift my fellow mortal up, as I have striven here, then I could have taken these upward steps long, long ago.

"Do I go alone in this upward march of the soul? Oh, no; beside me and around me are the friends of my youthful days in earth life, and near me is the guardian angel of my living soul, an ever present monitor, who points out to me the path that I must tread to reach the eternal life and the beauteous glories beyond.

"Joy is mine in this progression and my constant wish is that I might yet in the ages beyond, be able to reach the infinite, yet I ask can man's soul ever reach that blissful state, that state of perfection that befits the gods? Who knows?

"The glory of brighter and higher spheres entices me on, and good deeds are remarded by a step ahead, a step nearer the celestial joys of the future.

"Do I leave the dear ones, the loved ones behind me in this advancement? Not at all. Clouds of them dwell with me in this broad way of eternal good; myriads drift with me to higher homes, and millions hope for the higher and more beautiful homes beyond.

"Earth life is beautiful to the inhabitants of earth, but oh, how beautiful to the spirit of man is this glorious spirit life. How grand to the soul is this home of the soul, in this region of soul rest.

"Amid all this joy, amid all this glory, we do not forget the toiling millions of earth, for from our sphere is wafted hope for the weak and weary of earth realm, and the best wishes to all mankind in their struggle for progression. But what a wall of superstition of ignorance, of bigotry, there is placed between spirit life and the life on earth—making spirit life and earth life so very far apart, when they are so very near together.

"But the day is breaking and man is gradually nearing the spiritual, gradually reaching out for the beautiful, gradually growing out of the animal, gradually growing nearer the celestial home of the soul, in the great hereafter in the realm of eternal life."

Buffalo, N. Y. J. W. DENNIS.

Who Killed Humbert?

Every intelligent person knows that the bitterest hatred has existed many years in the Vatican for the Italian government—especially for King Humbert and his leading supporters. A thousand times have the passions of papal fanatics been inflamed by appeals from the Pope to such an extent that the king's life has been threatened—and on several occasions his assassination has been attempted.

Now comes the dreadful news that Humbert has perished—at the hand of—what?—who?—an anarchist! There can be little doubt but that this anarchist is the tool of the papal party.

F. C. Conybeare, the well-known author, in an article in the National Review for July, uses these words (see page 728):

"In Italy it is the cue of the Vatican to hold aloof, at least in appearance, from politics, and in view of the general election at the beginning of this month of June, the usual 'fiat' went forth to all the faithful 'ni eletti ni elettori.' The object of Pio Nono in imposing this rule was to boycott the Italian government, which he regarded, and wished others to regard, as one of usurpation and sacrilege. The result has been to prevent the formation in the Italian chamber of a Catholic party, though it has not hindered the priests from intriguing with the Anarchists and fomenting discontent and a spirit of riot in the large industrial centers."

The Citizen has been accused at times of being an "alarmist"—of making statements without sufficient evidence. If readers will turn back over our files they will discover that every important statement about Rome made in our columns is based upon authority, and the authority is always given. When we made the statement, two years ago, that the friars were responsible for the troubles in the Philippines, we were accused of "unreasoning bigotry." When we said, some weeks since, that Rome was largely responsible for the troubles in China, the same cry was raised. But now that the Citizen is found to be correct, these same objectors are crying out: "We told you so! we said that Rome was behind it!"—taking credit to themselves for facts which they denied.

Now note the trend of events in Italy and see if our statement that Rome is behind the assassination is not correct.

In the Boston Transcript Monday evening appeared this dispatch:

"London, July 30.—Some of the evening papers here attempt to trace a connection between the assassination of King Humbert and the rancorous propaganda that the Vatican is alleged to have conducted against the supremacy of the sovereign. These journals point out that the assassination occurred in the vicinity of Milan, where, it is alleged, the recent insurrection was largely fomented by the Roman curia. The Globe editorializes as follows: 'As long as the Vatican persists in its anti-national attitude, it will be in vain to hope for re-establishing the temporal power of the Pope, and so long will fools and fanatics be provided with a fearfully potent reason for sedition or worse.'"—The Citizen, Boston, Mass.

WE call special attention to The Next World Interviewed, one of our special premiums. We are enabled to furnish it to our readers at the price announced in our premium list, from the simple fact that Mr. Horn donated the plates of the book to us. We have sent out thousands of copies of this book, and it has been well received everywhere. It should be circulated by the millions among all classes of Spiritualists. The seven books that we are offering to Spiritualists as premiums contain a large storehouse of useful knowledge on Spiritual and Occult subjects. You should have them on the shelves of your library where you can have access to them at any time. Read carefully our premium announcement.

TWO IN ONE
A COMBINATION OF
"The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.
BY MOSES HULL.
This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books combined at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 469 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.
THE QUESTION SETTLED
is a faithful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its moral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, and expressed clearly and forcibly.
THE CONTRAST
consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend Spiritualism, or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.
PRICE $1. FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

KAREZZA.
ETHICS OF MARRIAGE.
By Alice B. Stockham, M. D.
Karezza makes a plea for a better birthright for children, and aims to lead individuals to seek a higher development of themselves through most sacred relations. It is pure in tone and aim, and should be widely circulated. Price, cloth, $1.

ASTRAL WORSHIP,
By J. H. Hill, M. D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Superstition in all Ages
Or "Le Bon Sens,"
By JEAN MESLIER,
A Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastoral service of thirty years in France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and asked God's pardon for having taught the Christian religion. He left this volume as his last will and testament to his parishioners and to the world. Translated from the French original by Miss Anna Knoop.
Post 8vo., 339 pages, with portrait. Cloth, $1.00; postage, 10 cents.

"The work of the honest pastor is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind that the last century produced. . . . Paine and Voltaire had reserves, but Jean Meslier had none. He keeps nothing back; and yet, after all, the wonder is not that there should have been one priest who left that testimony at his death, but that all priests do not."—James Parton.

EVOLUTIONISM.

Single copy..... 5 cts

REMITTANCES.

Remit by Postoffice Money Order, Registered Letter, or draft on Chicago or New York. If costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so don't send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Direct all letters to J. R. Francis, No. 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

CLUBS: IMPORTANT SUGGESTION!

As there are thousands who will at first venture only twenty-five cents for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER thirteen weeks, we would suggest to those who receive a sample copy, to solicit several others to unite with them, and thus be able to remit from $1 to $10, or even more than the latter sum. A large number of little amounts will make a large sum total, and thus extend the field of our labor and usefulness. The same suggestion will apply in all cases of renewal of subscriptions—solicit others to aid in the good work. You will experience no difficulty whatever in inducing Spiritualists to subscribe for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, for not one of them can afford to be without the valuable information imparted therein each week, and at the price of only about two cents per week.

A Bountiful Harvest for 25 Cents.

Do you want a more bountiful harvest than we can give you for 25 cents? Just pause and think for a moment what an intellectual feast that small investment will furnish you. The subscription price of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER thirteen weeks is only twenty-five cents! For that amount you obtain one hundred and four pages of solid, substantial, soul-elevating and mind-refreshing reading matter, equivalent to a medium-sized book!

TAKE NOTICE!

☞ At expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly, write to us, and errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it is then sent, or the change cannot be made.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The Progressive Thinker is furnished in the United States at $1.00 per year, the postage thereon being but nominal, but when it is sent to foreign countries we are compelled to charge 50 cents extra, making the yearly subscription $1.50. Please bear that in mind.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1900.

A Gloomy Outlook, and a Hopeful Remedy.

The New York Sun, in a late issue, made the following statement:

"'There has been a very noticeable decline in the sales of religious books,' said a publisher who once printed many of them, 'and I don't know how to account for it. The churches are growing in wealth and numbers all the time, according to their own figures; but the interest in religious books has declined to such an extent we now publish very few of them. Old publishing houses that years ago relied on such works for their profit have turned their attention to fiction in response to the public demand. That has been my experience, and I give it to you without comment.'"

The religious journals non-supporting, preachers unemployed, pulpits empty, church buildings falling into decay, else converted into school houses, factories, or warehouses, and the membership if not absolutely decreasing, not keeping up with the advance of population, the future, to churchmen, must be one of gloom.

Amend your creeds; dismiss your barbarian God borrowed from the Jews, and construct a new one along scientific lines; give your devil the grand bounce; turn your hell over to the Catholics who need it badly; get rid of the flummery you borrowed from the parent church; send your Bibles and missionaries to the cannibal islanders; teach natural law in place of a "Thus saith the Lord," and when you get rid of all your rot embrace Spiritualism and live moral lives thereafter; then you may hope for a glorious immortality which awaits all of us when the fever of life is over.

Inciting Cause of War.

A writer who is content to limit his investigation to the inciting cause of the American Revolution, and ascribes it to the Stamp Act of that period, may fall very far short of the real truth. The casuist will inquire into the motives of that act, and learn what lies beneath. There was a deficit of revenue to carry on the expenses of the British government, and it was expected that act would supply the deficiency, and it was enacted in consequence.

At the period under consideration the tithing system was in full force in Great Britain in the interest of the church, by which her flocks and herds and fields were annually robbed of one-tenth their products for ecclesiastical purposes. This burden was so severe on the producer it was impractical to add additional taxes, hence the resort to the tax on trade and commerce.

During our War of the Rebellion a stamp act was resorted to as a source of revenue, and the same method was employed and is still in force, to increase the revenue on account of the late Spanish war, and for the subjection of the Filipinos; but we must go deeper than these revenue acts to find the cause of their enactment. Were a true inquiry made into the causes of the American rebellion we apprehend it would find its root in a bull of the Pope permitting the enslavement of heathen who had no rights Christians were bound to respect, whilst the Supreme Pontiff found his authority for action in a "Thus saith the Lord" promulgated by Moses.

Supposing Again.

This is a Christian nation. Proof:

"Escanaba, Mich., July 23.—Wah Kee, a Chinese laundryman, was beaten so seriously yesterday he is in a precarious condition. One arm is broken in two places, and it is believed his skull is fractured. The assault was made in his laundry by Frank O'Donnell and Coleman Joyce, who used their clubs on him 'because of the Chinese situation.'"

Now this was a humble laundryman washing dirty linen for Christians. Suppose he had been a Buddhist missionary, laboring to supplant the Christian religion, all the time ridiculing the idea of a virgin-born God, his worship, prayers offered to him, and he, the son of a Jewish maiden, made to appear as the Father of himself, not only equal in power and glory with the Father, but the identical Creator of the universe. Why, there would not have been a grease spot left of that "heathen Chinee."

Cheering Words.

That distinguished scholar, author, late a Christian preacher, but now one of the heretics, so common in these last days, Moncure D. Conway, says:

"Onward, ye children of the new faith! The sun of Christendom hastes to its setting, but the hope never sets of those who know that the sunset here is a sunrise there."

Spiritualists, take cheer from these words.

Things We Want to Know.

We read and hear so much about the civilizing influences of Christianity, it would be very desirable to have some information which has been withheld from the world quite too long:

If Christianity was, and is in fact, the world's civilizer, why did the Roman empire relapse into barbarism so soon as it came under Christian influence?

Why was the civilization of Egypt abandoned, its prosperity obliterated, its architecture destroyed, and nothing left of her former glory but desolation, so soon as the cross took the place of the Roman eagle?

Why did Greece, with such a memorable record and brilliant achievements, whose literature is still the delight of the world, and whose former magnificence, like Egypt, is shown in her ruins—the admiration of all archaeologists, fall into decay when the cross gained the mastery, the site of some of her great cities a matter of doubt among the learned?

Christianity a civilizer! Why perished Jerusalem, Gaza, Tyre, Sidon, Antioch, Damascus, and why does nothing remain of the greatness and prosperity of Palestine and the fame of her cities under Grecian and Roman rule, all ending soon after the alleged birth of this regenerator of the race?

Why did the Roman toleration of all religions and of no religions, common to all countries subject to the Roman eagle, come to a speedy end so soon as the cross was substituted as the emblem of government?

Finally, if the cross is a civilizer, why did every government in Europe, Asia or Africa, fall away into barbarism, so soon as it came under Christian control and so remain until other influences gained the mastery?

As Christian power declined, and humanity gained supremacy, commerce, agriculture, the arts and sciences, and a broadened literature, have come to the front. Each advancing year notes the decline of Faith and the advance of Knowledge, indicating a time will come—it is not distant—when the latter will gain supreme ascendancy, and the whole world will become subordinate to its benign influence, then true Wisdom will be master over all. This is the hope and the earnest belief of all true philanthropists.

An Indignant Inquiry.

The Atlanta Constitution lately wanted to know: "What has become of hell?" The editor then deplores its loss, and, probably, with great big tears as they furrowed deep channels down his cheeks, inquired:

"Who of us nowadays ever hears sermons in which the words 'fire and brimstone' occur, or sermons like those John the Baptist preached when he stood on the banks of the Jordan, and warned sinners to flee from the wrath to come?"

Our contemporary has read his New Testament to little purpose if he supposes John, "crying in the wilderness," preached of "the wrath to come." On the contrary the burden of John's plaint, as told by Matthew, was: "Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Instead of preaching, as the Constitution seems to suppose, he indignantly inquires: "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" He was anxious to know who had taught such a God-dishonoring sentiment, and he appealed to the "vipers" for the requisite information. The "fire and brimstone" was the production of John's cousin, Jesus, a little later, but he unquestionably borrowed the idea from the old Pagan mythology current when he is represented to have been acting the part of an anarchist, was laboring in a very humble way to overthrow the constituted authorities, and was trying to set himself up as king.

John did say, if we credit the record, that another would come after him who would purge the chaff with fire, and it was the latter's followers who erected the stake, tied those they designated heretics to it, piled fagots around, set fire to them, and, with seeming glee, burned them with "unquenchable fire." From the continuous burning, carried on for centuries by Pagan Devil-worshipers, calling themselves Christians, the fire was correctly named unquenchable; but it was not John the Baptist, who may have been a very creditable person, if not a myth, who taught such a horrible doctrine, lately so common in every orthodox pulpit.

A General Wail.

"The heathen are perishing for want of the bread of life, and you refuse to come down with the needed money to pay the expense of sending missionaries to them," is the regular wail of the clergy whose own needs are abundantly supplied.

With less than one-third of our entire population Christian, there comes a cry from the home missionary: "There are millions of homes in our own blessed America where the name of the dear Jesus is never heard except profanely. We must have money to send colporteurs into courts, and lanes, and by places to save these poor lost souls from a burning hell."

While we listen a wail comes from India from millions of poor starving wretches: "We are perishing in vast numbers day by day for want of food. God withheld his rains. Though we toiled and planted we had no harvest. Even the cattle all around us are starving, and Want is in every home, and presides at every hearth. Send us food to relieve our present necessities. Soon Nature will give us bounteous harvests, while at the same time you may be deprived, then we will return your favors with compound interest."

The missionary carries war and desolation in his trail. Humanity, relieved in distress, awakens kindly sympathies in turn. Let us remember the trite old maxim: "They who serve humanity best serve God most."

And they who are so ambitious to convert the "heathen" to their views will do well to turn their attention to China, and see the bloody trail along the paths of the missionary.

John Wesley.

Subscribers have often made inquiries in regard to where they could find an account of the spirit manifestations that occurred in the Wesley family. Hon. A. B. Richmond, widely known as the Sage of Cassadaga, goes into the subject exhaustively, and all of our readers will return especial thanks to him for the valuable information imparted. This number of The Progressive Thinker will be found especially interesting throughout, commencing with the leading article on the first page, by the California philosopher, Charles Dawbarn.

A Christian Test.

"Go thy way, sell whatever thou hast, and give to the poor?"—Mat. 10:21.

Jesus had been asked by one who kneeled before him: "What can I do to inherit eternal life?" The suppliant informed the Master that he had kept all the commandments from his youth; but he was told in reply he lacked one thing yet, and that was his failure to give all he had to the poor—virtually to those who had acted on his advice, given on a former occasion, to "Take no thought of the morrow, for he who cares for the birds will care for you."

Either the gospel writers were not accurate in their records, else to be a faithful follower of Jesus one must abandon home, and friends, and cherished loved ones, and become a mendicant if he desires eternal life.

Applying this one test there are very few Christians to-day, and they are popularly known as hoboes—they neither toil nor spin, but subsist by beggary.

What about the clergy, they who are accumulating vast estates, as many of them do; who are paid princely salaries for preaching; who retain all their wealth through life, and pass it on to prosperous heirs at death—what claims have they on eternal life? And though a Rockefeller does give seven millions of dollars to a rich University to qualify young men to become propagandists of the faith, gaining great honors thereby, does it meet the requirements of Jesus to "give all to the poor?" And still retaining wealth does he not fail to comply with the demand, as did the unfortunate Judas who withheld a part of the proceeds of the field and met a calamitous death in consequence?

The Bible in China.

The Boxers, in their war on missionaries, took their cue from the Bible furnished them in great abundance in their own tongue by these same Christian missionaries. Turn to Joshua 10:28 to close of chapter, and note how Joshua, at the command of the "Lord God of Israel," took Makkedah, and Libnah, and Lachish, and Gezer, and Eglon, and Hebron, and Debir, and all the country of the hills, and of the south, and of the vale, and of the springs, and all their kings: he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed.

The Chinese are said to be the most imitative people in the world, and as the Christian's Lord God had instructed his favorites under Gen. Joshua how to act against enemies, they—the Chinese—borrowed the idea and acted upon it to the letter against those they considered their enemies.

If The Progressive Thinker was to advise in the premises it would be: Civilize the Bible before you place it in the hands of heathen, unless you desire it to become a boomerang, to minister to your own destruction. At home the book is not read, at least not understandingly, so its wickedness is really little known to those in the faith. The preachers always skip its obnoxious teaching, and only cite passages to meet their approbation. It is from these selections, not vicious of themselves, that the masses form their opinion of the book, a compilation of immoralities, with an occasional streak of unobjectional matter.

Violence a Poor Argument.

The Tribune well says that it is hard to see how the persons who attacked the two preachers of Koreshan doctrines in this city the other day can justify their actions in their own minds. The men so attacked were making open-air addresses, as they had a right to do. They were teaching the creed that mankind lives on the inside instead of the outside of the earth, which is nonsensical and amusing but which they had a perfect right to maintain. Preaching this or any other theory of cosmogony on the streets is no excuse for attacking them with eggs or vegetables or violence of any kind. If any man were to devote his time to a solemn crusade in the interest of the time honored belief that the moon is made of green cheese that would be no reason why those who stopped to listen should disturb the peace by attacking him.

There is entirely too much of this sort of intolerance at the present time. It is an inexcusable violation of the right of free speech. A few days ago the lawless element in an Ohio city attacked a couple of elders of Dowie's establishment, daubed them with paint, and otherwise maltreated them, and then drove them out of the town. By so doing the perpetrators accomplished nothing more than to give proof of their own ignorant intolerance and to afford the abused elders a chance to pose as martyrs. Not long ago an alleged ex-Catholic priest in Chicago tried to express his opinions at a meeting in a hall on the West Side, and was interrupted by indignant hearers. Proceedings of this sort are not in harmony with the genuine spirit of American liberty. They may be the proper thing in China, but they should not be tolerated in the United States.

If people do not like the doctrines of a street preacher they can pass on and not waste their time listening. If a man sees an announcement that a meeting is to be held at which the religion he professes is to be "exposed" he is not obliged to attend that meeting. If he does go he should be quiet, no matter how unpleasant the statements that may be made. One can have no sympathy with the men who go to such places to have their feelings wrought upon, and who then create a disturbance. Only the ignorant are guilty of that sort of intolerance. They stand in need of the wholesome correction of the law, whether they are in Ohio or in Illinois.

Stingy Churchmen.

"If the contributions to the church made by some people who expect a starry crown in the next world were added together it wouldn't buy a last season's straw hat."

The above quotation from a religious paper shows the churches have their trouble in gaining the sinews of war as well as Spiritualists. But this should not be. An open hell yawns in front of them; the Devil with his cloven foot, barbed tail and trident is behind goading them to destruction; whilst the priest promises exemption from all danger if the sinner will believe in a virgin-born God; but he is sure to keep an eye for earthly blessings on the coin of the realm, as the gentle hint in the quoted item proves.

Good Points.

Men who are good from compulsion are not good at all. The fellow to tie to is the one who knows just where to draw the line between ascetism and excess.—Ex.

The Most Consummate Ignorance and Superstition.

This is supposed to be a "Christian" nation, yet how far advanced are segments of it above the ordinary ignorant and superstitious Chinese? Take, for example, the account given of the "Holy" relic at St. Anne, Ill. Fifteen hundred people crowded the church there lately and, kneeling in turn in front of the sanctuary, reverently kissed the little glass case which contained a bone from the wrist of St. Anne, the mother of the Virgin, expecting thereby not only to insure their soul's welfare but to obtain freedom from physical ills, for Anne is the patron saint of the sick and the distressed.

Eight hundred of those who crowded before the altar of the saint were from Chicago. Four hundred of these were French Canadians from the Church of Notre Dame de Chicago, at Vernon Park place and Sibley streets, and the rest of the pilgrims included small delegations from every Catholic church in Chicago, religionists from all the villages and communities in the neighborhood of St. Anne, and many from almost all the larger cities of the State.

The occasion was the feast of St. Anne, the day on which communicants gather before the shrine of the saint and pay their devotions. The relics of St. Anne are supposed by many to possess curative virtues, and among the hundreds that go annually on each recurring feast day to press their lips against the glass case containing the bit of bone from the saint's wrist are always many who are afflicted with some bodily ailment.

In the great crowd that overflowed the little country town wherein the church stands were many sorely distressed by mental or physical illness which they hoped the good St. Anne would heal. There were several half-paralyzed, who dragged their crippled limbs down the street to the church, firm in the belief of the efficacy of the sacred relic. Several feeble-minded children were brought by their parents to be healed by the saint, and older people, long sufferers from some painful sickness, murmured their prayers with trembling lips as they eagerly awaited their turn, when they might hold, for a short time, the precious relic in their hands.

The great majority of the pilgrims to St. Anne were women. In one car sat thirty Sisters of Mercy, engaged most of the time in prayer. One told how she was healed several years ago by the holy relic, saying that she had knelt before the shrine all night, praying without ceasing to the saint to cure her bodily infirmity. When she arose from her knees in the morning she was healed. Father Gelinas, of Notre Dame, vouched for the truth of the story told by the sister.

Father Gelinas told of another incident that came under his notice. During the feast of St. Anne in 1897, a young woman, who said she was almost blind, knelt before the altar, and after kissing the relic of the saint arose and, throwing away her glasses, declared that her sight had been completely restored. Many were present who said that they went home free from the pains that had vexed them in the morning when they started on the pilgrimage.

Father Achille L. Bergeron, pastor of Notre Dame, is conservative in his statements in regard to the temporal benefits derived from the shrine of St. Anne, but declared no soul knelt in vain before the shrine.

The tradition of the feast celebrated is that during the twelfth century a poor peasant of the Province of Bretagne, in France, saw in a vision St. Anne, who asked him to erect a shrine in her honor. Accordingly a church was erected to the saint at Saint Anne d'Auray, in Bretagne.

The services at St. Anne began with low mass at half-past eight, followed by high mass at half-past ten o'clock. Then the pilgrims, all of whom had fasted before going on the journey to the shrine of the saint, gathered outside the walls of the convent, under the big shade trees, and broke their fasts, eating luncheon out of the baskets and boxes of food they had carried with them. In the afternoon Father Dugast, of St. Mary's, preached in French, and Father Bergeron in English, and then the ceremony of kissing the relic occurred.

The relic was brought to the town by a priest who procured it in Rome in 1892.

Here we have an example of ignorance and superstition so dense that one can seemingly cut it with a knife. To ascribe healing properties to an old bone is the highest of folly, and a disgrace to the intelligence of the 20th century. That some who have visited the shrine have recovered from bodily infirmities, we have no doubt, as Catholic spirits sent down upon them their healing influence with excellent results, thus aiding and fostering the Catholic Church. Spirit manifestations are common to every class or sort of people, and they are often utilized to cultivate the grossest of superstitions, as manifested by those who think an old bone has healing properties.

Anarchism and Catholicism.

Italy is Catholic to the core. Nearly her entire population are Catholics, and there anarchism has its capital, and attempts to rule the world by assassination of the heads of governments. The great crimes of the last century in this direction are mostly traceable to Italian assassins. Santo, who stabbed President Carnot of France to death, was an Italian. It was an Italian anarchist who shot Senor Canovis. A French-Italian, Laochini, murdered the most estimable empress of Austria. And an Italian from America a few days ago killed the very worthy King Humbert.

Most all of the assassins of rulers in recent times, have been either Catholics, or sympathizers with that church. The question naturally arises: Does Catholicism invite to crime? Statistics seem to answer this question in the affirmative.

An Honest Man Gone.

Died, in Burritt, near Rockford, Ill., about August 2, George Tullock, Esq., aged upwards of 80 years.

When the great Baptist revivalist, Elder Knapp, of two generations ago, was making his will the notary inquired: "Who shall I name as executor?" "George Tullock." "But George Tullock is an Infidel." "George Tullock is an honest man, and I want an honest man to administer on my estate."

Though Elder Knapp's estate was a very large one, accumulated while in the soul-saving business, and held in disregard of the direction of the Master to "sell all and give to the poor," George Tullock administered on that estate, to the entire satisfaction of the numerous heirs; and though throughout his life warmly antagonizing pagan theology, as taught by the church, he died full of honors and universally respected.

Child in a Trance Went to Heaven.

It appears from the New York Daily Journal that Little Sophie Fowler, of Milford, Ct., went into a strange trance for five days, and on awaking from it declares that she had been taken by the angels to the spirit land. Her condition, physicians declare, was most remarkable, and the account she gave of her spirit travels was coherent.

Sophie is the twelve-year-old daughter of Mark Fowler, of Milford. She is a pretty, spiritual looking child, but not at all precocious. Her brain is perperfectly normal and sound. This statement is made because so many trance patients are in some stage of insanity.

On Monday morning when the Fowler family was around the breakfast table Sophie's chair was empty. A younger child was sent to her room to call her. The little one came running to the head of the stairs.

"Oh, mamma," she called in tones of mingled awe and terror, "come quick! Sophie's all dead!"

The frightened family rushed to Sophie's room. They found her lying in bed unconscious. The body was not cold, but there was nothing that her mother considered a sign of life.

Dr. A. L. Tuttle was sent for. He said that the girl was not dead, but in a comatose condition. He used every known method to restore her to life, but without result.

"She must be watched day and night," he said. "At the first sign of life send for me."

All Monday the mother sat by her bed eagerly looking for some movement. She feared the little life might flicker out. Tuesday, the next day and Thursday nothing occurred to show that the child was not dead. A few more days of suspense and the family would have been crazed.

On Friday morning the condition of the girl, it was seen, was changing. She was breathing. An eyelid fluttered and dropped again. Her nostrils dilated a bit and finally toward noon she opened her eyes to look at the happy face of her mother.

For five days she had eaten nothing and had not drunk a drop of water. Food was given to her and she soon recovered sufficiently to be able to talk.

"I have been in heaven all the time," she said, "and, oh! mamma, it's such a pretty place; I hated to leave it. They have music there and gold stars and people fly about. There isn't any nasty rain there and you don't have to walk about, but just float in the air.

"There is no dirt in heaven at all. Everything is made of gold and silver and diamonds. I played all the time I was in heaven. There are a lot of little girls there. I didn't see any of the Bible people. I guess I'm so little they didn't want to be bothered with me.

"I don't know how it is I'm back here in Milford. I didn't know that people died and went to heaven and came back again. I guess I died by mistake, didn't I, and then when God found it out He thought He'd better send me back.

"This wasn't one of those dreams. When you stick your head in the pillow you see stars and gold and silver shiny things, but this wasn't that. It was really heaven, because I walked about for a week.

"And, mamma," said Sophie, "I guess I'll be a better girl than I was before I went to heaven. I want to go there again and I want to be sure they'll let me in. I always thought heaven was a place where you had a lot of cross teachers to make you mind, but it isn't. They just let you do whatever you like just as long as you're good."

The little girl has recovered her health completely. Dr. Tuttle said that she was in a normal condition. Her heart was full and regular. She was slightly exhausted after her five days' trance, but that was all. The child is the marvel of Milford.

Visited by a Ghost.

The ghost of a boy who died from smallpox makes its appearance nightly at Winstanley Park, East St. Louis, Ill., and has terrorized the neighborhood. The ghost is that of Albert Newman, 16 years of age. In his illness he was nursed by John Miller and Mrs. Williams. To them he appears almost nightly, as also to Mr. Newman, the boy's father; to Mrs. Anderson, a neighbor of the Newmans, and to Henry Drummond, who insisted that his grave be dug deep and caused a high mound to be placed over the body.

Mrs. Williams says the ghost first appeared wrapped in the sheet in which young Newman had been shrouded. Since then she has seen him four or five times, sometimes at night, but oftener at dusk, at which latter time the burial had taken place. He had come into the house and upset things on the table and on the floor. She also says that the last time she saw him his face was brighter. The sheet in which he was wrapped seem to be as white as snow. Miller had seen him but once. He and Mrs. Miller were sitting in the little lean-to at the back of the house. His figure was plainly outlined against the wall. It was quite dark, but the figure seemed to be lighted up by a sort of a halo, and Miller says he saw him plainly.

Albert's father said he had seen the spirit of his son on two or three occasions, but hardly knew what to think about it, nor why Albert should thus revisit the scenes of his earthly career. His visitations had mostly been made at night or in the dim light of early morning. He had always done the best he could for him, but had had troubles of his own, which he related at some considerable length. Miller then guided the way to Mrs. Anderson's about 200 yards from Newman's. Mrs. Anderson is an old woman, and she declared that she had not only seen the spirit, but had talked with it, and it had answered her. Albert played with her boys a great deal, and she recognized his voice. He was wrapped in the same white robe he had worn in his visits to the Newman house. She was as positive of this as she would have been of the identity of one of her own children. She had seen the ghost three times.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

MISLEADING.

Amendment to the Constitution of the N. S. A.

To the Editor:—I crave permission to reply to an editorial on "The Eighth National Convention" in the August 4th issue of the Banner of Light. I have no complaint to make of the article in the main, but as that paragraph which refers to the proposed amendment of the Constitution to make the convention biennial instead of annual, is misleading, I must ask your indulgence, and space in your valuable paper, to correct the same.

The paragraph to which I refer reads as follows: "One of the proposed changes of the Constitution of the N. S. A. will make the conventions biennial, instead of annual, as heretofore. This is an important step, and certainly has some strong arguments in its favor. The opposition rests largely upon the danger of getting non-representative persons into office for an indefinite period. This danger can be obviated by exercising great care in the election of officers, and by an amendment that will provide for the removal of any seditious person who deliberately sought to violate the Constitution and rules of the Association. On the other hand, if the change is made, it will certainly save the expense of one convention in every two years. Each annual meeting, including rent of hall, music, railroad fares, and hotel expenses costs from seven thousand, five hundred to ten thousand dollars. This estimate is based upon an average expense of fifty dollars each to every delegate in attendance. This sum is worth saving, and can be utilized in other directions for the good of the cause."

With all due deference to the editorial brain that penned the above, Mr. Editor, I feel that it will not be wise to allow it to go unnoticed. As far as the danger of electing non-representative persons for an indefinite period, is concerned, I doubt if it exists, as I have confidence in the integrity of our delegates, and in their ability to choose officers of the N. S. A., who will be representative Spiritualists, and who will serve the cause worthily; but, as the writer says, any possible danger in this line can be easily obviated. My point in this letter is, from a perusal of the article in the Banner, many may be led to infer that it costs the N. S. A. from seventy-five hundred to ten thousand dollars for each annual convention. The expenses of delegates, including railroad fares, hotel bills, etc., are never paid by the N. S. A., but either by the societies which they represent, or by themselves personally. Estimating that the average cost to each person attending the convention is fifty dollars, what assurance have we, that if this is saved, it will in any instance be actually devoted to the good of the cause? If a man wishes to spend fifty dollars to attend a great convention, he considers he will not only do good to the cause it represents, but also, that he will get some satisfaction and blessing from it. Coming in contact with men and women of enlarged views, and of spiritual culture, as he must do at these conventions, does him good, he is better mentally and physically for the exchange of thought, and for the participation in the deliberations of a representative body of Spiritualists. His society, if he is a delegate, receives a blessing from his presence at the assembly, he carries an influence to it, that cannot be estimated in value by dollars and cents. I consider the money spent by individuals or societies, in attendance at these great convocations, to be well spent, and that it is a credit to the cause, and to the societies of the N. S. A. I know of persons who intend to be at the next convention in Cleveland, who have not taken any other vacation this summer, intending to save their time and money for the trip to this great meeting, and at the same time see something of the country, while adding their influence and assistance, in making the N. S. A. stronger and better as a grand representative organization of the cause of Spiritualism. These individuals are not spending money foolishly in this trip, nor are they using that which belongs to the cause at large, probably not one of them would use any portion of the money for other than personal uses, yet the cause is benefited by its expenditure for the convention, as it helps to bring about a union of forces, and an exchange of thought and sentiment that cannot fail to do good to all concerned.

Therefore, Mr. Editor, I feel that the article from which the foregoing paragraph is quoted, is misleading, if it be not modified. I want the public to understand, first, that the N. S. A. is not put to any such enormous expense at each convention, as a casual reader might suppose, and second, that even if each delegate and visitor to the annual convocation does—on an average—expend fifty dollars thereby, it is not money wasted or misspent, but that it is actually well invested for the good of the payee, and for that of the spiritual cause. So far from hearing any complaint from those who attend the conventions, that they have misspent their means, I have always heard many expressions of pleasure from delegates that they were privileged to be present, and it is also a fact that these and others, have contributed to the N. S. A. treasury in liberal measure, because the convention has done them good, and led them to see the importance of organization, and of the N. S. A. Further than this the conventions do great good in the cities where they are held, they call attention to Spiritualism, and attract large assemblies of thoughtful people who come to learn of our work and to listen to the philosophy and demonstration of Spiritualism from our speakers and mediums, and it seems to me, that the conventions are a means of great enlightenment.

Personally, I have no objection to the change of the convention to biennial—instead of anual dates, if the majority of the delegates vote for such a change. I only wish to place the matter in the right light before the people. The amendment to be acted upon in this connection reads literally as follows: Article IX, by substituting "Biennial" in place of "Annual Conventions," thus making the Convention meet every two years instead of annually.

Fraternally and sincerely yours,

Opening Day at Lake Pleasant.

The subject of the discourse given by Judge A. P. Dailey was the mission of Jesus and the reign of law, founded upon the following words of Jesus: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or tittle shall in nowise pass from the law till all be fulfilled."—Matthew v:18-19. He said that unquestionably the doctrines and teachings of Jesus, also called Christ, were the foundation of that great aggregation of denominations of religious people, making as a whole the Christian church. Much that he taught and said was not new, and it is probably unfortunate for the world that so little that he did say and do has come down to us. It is claimed in behalf of the gospels that the writers, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John were inspired to correctly repeat what the great teacher said and did; yet there is the evidence in the gospels themselves of the imperfection of their work, and Luke, who wrote many years after the crucifixion, plainly tells us that his mission is to collate and record such as was repeated to him, that he deemed authentic, so it could be transmitted to those who should come after. Had not the hand and craft of the priest, so early in the Christian era, throttled the mediums of inspiration and stifled the utterances of the spirit there would have been little dissension among the followers of Jesus, and the appalling persecutions which have stained the cause of Christ and drenched the land with human blood would have been prevented.

The relations of Spiritualism to the Christian churches, is one of growing importance. There are Spiritists and Spiritualists; the former are simply those who limit their knowledge to the facts by which the existence of spirit is demonstrated while the latter not only embrace a knowledge of the phenomena, but aspire to comprehend all spiritual truth from whatever sources attainable to the end that they may conform their lives and actions thereto. They early discovered the divinity of truth. They were taught through their inspired teachers that nature's laws are God's laws, and that morality and religion to be true—by which I mean, to result in the greatest good to man as a mortal here, and as a spirit in the world to come, must be in perfect harmony. Therefore, as Jesus was inspired, and possessed a knowledge of the potency of the law, it is clear that he referred to something beyond the law of Moses when he said he did not come to destroy the law and that the law was as fixed and eternal as are heaven and earth. A religion cannot be built upon theories and endure. Like the house built upon sands, the floods of truth like a torrent of waters will destroy its foundations. But there is sufficient of the bed-rock of truth in the Christian churches to stay them from utter destruction. The fact is, the church is better than its creeds. A noble framework, an imperial structure, may weaken and fall from defective timber, or overweighting its floors. The human stomach struggles with and attempts to assimilate what is put into it for the nourishment and support of the body and soul; but it may be overloaded, and food that cannot be digested must be rejected or death will follow. So of the churches. They are suffering from moral indigestion and chronic dyspepsia from persistent efforts to assimilate that which morality, justice and reason repel. When they conform their creeds to the cardinal principles of the golden rule, and as expounded by Jesus and in harmony with the principles of justice, there will be a coalescing such as the world has never seen, and that which shall bring people and churches in fraternal relations, will also bring the nations of the world into compacts of peace. China, India and Arabia will cease to hate the Christian, and the Christian ere then will learn that he must educate and enlighten before he can safely deal with those vast multitudes in the East whose greatest misfortune is that of ignorance, which is fast impelling them to learn, at fearful cost, the great truth that "knowledge is power."

Venerable Spiritualist Passed On.

William Case, one of the oldest residents of Lafayette, passed to spirit life, July 20, at the home of his old friend, Andrew J. Dreyer, near Dayton, this county, from the infirmities incident to his advanced years. He was one of the leading musicians of the city years ago, and his violin and flute were given a place in a number of orchestras.

William Case was born in Little Falls, Herkimer county, N. Y., March 1, 1818, living there until the spring of 1829, when we went to Lockport, Niagara county, and resided for a year, at the close of which time he returned to Little Falls and attended school until the spring of 1834. He then started out with a band of musicians and traveled three and a half years with caravans and circuses. In the latter part of 1837 he went to Xenia, O., and spent the winter there, after which he went to Lockport, N Y., where he remained until early in 1853, coming at that time to Lafayette, where he had since continuously resided, with the exception of the winter of 1874-75, when he traveled through the southern states as flutist with Katie Putnam's Dramatic company. Later Mr. Case worked for a number of years as a harness maker. For the past 30 years he had lived alone in a little room on the third floor of the building occupied by Abe Eckhaus, on Columbia street, remaining there until a few months ago. When his illness compelled him to remain in bed he was removed to St. Elizabeth hospital by Dr. R. B. Wetherill, but remained there only a little over an hour. He told the sisters that he liked the place, that it was clean and pleasant, but said he was homesick and would go back to the room in which he had lived for thirty years. After thanking them for the trouble he caused them, he returned to his room on Columbia street. He was too weak to care for himself and was later removed to the home of Mr. Dryer, his old friend.

Mr. Case was a free thinker. He left instructions for his body to be cremated and his ashes "thrown broadcast on Mother Earth." If he had any religion it was a firm belief in Spiritualism.

His only relative known to be living in this city is Albert G. Case, a brother, residing at No. 1008 Elizabeth street, and who is at present very ill.

The remains of the deceased will be brought to this city to-morrow morning and taken to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Baldwin, No 1902 Kossuth street, where friends may view the body to-morrow. Acting under instructions given in a letter left by the deceased, Messrs A. W. and J. L. Caldwell, executors of the dead man's will, on Wednesday morning, will accompany the remains to Cincinnati, where the body will be incinerated, and the ashes scattered broadcast.

Methodism and Spiritualism--John Wesley a Spiritualist--His Mother a Medium. A Lecture By Hon. A. B. Richmond, the Sage of Cassadaga, at the Lily Dale Camp.

INTRODUCTION OR PREFACE.

"Was John Wesley a Spiritualist?" is the subject of my lecture; and I propose to try this question just as I would any issue of fact in a court of justice, and have my audience as a jury decide the question from the evidence produced, and to return their verdict uninfluenced by fear, favor or affection and that as they shall answer to their consciences in the future.

I ask no special consideration or favor in the trial of this issue, but only a candid attention to the evidence I shall produce, and an honest verdict thereon. This is neither the time, place nor subject for the display of oratorical painted phrase or hyperbole. There is no pretended inspiration, or aid of any spirit influence in this lecture, save that of truth's unerring tongue and historians impartial narrations. We depend on the written pages of the historian for a true account of long past events, and the incidents of phenomena therein narrated. The wars of a distant period, the plagues, pestilence, floods and famines of the past are only known to-day because history has recorded them. The volcanic eruptions, earthquakes and destructive tidal waves of centuries ago can only be proven to-day by the testimony of reliable historians of the past, while more recent events are only known to have happened because published accounts are generally received as truthful narrations. Therefore in this lecture I shall call as evidence the unadorned statements of witnesses who lived when Wesley did, saw and heard what he did, who had no motive to falsify in the narrations of facts, no interest to conceal them or to color them with the variegated hues of fiction. This with the testimony of which as lawyers would say, make out a case that no jury can doubt, or court discredit.

John Wesley was truly a great man, one who commenced his childhood under the influence of the spirit world, and whose success in after life was due to the controlling sway of unseen spirit power and phenomena.

The startling events of his early life have been recorded by his own father, who was pastor of Epworth parsonage in Lincolnshire England, as also contemporary biographers whose narrations of the so-called Wesleyan phenomena were a portion of the literature of the eighteenth and nineteenth century, from which I shall quote as conclusive evidence in the issue discussed in this lecture. The great Francis Bacon said that—

"No pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of truth." This is my text.

JOHN WESLEY A SPIRITUALIST AND HIS MOTHER A MEDIUM.

"Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength." —Psalms viii:2.

John Wesley was born at Epworth, June 17, 1703. He was educated at Christ Church College, Oxford. In 1724 he was elected fellow of Lincoln College and in 1726 graduated as Master of Arts, where he was distinguished for his classical attainments. From his early boyhood, he was surrounded by certain occult phenomena that attracted the attention of many learned prelates and savants of that day. The strange occurrences that attended his childhood so impressed his Christian mother, that she seemed to have a prophetic vision of his future greatness, and she said with emphasis: "I do intend to be more particularly careful of the soul of this child."

At this time the mother was an unconscious medium, through whose influence and in whose presence much of the strange phenomena that attended his childhood occurred, an account of which was afterwards written by his father, the rector of Epworth parsonage, and is now preserved in the British library at London. This so-called Wesleyan phenomena was for a long time the subject of the current literature of the day; both scientific and secular journals published long accounts of the mysterious happenings at Epworth parsonage during the childhood and early youth of John Wesley. The theological creeds of that day sought strenuously to deny and ridicule their spiritual origin, while learned investigators sought in vain to account for them on many scientific theories, and yet to this day, there is no rational or logical theory of explanation except that of SPIRIT LIFE AND VISITATION.

And as years have passed on with Time's ceaseless tread, science and theological dogmas are more and more confounded by the frequent occurrence of so-called spirit manifestations, and the positive demonstrative evidence of a life beyond death, and an immortality for the human soul.

All the biographers of John Wesley speak of the strange occurrences that happened at Epworth parsonage as undeniable facts, while no one has attempted to explain them on any other theory than that of Wesley himself, who was fully convinced of their spiritual origin.

Robert Southey, in his Life of Wesley, in speaking of these manifestations, says that they continued in the Wesley family in England, commencing in 1716, for over thirty years. Priestley refers to the Wesleyan phenomena as among the most striking on record. Samuel Babcock, in a letter inserted in the Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica, No. XX, says:

"There were some strange phenomena perceived at the parsonage at Epworth, and some uncommon noises heard there from time to time, which he was very curious in examining into, and very particular in relating. I have a little doubt that he considered himself the chief object of their wonderful visitations. Indeed, his father's credulity was in some degree affected by it; since he collected all the evidences that tended to confirm the story, and arranged them with scrupulous exactness, in a manuscript consisting of several sheets, which is still in being. I know not what became of the ghost of Epworth; unless considered as a prelude to the noise Mr. John Wesley made on a more ample stage, it ceased to speak when he began to act."

Chambers' Encyclopedia, in its article on John Wesley, relates how the paternal house was haunted by a ghost, but Goerres, in his Die Christliche Mystik, has given the best account of the disturbance, which remains unexplained to this day.

In The Story of Methodism, a late and most interesting book, written by A. B. Hyde, D. D., professor of Greek in the University of Denver, late professor of Biblical Literature in Allegheny College, Pa., on page 40, in speaking of the childhood and youth of John Wesley, the author says:

"During these years strange noises were heard at the Epworth parsonage. They were first heard in the whistling of the wind outside. Latches were lifted; windows rattled, and all metallic substances rang tunefully. In a room where persons talked, sang, or made any noise, its hollow tones gave all the louder accompaniment. There was a sound of doors slamming, of curtains drawing, of shoes dancing without a wearer. When any one wished to pass a door, its latch was politely lifted for them before they touched it. A trencher, untouched upon the table, danced to unheard music. The house-dog, with furious barking, met the unseen intruder the first day in brave mastiff style, but thereafter he sneaked, cowed and whining, behind some human friend. At family prayers the goblin gave thundering knocks at the Amen, and when Mr. Wesley prayed for the king, the disloyal being pushed him violently in anger. The stout rector shamed it for annoying children, and dared it to meet him alone in his study, and pick up the gauntlet there. It obeyed Mrs. Wesley. If she stamped on the floor, and bade it answer, its response was instant. If one said, 'It is only a rat,' the noise was more fast and furious. At last the family seemed to enjoy their lively and harmless unseen guest, and when after two months he left them, they lost an amusement. Many, then and since, have tried to explain the cause. It was thought to be a spirit strayed beyond its home and clime, as an Arabian locust has been found in Hyde Park. Of such things this writer has no theory. There are more things in heaven and earth than his knowledge or philosophy can compass. Only he is sure that outside of this world lies a spiritual domain, and it is not strange that there should be intercommunication."

Now this is the opinion of a prominent learned Methodist divine, and he admits the fact of the phenomena that occurred at Epworth parsonage, and the probability of there being spirit communications.

Eugene Lawrence, a prominent author in Volume 45 of Harper's Magazine, makes the following statement in relation to the Wesleyan phenomena:

"Another remarkable story is connected with the parsonage at Epworth, and with the early years of John Wesley's life—the continued disturbance of the family throughout a considerable time, by loud knockings and other noises, which could not be accounted for, and which therefore were regarded as preternatural, although Mr. Wesley and his household were less affected by the strange visitation than perhaps its authors expected them to be, and persisted in residing in the parsonage, even making sport of 'Old Jeffrey,' their unseen visitant, who 'was plainly a Jacobite goblin,' and seldom suffered Mr. Wesley to pray for the King and the Prince of Wales without disturbing the family prayers."

Nearly every life of Wesley, no matter who is the author, narrates these mysterious phenomena. The encyclopedias of to-day refer to them as undeniable and inexplicable facts. In Vol. XV of the Library of Universal Knowledge, page 357, the author makes the following statement:

"In January, 1717, to his surprise, Samuel Wesley received a letter from his mother, in which she wrote that the parsonage had been visited by a long and Satanic annoyances, which Susannah Wesley feared indicated death or misfortune to her absent sons. Nor have any events of an extraordinary nature proved less explicable by rational theories, or produced a stronger impression on minds not commonly superstitious, than those that now agitated the family in the lonely rectory. The calm Southey and the philosophic Taylor are inclined to attribute them to occult if not spiritual causes. Coleridge suggests animal magnetism; to John Wesley they seemed a plain proof of an unseen world; and the neighboring clergy urged the rector to remove his family from the haunted house, which, they suggested, must have fallen under the immediate dominion of Satan. With more courage, if less prudence, the brave rector, ... resolved not to shrink from the combat with his old enemy, pursued his literary labors in the midst of startling interruptions, and cheered his wife and daughters with the assurance that one Christian was a match for a legion of devils. Not one of his family shrank from his side. They came at last to laugh over their terrors. The groans and outcries, the heavy and the rapid knockings that at times shook the house, grew so familiar as scarcely to be observed.

"The manifestations began with the maid-servant, who heard loud groans as of a dying man outside the kitchen door, and ran in wild affright to her companions; frequent knocks and terrible noises next alarmed several of the daughters of Wesley; but when they told their terrors to their father he smiled and sent them earlier to bed. Within a few days he was himself convinced that they had told him no idle story. He was pursued by incessant knockings; sharp rappings interrupted him at family prayers. The noises grew so violent that it was useless to think of sleep at night; he went through the house with his wife to discover the mystery; the noises followed them; the sound of a man's footsteps was heard rushing up and down the stairs and back again when no one was visible, and the whole house shook under his tread. Thrice the rector was pushed violently by unseen hands; as he sat at table his trencher stood up and danced before his eyes; the noises rattled and thundered in every room, shook the bed on which the children slept, and played upon the footboard; spiritual forms were heard to glide through the rooms with a rustling sound; and once Mrs. Wesley saw something run from under a bed in the form of a badger. A mastiff they had brought into the house at the sound of the mysterious knocks was cowed, terrified, and ran for protection to his master. By day as well as night, in the very presence of the assembled family, the strange din was often kept up, until, after lasting for more than two months, with various intensity, it gradually passed away with a series of loud parting blows on the outside of the rectory.

"Seldom was a supernatural story better attested. The sounds and disorders were not concealed. They were described in letters to the absent sons by each member of the family, who all agree in their narrative. The father, who first heard of them with a smile, wrote without a trace of doubt of their spiritual origin; and upon the sensitive nature of John Wesley they produced a lasting effect that was not without useful results. The spiritual world became to him more real; the sensual seemed only a barrier between the present and something better. Whether a direct interference of superhuman agency, or a trick of servants, neighbors, or children, the cause of the Epworth rappings was never discovered."

The evidence of the happening of the Wesleyan phenomena is as clear and conclusive as that of any other fact proven by history, and nothing but unreasoning bigotry will deny it. John Wesley himself was a firm believer in the Spiritual nature of phenomena, and that belief influenced his whole life and religious teachings.

The great founder of Methodism in relating his experience and convictions on the subject of the evidence of spirit manifestations says:

"What pretense have I to deny well-attested facts because I cannot comprehend them? It is true that most of the men of learning in Europe have given up all accounts of apparitions as mere old wives' fables. I am sorry for it, and I willingly take this opportunity of entering my solemn protest against this violent compliment which so many that believe the Bible pay to those who do not believe it. I owe them no such service. They well know (whether Christians know it or not) that the giving up these apparitions is in effect and they know on the other hand that if but one account of the intercourse of men with spirits is admitted, their whole castle in the air (Deism, Atheism, and Materialism) falls to the ground.....

"One of the capital objections to all these accounts which I have known urged over and over, is this: Did you ever see an apparition yourself? No; nor did I ever see a murder, yet I believe there is such a thing—.—Yet the testimony of unexceptional witnesses fully convinces me of both the one and the other..... With my last breath will I bear testimony against giving up to infidels one of the greatest proofs of the invisible world—I mean that of apparitions confirmed by the testimony of all ages."

Now, this is the testimony of one of the world's greatest and best men; the founder of a church that claims a population of 16,000,000, with 4,000,000 communicants, and yet the Christian Advocates and other publications of this great denomination, deride the belief of their pioneer and apostle; deny his testimony, ignore his evidence and that of his father, mother, and brothers; proclaim Spiritualism a fraud, its manifestations feats of jugglery, its hopes and promises deception, and its believers lunatics. It is John Wesley's evidence against that of his church; the testimony of one great and good man as to what he saw and heard against that of 16,000,000 apostates who did not see or hear.

To-day Spiritualism has no more vindictive and abusive enemy than the Methodist church and its ministers; regardless of truth, ignoring the historic evidences of the past, from press and pulpit they pour forth torrents of against those who believe and advocate the belief of their founder and teach as he did, that spirit communications, now, as during all time past, are undeniable and visible foot-prints on the boundaries of a future world.

The Methodists of to-day should not forget that in the infancy of their church they had to pass through a martyrdom as cruel and vindictive as that which now assails the religion of Spiritualism.

As recently as in 1817, the Round Table, a prominent English publication, contained an article from the pen of a noted English scholar, on Methodism, which I will read to you, as an illustration in point, to show that 'often the stone which the builder rejected becomes the head of the corner." Mr. Hazlitt wrote as follows:

"The principles of Methodism are nearly allied to hypocrisy, and almost unavoidably slide into it. They may be considered as a collection of religious invalids—the refuse of all that is weak and unsound in body and mind. Methodism may be defined to be a religion with its slobbering bib and go-cart. It is a bastard kind of papacy, stripped of its painted pomp and outward ornaments, and reduced to a state of pauperism....It does not impose a tax upon the understanding. Its essence is to be unintelligible. It is carte blanche for ignorance and folly..... One of its favorite places of worship combines the turbulence and noise of a drunken brawl at an ale-house with the indecencies of a bagnio....They....revel in a sea of boundless nonsense."

Now I do not believe that the great theological acrobat and gymnast, DeWitt Talmage, with all his Yahoo-like ability to secrete and discharge filth, could say anything meaner about Spiritualism than that.

Remember, brother and sister Methodists, that this coarse and vulgar attack was published as late as 1817, in a prominent periodical, against a church that numbers among its clergy many of the ablest divines that ever lived; a church that has signalized itself by its good works and the power it has exercised in propagating creedal enlightenment over the world, and that is to-day as prominent in the intelligence of its members and its deeds of true Christian philanthropy as any church organization on earth; remember this, and find in this illustrative fact a reason why you should not be influenced by prejudice or swayed by popular clamor.

Not only in the historical evidence of the past, but to-day do we find many eminent Methodist divines testifying to all the important

ASSERTED TRUTHS OF SPIRITUALISM.

Although when they approach the subject of our beautiful religion, they tread as cautiously as an inexperienced skater moves over the surface of uncertain ice. They are afraid of thinly-covered air-holes into which they may inadvertently plunge and drown their Modern Theology. Or they are more like the hunter, who with a companion, was hunting for deer, when he saw among the bushes a calf belonging to a neighbor. He raised his rifle and was about to shoot, when he was cautioned by his companion to be careful, that it might be a calf. He replied, "Well, Sam, I'll aim so as to hit it if it is a deer, and miss it if it is a calf." This is the style of many ministers to-day, whose sermons are intended to hit the object aimed at if it is Spiritualism, and miss it if it is historical truth.

The president of Allegheny College, and one of the most learned and eloquent of the Christian divines of the Methodist church, on Sunday, June 23, preached a sermon to the College Y. M. C. A., at Meadville, Pa., from which, among the many excellent things he said, I quote the following. His text was: "We wrestle not against flesh and blood."—Ephesians 6:12.

"The opposition which Paul saw fronting his army, which seemed to be beating the air, consisted of forces unseen. There was no weapon there to break down city walls, crack good stout shield or cause blood to flow from gaping wounds. The forces of that unseen army are stronger than any physical weapons. 'Principalities' are there, 'unholy adversaries,' 'powers' beyond the power of man, 'cosmocrats' of darkness, the 'spiritual forces of evil.' These are the unseen armies which he must face and with which he must come into close encounter and overcome who would be victor in the moral and spiritual battles of life.

"There seems to be a plain reference here to spiritual presences and personalities, not human-spiritual presences and personalities which we cannot see. As there are angels of light so also are there angels of darkness. There there are also powers of evil. This reference to 'cosmocrats' and world rulers was one that the Christians of Ephesus could easily understand. They knew the story of Nebuchadnezzar and Cyrus the Great and Augustus. These were all cosmocrats. They ruled the world. Just as these men brought nations under their control and were themselves centers of political life, so there are above us in another world, a spiritual world, cosmocrats. Their rule is the rule of darkness. In Paul's thought they were real personalities. The personality of Cyrus or Augustus might as well be questioned as the personality of these cosmocrats of darkness. Back of all the manifestations of evil which men see there is a personality of evil, a spiritual something from which wickedness comes. I am reminded that many of us do not believe in this doctrine. Our age is materialistic. We do not believe in angels or devils. The mother still hushes her baby to sleep at night by singing 'Holy angels guard thy bed,' but for many among us it is only a lingering relic of an age that has gone. Perhaps one reason why so many have strayed from the earlier doctrine of the church is because of the fact that during many centuries men were inclined to see angels everywhere and devils everywhere. They were realities. Peter the Hermit, who roused Europe to engage in the Crusade for the rescue of the Holy Sepulchre, face to face, and angels in the night time encouraged him in his undertaking. Francis, of Assisi, saw the face and form of Jesus as plainly as he ever saw the face and form of any man. He saw the wounds of cruel nails in hands and feet; saw the fresh blood issuing from the wounds for his sin; looked upon the holy form until the wounds entered his own hands. Bernard of Clairvaux, greatest preacher the church knew for a thousand years, had many an encounter with bad spirits and did much heroic work for the church, led on by good angels, and the spirits of departed saints. Savonarola, in his cell in San Marco, saw a drawn sword, held by an angel's hand, hovering over the city of Florence. He saw swords, arrows and flame raining down upon the city; heard frightful thunderclaps; saw Florence the prey of war, famine and pestilence. Martin Luther, in Wertburg Castle, right there in the room; saw him so plainly that he hurled his ink bottle at him to strike him to the wall. If men of marked piety and intelligence, strong natures, such as these, could have such experiences, what must we think of the thousands who in their ignorance and under the influences of medieval Christianity, created for themselves angels and demons. During almost a thousand years it was considered by most people a crime to question anything. The centuries since the reformation have been a constant protest against this credulous spirit, and it is not strange that many of us have gone too far. It is time for us to read the Gospels over again and the Epistles. In protesting against the errors and credulities of the middle ages we ought not to be found protesting against truth. The plain teaching of the New Testament is that there are powers of evil, principalities unseen, cosmocrats of darkness. Perhaps many of us will come to a clearer understanding of the truth if we are content to describe these unseen powers as forces rather than personalities. Are there unseen and spiritual forces which he must face and overcome who would truly win in the battle of life? Paul declares that there are. More than that, human experience makes the same declaration. The fact that these are forces unseen ought not to lead us to believe that they are unreal. We are coming to understand in these later days more fully than ever before that the unseen forces are the strong forces."

SAW THE ANGEL OF THE LORD

When I first read this most excellent sermon I was somewhat surprised, yet when I recollected that John Wesley, the founder of the Methodist church, was a Spiritualist and his mother a medium, my surprise vanished and I only wondered that so many ignorant members of that church should so persistently deny the existence of the phenomena that for a number of years attended the Wesley family at Epworth parsonage.

It will be observed in reading the extracts from the sermon of the eminent divine that he believes that we are that not only influence human actions, but also that there is an intercommunion between the spirits of the living and the so-called dead. This is the foundation of our beautiful religion. He also believes in the influence of evil spirits. So do we. This we call "obsession," which Worcester defines to be:

"The state of a person vexed or besieged by an evil spirit, differing from demoniacal possession in the patient's being attacked from without and not from within."

In other words he believes in both good and evil spirits that communicate with and influence mankind. This is also our belief; this was demonstrated by our phenomena. The fact is that Spiritualism is permeating all of the orthodox churches, soiled and sometimes poisoned it is true by the media through which it passes, yet like the waters of the earth the pure oxygen and hydrogen is there, yet sometimes polluted with the carbonic acid and mephitic gases they absorb from the bigotry and ignorance of the creedal cess-pool of orthodoxy.

Here, then, is the "Alpha and Omega." The opinion of the first Methodist and founder of the creed, and the latest opinion of the church as given by one of its most learned and eminent divines. And yet there is an intermediate number of "small-fry" who denounce Spiritualism without investigating and condemn it without knowledge of its phenomena, all of whom, in the language of the proverb, are "Wiser in their own conceit than seven men that can render a reason."

If the laws of nature that govern the realm of both mind and matter are unchangeable; if the God of the orthodox religion is an immutable being; if as Ecclesiastes, the preacher, says in chapter 3, 14th and 15th verses:

"I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever; nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it."

"That which hath been is now; and that which is to be, hath already been, and God requireth that which is past."

If all these asserted facts of both science and scripture are true, then is the

and communication an incontrovertible fact that nought but ignorance and bigotry will deny. The testimony of intelligent minds of all historic periods assert the truth of the basis facts of the beautiful philosophy and phenomena of the religion of Spiritualism. Our belief contradicts no law of nature; asserts no improbable or impossible facts. It appeals to the better nature of men in its government of human action, and its ultimate result will be a universal brotherhood, culminating in the realization of the glorious vision of Luke: "On earth peace and good will toward men."

Yet it is a singular fact that this now eminently respectable Christian church, which in its infancy was ridiculed and despised for the supposed folly of its creed, and the absurdity of the spiritual manifestations incident to its revivals, should now be most intolerant in its denunciations of the conscientious belief of the Spiritualists. Its publications and printed Advocates are teeming with articles from ministerial pens, as falsely libelous and vulgar as that of Mr. Hazlitt; and yet, if its own church histories are truthful, its founder, the great and good John Wesley, was a Spiritualist, his Christian mother a medium, his reverend father a believer in its phenomena, and a historian of the manifestations that attended the Wesley family for many years.

It is certain that the Methodist church of to-day has abandoned one of the

of their founder. Yet they cling with tenacity to the doctrine of "sanctification through faith," and the salvation of mankind only through divine grace. They rely upon the grace of a loving God to save mankind from the never-ending torments of endless punishment in the future world. And the theory enunciated in most of the orthodox sermons to-day is the "grace of God," by which alone man, depraved by nature, can escape the torments of the doomed and damned in an everlasting hell, and that the only evidence of immortality consists of the hope and faith of a true believer. This was not the doctrine or belief of John Wesley. He leaned on no such slender support. He had demonstrative evidence. He both saw and heard disembodied spirit life, and the question of "Grace" did not enter into the logic of his Christian faith. He believed because he knew from the evidence of his senses; he avowed the fact to the world, and yet his degenerate church of to-day denies the testimony of their Christian fathers and cling to Divine Grace for their future safety, as the shipwrecked mariner clings to the plank on which he floats amid the waves of a storm-beaten ocean.

Miss Lizzie Doten, the celebrated medium, in her volume of Poems of Progress, gives a most beautiful illustration of the nature of grace, which I quote in conclusion of this lecture.

PETER M'GUIRE; OR, NATURE AND GRACE.

It has always been thought a most critical case,
When a man was possessed of more Nature than Grace;
For Theology teaches that man from the first
Was a sinner by Nature, and justly accurst;
And "Salvation by Grace" was the wonderful plan,
Which God had invented to save erring man.
'Twas the only atonement he knew how to make,
To annul the effects of his own sad mistake.

Now this was the doctrine of good Parson Brown,
Who preached, not long since, in a small country town.
He was zealous, and earnest, and could so excel
In describing the tortures of sinners in hell,
That a Methodist revival commenced in the place,
And hundreds of souls found "Salvation by Grace;"
But he felt that he had not attained his desire,
Till he had converted one Peter McGuire.
This man was a blacksmith, frank, truthful and bold,
With great brawny sinews, like Vulcan of old;
He had little respect for what ministers preach,
And sometimes was very profane in his speech.
His opinions were founded in clear common sense,
And he spoke as he thought, though he oft gave offense;
But however wanting, in whole or in part,
He was sound, and all right, when you came to his heart.

One day the good parson, with pious intent,
To the smithy of Peter most hopefully went;
And there, while the hammer industriously swung,
He preached, and he prayed, and exhorted, and sung,
And warned, and entreated poor Peter to fly
From the pit of destruction before he should die;
And to wash himself clean from the world's sinful strife,
In the Blood of the Lamb, and the River of Life.
Well, and what would you now be inclined to expect
Was the probable issue and likely effect?
Why, he swore "like a pirate," and, what do you think?
From a little black bottle took something to drink!
And he said, "I'll not mention the Blood of the Lamb,
But as for that River it aren't worth a ——;"
Then pausing—as if to restrain his rude force——
He quietly added, "as a mill-dam, of course."

Quick out of the smithy the minister fled,
As if a big bomb-shell had burst near his head;
And as he continued to haste on his way,
He was too much excited to sing or to pray;
But he thought how that some were elected by Grace,
As heirs of the kingdom—made sure of their place—
While others were doomed to the pains of hell-fire,
And if e'er there was one such, 'twas Peter McGuire.

That night, when the Storm King was riding on high,
And the red shafts of lightning gleamed bright through the sky,
The church of the village, "the Temple of God,"
Was struck, for the want of a good lightning rod,
And swiftly descending, the element dire
Set the minister's house, close beside it, on fire,
While he peacefully slumbered, with never a fear
Of the terrible work of destruction so near.

There were Mary, and Hannah, and Tommy, and Joe,
All sweetly asleep in the bedroom below,
While their father was near, with their mother at rest,
(Like the wife of John Rogers with "one at the breast.")
But Alice, the eldest, a gentle young dove,
Was asleep all alone, in the room just above;
And when the wild cry of the rescuer came,
She only was left to the pitilessflame.

The fond mother counted her treasures of love,
When lo! one was missing—"O Father above!"
How madly she shrieked in her agony, wild—
"My Alice! my Alice! O, save my dear child!"
Then down on his knees fell the parson and prayed
That the terrible wrath of the Lord might be stayed.
Said Peter McGuire, "Prayer is good in its place,
But then it don't suit this particular case."

He turned down the sleeves of his red flannel shirt,
To shield his great arms all besmutted with dirt;
Then into the billows of smoke and of fire,
Not pausing an instant, dashed Peter McGuire.
O, that terrible moment of anxious suspense!
How breathless their watching! their fear how intense!
And then their great joy, which was freely expressed
When Peter appeared with the child on his breast.

A shout rent the air when the darling he laid
In the arms of her mother, so pale and dismayed;
And as Alice looked up and most gratefully smiled,
He bowed down his head and he wept like a child.
Oh, those tears of brave manhood that rained o'er his face,
Showed the true Grace of Nature, and the Nature of Grace;
'Twas a manifest token, a visible sign,
Of the indwelling life of the Spirit Divine.
Consider such natures, and then, if you can,
Preach of "total depravity" innate in man.

Talk of blasphemy! why, 'tis profanity, wild!
To say that the Father thus cursed his own child.
Go learn of the stars, and the dew-spangled sod,
That all things rejoice in the goodness of God—
That each thing created is good in its place,
And nature is but the expression of Grace.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

The Progressive Thinker goes to press early Monday morning of each week. Camp-meeting reports should always reach the office on the previous Friday or Saturday at the very latest. Bear that in mind.

Thos. Harding writes from Sturgis, Mich.: "The members of the Harmonial Society of Sturgis, Mich., (incorporated), are hereby summoned to attend at the Free Church in that city, on the first Monday in September, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of electing officers to serve during the ensuing year, as required by law of the state of Michigan."

Samuel Foss is no longer the acting manager of May Goodrich, Dr. W. J. Elmo having taken his place. Communications will reach him at 4255 Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago.

A special telegram under date of August 5 says: "The seventeenth annual camp-meeting of the National Association of Spiritualists was formally opened to-day at Fraser's grove. Five thousand persons from Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Ohio points are in attendance. The programme was opened by O. A. Edgerly, of Lynn, Mass. Seances will be given by noted mediums."

Speaking of the opening of Clinton Camp, the Advertiser says: "At 10:30 o'clock the opening address was delivered by President W. F. Peck. It was a masterly effort, couched in language both entertaining and instructive. It is needless to say the large audience in attendance thoroughly appreciated the address. Editor Hull delivered a lecture at 2 o'clock in the afternoon that proved very interesting, and at 4 o'clock Dr. J. M. Temple conducted a seance that was well attended. All in all the opening day's program was interesting, and if the day's doings and the crowds in attendance both morning and afternoon are any criterion by which to judge, this year's meeting of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualist Association will be a great success."

The Sherman Democrat, of Sherman, Texas, says: "Last evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Hogue, East Cherry street, Mr. J. Madison Allen, of Springfield, Mo., one of the best known Spiritualist lecturers in America, pleased quite a select and intelligent gathering. He is a scholarly, affable gentleman, attracting and holding friends among all he meets. He will be in our city for several days, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Hogue."

Mrs. Seth T. Davenport writes from Hopedale, Mass.: "I received the paper and also the premium, which is very interesting. Now I have quite a supply of very good books. The paper is the best spiritual paper printed. Many thanks to you for favors received."

Dr. C. W. Hidden, of Newburyport, Mass., supplied the pulpit of the Unitarian church at Hampton Falls, N. H., Sunday, August 5, and has been engaged for several Sundays following the vacation season.

Correspondent writes: "The Spiritualist Society of Galveston, Texas, celebrated the third anniversary of Mr. John W. Ring's (their speaker) ordination. Palms, ferns and a profusion of cut flowers beautified the rostrum. Mr. Ring's inspirational discourse reviewed the three years past of Spiritualism in general and of the society in particular, closing with a most impressive improvisation in loving memory of those who had arisen to higher life, beautifully comparing their memory to the flower's perfume. The musical programme was an especially pleasing feature, the numbers being carefully selected and creditably rendered. Among them was C. P. Longley's 'Bright Star of Hope,' which was sung three years ago at the ordination."

The Dunkirk (N. Y.) Journal of August 1 has the following: "Since his return from Buffalo, Mr. Concannon has been doing a quiet business and only personal friends were admitted beyond the portals of his seance room. However, on Monday evening, Mrs. Georgia Oakes, of Bradford, Pa., and Miss Porter, of Buffalo, attended the seance. Miss Porter took a seat at one side of the cabinet and Mrs. Oakes at the other. Pretty soon a spirit in full materialized form came out swinging a drapery of lace. Both ladies had scissors and slashed off a few yards of the lace. They have the lace now and are showing it to their friends as a sample of fake work, as the lace was supposed to vanish, it being made by spirits. Mrs. Oakes was bold as a tigress and denounced Mr. Concannon before leaving the seance room. She told Concannon to dematerialize the lace if he were a medium. Up to the present he has failed to do this. A spirit, claiming to be Prof. Denton, materialized for Mrs. Oakes. But this she doubts very much as she saw him make a lightning change of whiskers. An alleged priest came to Miss Porter. When she kicked him he complained of the abuse heaped upon him by the naughty skeptic."

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, pastor of the First Church, returned to the city last week, in the best of health and spirits, from Portland, Oregon, where she and her husband were on a visit to their relatives. Mrs. Cooley left again on Friday, the 3d inst., to fill engagements at Haslett Park, Mich.; Lake Brady, Ohio, and Vicksburg, Mich.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Jessee Greenwood, writing from Ashleigh, England, says: "I have received all of the seven premium volumes you have so generously forwarded. They are handsomely bound and quite a little library. I anticipate the pleasure of their perusal. The Progressive Thinker also has come very regularly. I have been a reader for a long time. One thing I may say to you is, that we have no English papers that can in any way compare with The Progressive Thinker. I wish you success and wish to express my gratitude for the books."

Does the present war in China signify the beginning of the end of the world? Prophets are springing up all over the country to declare that it does. They base their claims on the scriptures. In Philadelphia Adventist Fathers are announcing that the outbreak in the far East is the blowing of the seventh trumpet mentioned in the book of Revelation, at the sound of which the great dragon rose up out of the sea and all the nations of the world fought together. Out on the Pacific coast a prophet named Jones has arisen, who devotes an entire book to proving how in the Bible are accurately prophesied all the important events in human history which have occurred since the Book of Books was written, and how in the same way and with the same certainty the awakening of the Yellow Terror of Asia marks the final war among all the nations of the earth, in the midst of which "time shall cease to be and the struggling hosts shall be stricken dumb in a moment."

The Daily News of August 8 says: "It may soon cost a clairvoyant just $800 a year to have the privilege of going into a trance and then waking up and telling a superstitious maiden whether her fiance is to be a blond or a brunette. That will be the license fee to be paid into the municipal treasury if an ordinance which has been framed and which is ready for presentation is accepted by the Council. Clairvoyants themselves are responsible for urging the measure and they have projected it, according to information gained to-day from one of them, in order to drive out of business the small fry and alleged fake mediums. The scheme has been on foot for several days, and yesterday, it is understood, the consent of an alderman was secured to put the measure before the Council as soon as possible and urge the passage of it. Clairvoyants visited to-day threw up their hands in a frenzy when they were told that it would likely be a case of quitting town or digging up the necessary $800. Chicago has always been a profitable field for the man of the wavy hair, the piercing glance and the affable manner. It has been said that no other city has so many superstitious inhabitants. For this reason the cheap clairvoyants face the necessity of going to cities where superstition holds a more limited sway. Jealousy among the mysterious men of the faraway look is at the bottom of the new movement. It is understood that four city fathers, whose names are kept secret carefully, are so superstitious that they are in the habit of paying weekly visits to a North Side trance doctor to be advised in municipal problems."

Rev. Allie Buhland writes from New Carlisle, Ind.: "In the early part of April I came to this beautiful little village from Springfield, Mo., to endeavor to place my husband (who had been seriously ill for five months) in competent medical hands, and while we knew it was a strictly orthodox town, we began talking for the cause of Spiritualism to all who called upon us, and we so stirred the hearts of some of our acquaintances that we were urged to give public addresses. Finding it impossible to secure a church or a public hall, one lady and gentleman insisted that we use their parlors. We did so to the extent of three lectures, when my husband became so much worse that we could spare no time from his bedside, he just escaping transition through the means of a surgical operation. Although we knew our talks had to a great extent jarred the enervated orthodox souls of the inhabitants, we were surprised on our return from the hospital to find the pastors in their pulpits were fighting the truth of our utterances with all the force of their now skylighted mentality. My dear spirit teachers inform me that enough spiritual seed had been sown to yield for the spirit world an abundant harvest. I am pleased to state that my husband has so completely recovered that I am now open to engagements, and would be pleased to correspond with any society which is in need of an inspirational and trance medium as well as a good organizer. My address for the present is box 434 New Carlisle, Ind."

The Chicago Post of a late date says: "Robert Clark, said to be the confederate of Mrs. Elizabeth Fitzgerald, the Spiritualist medium arrested yesterday on a charge of extortion, was taken into custody early to-day by Detectives Halpin and Hogan, of Chief of Detectives Colleran's office. Clark was arrested in the home of his mother, 6336 Cottage Grove avenue, and will be returned to Grand Rapids, where it is said he is wanted on a charge of grand larceny. The capture was due to the shrewd work of the officers, and Clark was located on information secured from Mrs. Fitzgerald. According to the police they secured information from Mrs. Fitzgerald that during her trips to various cities Clark had accompanied her, and under the name of Professor Williams and Professor Preston had been instrumental in securing money from victims. When Mrs. Fitzgerald was arrested by the officers she requested to know how they had learned her whereabouts. 'Oh, we secured information from your confederate,' replied Detective Halpin as though he knew the full history of both persons. Mrs. Fitzgerald, laboring under the impression that Clark had betrayed her, then gave the police information resulting in his arrest. She also told where he could be found and said that in certain parts of the house property supposed to have been secured in Grand Rapids could be found. Acting upon her advice the detectives visited the Cottage Grove avenue house, arrested Clark and recovered a lady's gold watch, a bolt of silk cloth and a diamond pin, which it is supposed were stolen. After the arrest Superintendent Harvey O. Carr, of the Grand Rapids police, was notified, and an officer will be sent to Chicago for the prisoner. The fact that Clark was known under the name of Williams, the police say, gives strength to the theory of his implication in obtaining the $11,000 from Miss Lizzie Gasser, of Skaneateles, N. Y. Later in the day Clark was taken before Justice Martin, in the Harrison Street Police Court, on a fugitive warrant."

Justice writes from Island Lake Camp: "In the absence of the president yesterday, the chair was occupied by our esteemed sister, Agnes Tuttle, of Berlin Heights, Ohio. Mrs. Tuttle filled that position with great credit to herself; in fact she seems to be admirably fitted for public work. She is the life of the camp. She has a dancing class, well patronized, and is manager of the entertainments, which are highly appreciated and well attended. She is a decided success. Being an elocutionist and splendid musician, she has greatly endeared herself to all."

"There is a neglected house on Mount Auburn street, Cambridge, Mass., opposite Mount Auburn Cemetry, that without doubt is indebted for much of its ill-repute to its late owner and occupant, John Hyde," writes Samuel S. Kingdon, of "The Haunted Houses of New England," in the August Ladies' Home Journal. "It was long known as a haunted house, and avoided as such by the superstitious. Its sole earthly tenant frequently threw out mysterious hints of strange visits he received from materialized spirits who favored him with messages from the other world. He took so much pleasure in their society that he was not disposed to cultivate the acquaintance of earthly visitors, and few cared to cross the threshhold, for he was not averse to telling them they would not be acceptable to his relatives. There is one man who is confirmed in the belief that he, at least, was not wanted. One dark and stormy night he sought shelter on the piazza of the house, and hearing noises within he tried to discover whence they proceeded by peering through a broken pane of glass. The room was dimly lighted, and he says he saw Mr. Hyde in close communion with two sheeted figures. At the same instant the intruder was blinded by a flash of lightning followed by a crash of thunder and thrown into the middle of the street. He never repeated the experiment of eavesdropping on ghosts."—News-Leader, Springfield, Mass.

It is said that fifteen times a day, as trains pull into the station at Metuchen, N. J., "Aunt Hetty," more than 80 years old, is there to ask of each conductor if he has seen her little girl. "She has golden hair and blue eyes," explains Aunt Hetty, wistfully. But each time the conductor says, hopefully: "No, she didn't come to-day, but we expect her to-morrow." And each time Aunt Hetty turns and goes back to the Old Ladies' Home, half a mile away, hugging the delusion that to-morrow her little girl will come to her again. But for seven years Aunt Hetty has been disappointed. Her memories do not extend beyond the time when, as a young mother, her little girl went away from her, and her disappointments of one day are not remembered the next day. So, fifteen times a day she goes down to the station to ask if her baby has come. Before going, she asks the matron to make ready for the little one, and she always carries an umbrella, remembering that one time a rain drenched the little girl and gave her a bad cold. Aunt Hetty makes two trips before breakfast, the first at 6 o'clock; between breakfast and noon there are seven trips, and in the afternoon six trips. In this way, the old lady travels fifteen miles a day, rain or shine. One of these days, when she doesn't come any more, the conductors will know that she has found her little girl.

Secretary writes from Grand Ledge, Mich.: "The cornerstone of the new and commodious dining hall was laid by the ladies of the camp August 1, under most auspicious influences. A handsome sum towards its completion was donated on the spot. The veteran worker, Lyman C. Howe, of whom it is said, 'None know him but to love him,' joined us yesterday; and Mrs. A. L. Coffman, of Grand Rapids, to-day. To-morrow we shall have their united services, which none can afford to miss. Mrs. Loe F. Prior finished her engagement at this camp yesterday and left for Toronto, Canada."

A. Hammond writes from Hot Springs, Ark.: "Your seven books are all at hand, in good condition. Many thanks to you, for this is a prize indeed. I notice your object which is a good one, for the paper is doing a great work, but it has always been my object to awaken all the interest I could in our cause without regard to money or 'Mrs. Grundy.' I have given the best of my life for the last forty years, without money or price, (I can whisper), but 'have got' a great deal of Mrs. Grundy and all her family, and all Spiritualists know her well, too; but like 'ants' they can bite and hunt for sugar while the bears hunt for them; so I'm not troubled at the end! Many intelligent people who control this world, are now our friends arising from the papers I have sent them, and as fast as they break away from Mrs. Grundy they look for our literature, and take it into their homes and stay by us. Our cause is as certain of victory as the sun is to rise on any day; but the early workers had a rough time, as I can tell, and the end is not yet; but, oh! the difference, now, and who have made it but the angels and our hard work? The victory pays all the the workers in both worlds."

J. W. Briggs writes from Island Lake Camp, Mich.: "The Ladies' Auxiliary elected the following officers at their last meeting, re-electing their first honored founder and president, Marguerite St. Omer Briggs; vice-president, Mrs. Rose Ferris, of Detroit; secretary, Mrs. E. C. Goss, of Detroit; treasurer, Mrs. J. C. Goss, of Detroit."

The Rev. Miss Anna Brennen, pastor of the Universalist church of Muncie, Ind., the largest of the denomination in that state, is disposed to lay blame for the present condition of affairs in China on the missionaries to a great extent. For the last two Sundays she has devoted one sermon each day to the Chinese question, and in her remarks referred to the kind of persons sent to the celestial kingdom to convert the heathen to Christianity. Miss Brennen said from observation personally and from reading and conversation she is inclined to believe that a great many missionaries are "sticks," who, if they would stay at home, would not be counted among the progressive and liberal-minded people of their community. She is of the opinion that these missionaries have been unable to work themselves into the good graces of the Chinese, but rather have aroused their ire and indignation by opposing their idols and customs in a manner that was far from shrewd and far-seeing. Miss Brennen said the Chinese must not be blamed for many things that have been heaped upon them as crimes. The Chinese see the foreigners spatting over their religions, quarreling over the division of land and trade, and in fact doing everything but acting with a Christian spirit one toward another. Hence John Chinaman concludes, she said, that the "white devils" are impostors, mere shammers and land grabbers who are artful and cunning with a view of personal gain only.

Dr. J. C. Phillips, the psychometrist and healer, is still a resident of Mt. Pleasant Park Camp. He has become a permanent fixture there. He has many warm friends in Chicago, where he once resided.

W. E. Bonney writes: "Since leaving the Franklin Camp, myself and wife, assisted by Mrs. Clara Ferris, of Lincoln, Neb., have been holding meetings at Oxford, Stamford and at the home of Mr. Ferrin, 6 miles from Stamford, Neb. We have had crowded houses and a great interest. We expect to get around to Crete, Neb., in time for the opening of the camp there next Thursday, August 16." Mr. Bonney sends us a large list of subscribers, for which he has our thanks.

Will C. Hodge will be at the Delphos Camp meeting during the entire session. Mr. Hodge is capable of doing a good work wherever employed.

A young woman who lives on the South Side, Chicago, had a premonition of the Dearborn street explosion and fire week before last. She is unwilling to have her name used in print, but following is the story as told to a reporter for the Sunday Inter Ocean: Miss Barnes, as she may be called, works in a building almost opposite the Speed & Henning building, and from her office windows may look out on that structure. Two nights before the fire she dreamed that as she sat at her desk the air became black with smoke and flying cinders. It seemed in her dream, too, that a heavy storm was coming up, and the wind began to blow furiously. Suddenly there came a terrific explosion. She looked out and flames were darting from the top windows of the Speed & Henning building. "My God" she exclaimed, covering her face with her hands and running into the next room. She woke up, considerably impressed with the vividness of the dream. The strong exclamation was one she never used, and that fixed the circumstances in her mind. On the next evening she dreamed substantially the same thing, and in the forenoon after that the fire occurred. She sat at the window in her office, looking out. The explosion resounded like a cannon shot, the air filled with smoke, and instantly flames licked the sides of the windows in the buildings across the street. "My God!" exclaimed the girl involuntarily, covering her face with her hands and running to the next room. Then she remembered her dream.

Edgar W. Emerson will be at Mt. Pleasant Park Camp, Clinton, Iowa, from August 17 to 27. Would be pleased to fill engagements in the West through the month of September. Address care of Mr. J. B. McCarroll, Ottumwa, Iowa.

The Chicago Tribune says: "Peculiar views of the hereafter and the condition of humanity after death and in eternity are expressed by the Rev. R. Heber Newton in an article entitled 'The New Thought of Immortality,' published in the August number of the magazine Mind. Dr. Newton is rector of All Souls' Protestant Episcopal Church on Madison avenue and Sixty-sixth street, one of the most fashionable places of worship in the city. His position among the clergy of New York is one of great prominence. He has ranked among the advanced thinkers of the divines and his opinions upon religious matters have carried weight. In dealing with the problem of immortality he stamps as untrue the orthodox conception of after life, declaring there will be no general day of judgment, no resurrection of the body. In his opening paragraph Dr. Newton says that, from the time of Jesus to our own day, there has been little or no development in man's faith concerning immortality. He credits Swedenborg with evolving the first really new conception of immortality and the Spiritualists with keeping it alive. He describes the orthodox conception of immortality, and declares the language of this traditional conception still drawls in our hymns, still drones from our pulpits, still whines in our prayers. In presenting his convictions on the hereafter he says immortal life must be conceived in accordance with the doctrines of evolution."

Corresponding secretary writes: "We have had the hottest week on record at Grand Ledge camp. Mr. Lyman C. Howe finished his engagement with us Wednesday. His tribute to the soldier was listened to by a large and appreciative audience despite the heat. Mrs. Coffman will close her work here to-day. Mrs. Parker's lectures to the ladies are attracting many visitors to the camp. Mr. and Mrs. Winans have arrived; also Mr. Maybee. Mrs. Russell is still with us, and Mrs. Ruddick and Martin."

Dr. H. A. Cross writes: "Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley will return to Chicago and resume her labors here the first Sunday in October. The church of which she is pastor, to be known hereafter as The First Spiritual Church of Chicago, has secured a new place for holding its meetings, known as Oakland Club Hall, northeast corner of Oakwood and Ellis avenues, one block south of 39th street, and one block east of Cottage Grove avenue. The hall will be opened by the church on the last Sunday in September, on which occasion the Rev. Dr. Green, pastor of the Forestville Congregational Church, will deliver his celebrated lecture entitled 'Gettysburg, the Sixteenth Decisive Battle of the World.' This lecture is of thrilling interest and will be delivered under the auspices of The First Spiritual Church. The Doctor was present as an officer at the battle of Gettysburg and knows whereof he speaks. The old war songs will be sung, and it is expected that Judge Longenecker will preside on this occasion. Don't miss it."

Frank T. Ripley has closed his engagement at Briggs Park Spiritualist Camp-meeting. He goes to Harlan, Ind., for Sunday, August 19. He has the two last Sundays in August and all of the Sundays in September open for engagements. He is engaged for the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Society for the Sundays of October. He can be engaged for the Sundays of November and December.

Mrs. E. J. Demorest, speaker and platform test medium, can be addressed at the Hotel Ormond, Third and Ann streets, Parkersburg, W. Va., for two months. She is doing missionary work in Parkersburg and Marietta, Ohio, where the people receive her teachings gladly, and the good work goes on."

Letter from Lyman C. Howe.

I close my work here at Grand Ledge, Mich., the 8th, and go to Island Lake for the 11th, 12th and 14th, and Grand Rapids, Briggs Park, 16th 18th and 19th; then back to Lily Dale for the 25th. G. W. Kates and wife begin their work here the 11th. Mrs. Koffman closes to-day, the 10th. She has done good work and made friends and admirers here. Loe F. Pryor preceded me and left a good impression. Good mediums are here, such as Winans, Mrs. Russell, Mrs. Ruddick, and Mr. Maybee, and all seem to be in demand. It is four years since I spoke here last, before this year, and the camp has grown healthfully. A well of pure soft water is a great blessing, and the water is said to be medicinal, and as soft as rain-water. A new dining-room annex has just been finished and occupied and is a great improvement, being 22 by 32 on the ground, and very pleasant. A new coat of paint adorns the hotel and cottages, and thrift and attractiveness marks all.

Mrs. A. E. Sheets is chairwoman, and beautifully fitted for the place. Her influence counts much for harmony, earnestness and success. Miss Laura Matlock, of Owosso, is secretary, and excellent help in all she engages in. She is a typical Spiritualist in the best sense. Mrs. Parker, of Owosso, gives special lectures on health to women; and, as I am not a woman, I cannot report them. But they are reported interesting and instructive. She is another noble example and representative of simon pure Spiritualism.

Prof. Daniels, the astrologer, is here and has made friends and created a lively interest in his specialty.

After camp season closes I am free to answer calls for lectures for fall and winter.

The heat and musquitoes are the only obstacles to happiness on these enchanted grounds. Mrs. Dr. Augusta Armstrong lit here on her way home from California, and stayed five days. She left on the 8th for Buffalo and the Freeville Camp.

Yours for the cause.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

Lake Brady, O.

An event a little out of the ordinary, occurred at Lake Brady last evening—a Spiritualist wedding, the contracting parties being Charles H. Dunakin, of Cecil, O., and Miss Muriel Darrell, of Milan, O., Rev. F. D. Dunakin, the groom's father, performing the ceremony. The bridal party, which consisted of the bride and groom, the bridesmaid and groomsman, Miss Mabel and Mr. Clyde McCaslin, and their nearest friends, gathered at the hotel. The other guests were at the cottage of Mr. Russell, which was beautifully decorated with ferns and flowers. Immediately upon the arrival of the bridal party at the cottage, the ceremony was performed, which is a beautiful service peculiar to Spiritualism. The congratulations were not over before two pleasure clubs of serenaders had taken possession of the lawn in front of the cottage—the "Kenodiator Club," of Cleveland, and the "Young People's Pleasure Club," of Lake Brady. A programme of appropriate songs was rendered and then all ceremonies ended in a general good time throughout the grounds.

The McCaslin family gave an exceptionally good entertainment for the benefit of the association. Their closing sketch (original) entitled "A Pleasant Prescription," was pronounced one of the best things ever produced at Lake Brady. The Haines orchestra furnished the musical programme. Miss Ila Haines' cornet solo and Prof. Frederick Fabrican's violin solo, were both repeatedly encored.

A materializing seance was given Monday evening by Mr and Mrs. G. W. Hepner for the benefit of the association. Twenty-two people made up the circle, twenty-one of whom were called up to the cabinet to receive the greetings of deceased friends. Most of these people claimed to recognize the forms and features of their departed friends.

Charlie Barnes, a trumpet medium, who has come regularly to Lake Brady during the nine seasons of its existence, has just left for his home at Anderson, Ind. His farewell seance was one of the best we ever attended of the many he has given upon the grounds.

MRS. M. M'CASLIN.

Mount Pleasant Park, Ia.

History states that the "Jah" of the Old Testament was a "God of the Hills." However much we may deprecate his methods in other respects, one who has recently exchanged the torridity of Chicago for the trees, grasses and hills of Mount Pleasant Park, can at least admire his taste in the selection of a dwelling place.

It is true the heat wave has reached us here, but we are placidly floating on its crest, as it were, instead of being buried in the swirl of its vortex, as, according to reports many of the great centres of population now seem to be.

Ten years have intervened since we last yielded to the varied inspiration this delightful place has to offer, and we find them increased rather than diminished. Many of the familiar voices and faces that used to greet us are still here; many are absent, however, but the kindly smiles and warm welcome of those who have taken their places, assure us they are nobly represented.

President W. F. Peck possesses all the earnestness and logic that distinguished Prof. Loveland in the years that are gone, to which are added social qualities and a graciousness of manner peculiarly his own. His managerial ability, together with the enthusiastic efforts of the efficient secretary, Mrs. Stella A. Fisk, and the general fitness of all other officers and trustees, promises for this camp continued success.

We arrived in time to hear only the last lecture delivered by Willard J. Hull, which elicited continued applause, and together with the influence of the preceding ones, called forth many expressions of regret at the departure, both of himself and his amiable wife.

Julia Steelman Nichols, who visits this camp for the first time, followed Mr. Hull. Her first lecture was attended by a large and appreciative audience. The spirit messages following, all given to entire strangers, were each promptly recognized as correct, as were also the fifty others, given at her first public test seance, establishing with the friends here her well known reputation for inspiring addresses and excellent test work. Following Mrs. Nichols, we for the first time had the pleasure of listening to the eloquent and logical Rev. B. F. Austin, whose earnestness of thought and engaging manners immediately won for him a warm place in the hearts of all the people here.

Since writing the foregoing the hot wave, with its depressing effects, has invaded our camp. The one thing now most needed is rain, which for the sake of the workers and campers alike it is to be hoped we may have in a few days, and must have ere Clinton can smile again.

Upon its appearance on the grounds The Progressive Thinker is eagerly read.

LILY DALE CAMP.

Its Attractions and the Doings.

Variety is the spice of life, and variety seems to be the order of things in camp this week. To begin with, Sunday there was a lecture from Ingersoll, delivered through the inspiration of Mrs. Richmond. Of course there are many pros and cons in regard to it, as there are in everything else.

Another variation is the sensation caused by the management's attitude toward one of the so-called materializing mediums, whose trap-door and other "traps" were discovered and reported to the officers of the association, who promptly ordered the discontinuance of the seances, and notified the public of the same.

This medium, Schultz, has been before the public before in this character, and still people follow these false lights.

A serious change in the vibrations occurred on Monday when it was discovered that our worthy grocer had, by mistake, been selling gasoline in place of kerosene to his customers. There were several small blazes in consequence, but fortunately no serious damage done, and probably the result will be to make the cottagers even more careful than heretofore in the use of either of these explosives. In the twenty years of camp life here at Cassadaga camp there has never yet been a fire to do damage to the amount of twenty dollars, which seems almost remarkable, considering the number of cottages inhabited on the grounds.

The heat of the past few days has sent many to indulge in the refreshing coolness of the lake and the exhilarating excitement of the toboggan. These are cheap luxuries, and the supply is so abundant as to be within the reach of all.

People are coming and going; many who came early have departed for their homes, carrying with them happier faces and lighter hearts than with which they came, much of this being due to the work done by Miss Gaule in her platform work, as well as private sittings.

There are good words spoken in favor of many of our mediums, and the great satisfaction they are giving; and it is a pleasing contrast to the doubtful practices of others. The pictures produced by the Bangs Sisters, in full light, have created much favorable comment, and to many is the most pleasing as well as remarkable phase of phenomena.

Mr. Lockwood's classes are well attended, as well as others that are conducted here at the present time, showing the interest felt in the intellectual teachings and instruction which bring us in closer relation to the spiritual in its various forms of manifestations. Mr. Lockwood's rostrum work here begins Thursday, the 9th, to be followed by Mrs. Anna Shaw. Mr. Lockwood's lecture Thursday, reviewing some of our critics, was a masterly effort. It is to be regretted that it was not a Chautauqua audience to hear it.

As never before the days seem flying by at this lovely camp; there is so much crowded into each day there is never an idle hour. There has been some miscarrying in the programme in regard to speakers, owing to sickness in some cases, and misunderstanding as to dates in another. However, there has been no lack of talent to supply the vacancies and the work has gone smoothly on.

Many practical questions are discussed at the conferences, and thought exchange; and the listener has abundant opportunity to judge of the varieties and vagaries of the human mind. Every known "ism" has come in for a share of these talks, from vegetarianism down—or up—as the scale may run. There is one important subject, however, that has yet to be fully aired, and that is tobacco; it has been pretty well "aired" as a weed, but not as a topic of discussion. And while we are about it—"weeding out," why not touch upon the effect of tobacco upon the human system, as well as diet or anything else which vitiates the body? Is it because we love it so that no one wishes to lay a correcting hand upon it?

Mediums of every phase almost have been criticised in one way or another, I am going to say something about the healers who claim to do such wonderful work, and do not hesitate to approach a sensitive patient, fresh from the fumes of a nauseating cigar; what kind of magnetism is it, you who are steeped in tobacco, that you transmit to your patients? It must be a powerful control that can work through such an organism. It is simply disgusting, and the nuisance does not stop here; it is safe to say there is not a public resort in the land where we are not obliged to swallow the fumes of tobacco if one ventures to seek enjoyment at such places. Even here at Lily Dale, where better things should be expected of gentlemen, one cannot enter the post-office or grocery, or take a stroll across the park, without dodging a cigar, or being choked and made sick from the fumes of them. Why is it? Do they love the weed so well that it makes men, young and old, forget to be gentlemen? Woman has protested against this nuisance always, but our "lords and masters" entirely ignore the fact.

Friday afternoon Mr. Lockwood gave another strong lecture, and the applause which greeted his utterances attested to the appreciation and intelligence of the audience.

Mr. Lockwood thinks there is as much need of whitewash and fumigators in the orthodox pulpit as on a Spiritualist camp-ground, and any minister knowing the falsity of the teachings he is promulgating, is as big a fake as are any to be found among mediums.

The attendance is good at every session, though the heat of the past few days makes the lake look very inviting, and many are luxuriating in its cooling embrace, while others are drinking in the waters of spiritual enlightenment found in the instructive lectures given every day from the rostrum. No camp gives a greater variety of entertainment to its guests than Lily Dale, and it is every year becoming more popular. Some who came have purchased homes here, to make an all-the-year-around abiding place. It is well, for summer or winter, there is always an attraction at Lily Dale.

MARY WEBB-BAKER.

YOU, as a progressive mind, should know something of the phenomena of that magnificent change called Death. On that subject you will find valuable information in the three volumes of The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World. Those three volumes contain more valuable information on that subject than all the libraries of the world. They are furnished to the subscribers of The Progressive Thinker at a nominal cost. Read carefully our premium list.

NEW EDITION.
THE LYCEUM GUIDE

Do you want to organize a society, for the social, intellectual and spiritual advancement of the children and adults?

THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM
furnishes all you desire.

Do you want a self-sustaining society, founded on the basic principles of the spiritual philosophy? You have it in THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM. It furnishes a system of evolution by internal growth; not the old cup and pitcher Sunday-school. It has something to interest and advance every member, and those who are most active in teaching are the ones who learn most.

NO SPECIAL INSTRUCTOR REQUIRED.
THE LYCEUM GUIDE gives every detail needed for effective organization, and for conducting the society when established.
It has Golden Chain Recitations; the prettiest songs and music; choral responses; a service for a Band of Mercy; calisthenics; how to make the badges, flags and banners; marching exercises; full instructions in conducting the exercises, with parliamentary rules, etc.
Many Spiritualists living in isolation, have formed lyceums in their own families; others have banded, two or three families together, while large societies have organized on the lyceum platform, and found great interest in this self-instructive method.
Do not wait for a "missionary" to come to your assistance, but take hold of the matter yourself, procure copies of the GUIDE, and commence with the few or many you find interested.
Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle (address, Berlin Heights, Ohio) will answer all questions pertaining to lyceum work.
The price of THE LYCEUM GUIDE is 50 cents, postpaid, or by the dozen, 40 cents each, by express, charges paid by receiver. Address

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Miss E. S.: The directness of purpose, and decision of character; and precision of thought with which you are distinctly endowed, would make your success certain in any business requiring these qualities. Especially are you adapted to places of trust, where integrity and faithfulness in details are requisite. You would take a keen delight in responsibilities that would crush others.

A. H. Nicholas: Q. The planet Saturn was formerly described and pictured as having three rings. I remember reading an account to the effect that the inner ring had fallen, which obscured the surface of the planet in a cloud that lasted several months. This occurred some time between 1850 and 1860. What are the facts in the case?

A. The facts are that this correspondent has been misinformed. The system of Saturn is the most complex of any planet belonging to the solar system, and presents to the telescope the grandest scene in all the starry heavens. Aside from its eight satellites, one of which is almost as large as the planet Mercury, it has two bright rings or zones, the outermost 10,000 miles in width, and the innermost 17,500 miles. There is a space of 1,500 miles between them. Inside of these, having a breadth of about 9,000 miles, is a dark ring. This ring surrounds the planet at a distance of 10,000 miles. These rings were at one time regarded as solid, but it has been demonstrated that it would be impossible for them, if rigid, to withstand the tremendous attraction of the central body. They must be in an exceedingly yielding state. From glimpses gained, and the necessity of the case, it is presumed that each ring is composed of several, and that these are formed of distinct bodies, of greater or less size, mingled with dust or vapor, and all rotating in nearly the same orbits. Placed so very near the planet the rings are subject to tremendous attraction, to counterbalance which the bodies of which they are composed must revolve with exceeding velocity.

Since this sublime spectacle was first presented through the telescope there has been no change of moment observed. New features are brought to view by higher powers of the recently constructed instruments, but the wreck and ruin of one of the zones exists only in the minds of the penny-a-liner, who cares as little for the truth as he knows of astronomy. The rings represent an arrested stage in world formation from the zones thrown off from the revolution of the vortex out of which the solar system was evolved.

By some chance the equilibrium of revolution and attraction in them has become balanced, and hence they remain, instead of gathering into satellites.

Q. Is it prophetic? A delegate to the Silver Republican convention which was to be held in harmony with the National Democratic convention at Kansas City, July 4, gives an interesting episode which occurred during the sessions.

After the nomination of Bryan was announced they unfurled a large banner, about 30 x 40 feet, and when fully up it became entangled. Did the unseen forces behind the affairs of men, thus prophesy of the future? In the hall of the silver convention the picture of Lincoln was everywhere conspicuous, and a large one leaned against the speaker's desk, trimmed with flags which projected from the corners. This picture fell, breaking the glass covering, presumably touched by the speaker's hand or sleeve.

Judge Phillips, of California, a delegate, was called to give an address, and made this statement: "A very strange circumstance occurred yesterday when our worthy chairman was making his address. When he alluded to Abraham Lincoln his picture was overturned and broken." He said: "It is enough to make, and would not be strange for Lincoln to turn over in his grave when viewing the condition of our country to-day. I hope materialization may be true and that Abraham Lincoln would come back and stand on this platform and tell us what to do to save our country."

A. From the earliest historic times it has been firmly believed that the unseen forces behind the movements of events, on great and momentous occasions, gave intimation of their purpose in signs and omens. The entangling of the flag, the falling of the picture may be explained by purely physical causes, yet may not these very causes been induced by these superior forces as prophetic? Let them be recorded as prophetic.

An Admirer, Syracuse, N. Y.: Q. Can you tell me when and where James G. Clark passed from this life?

A. Nearly two years ago, at Passadena, Cal. He overtaxed himself in his favorite profession, and his strong constitution could not rally from the shock. I take this occasion to speak of the noble character of this prince of balladists. His poems and songs have been gathered in a volume, the harvest of a life devoted to song. He wrote his inspirations as they came fresh, strong, and with a rhythm expressive of the sphere of purity and ennobling love, and with such exquisite melody that they set themselves to music. He sang them to delighted audiences in almost every state in the Union and his listeners never wearied.

Many of these songs became as household words, and were sung in cottage and palace. They are pervaded with a shadow of sadness, yet always through the shadow shines the brightness of hope; a great purpose, an assurance that happiness will be gained by true, unswerving adhesion to right and duty. There is more in these songs than the words express. There is a subtle influence like the perfume of flowers, which exalts and exhilarates.

Who has not felt the yearnings expressed in these magnificent lines addressed to the poet's mother?

"Is there no grand, immortal sphere
Beyond this realm of broken ties,
To fill the wants that mock us here,
And dry the tears from weeping eyes?
When Winter melts in endless Spring,
And June stands near with deathless flowers,
When we may hear the dear ones sing
Who loved us in this world of ours?
I ask, and lo! my cheeks are wet
For tears for one I cannot see:
O Mother, art thou living yet,
And dost thou still remember me?"

J. McKinstry: Q. Do you believe that spirits are able to pass solid substances, as an article of furniture, through other solid substances, as the door of a room?

(2) Have you had such demonstrations as to be convincing to every unprejudiced mind?

A. (1) It yet remains to be demonstrated that a material object can be passed through another material object. To account for this phenomenon, which he accepted, Prof. Zollner introduced the "fourth dimension of space," which is itself an unsupported fancy.

(2) I have had a series of facts and inspirations which have convinced me of the continuance of life, but this when repeated may not convince even an "unprejudiced mind." Every one must have evidence for themselves, and to supply this demand is the mission of the phenomena. Until I was convinced I did not advocate the spiritual philosophy, and did I doubt, I should, even now, pause until my doubts were removed.

Maple Dell Camp, O.

Sunday, August 5, was a red-letter day at this Mecca of Spiritualism. From Cleveland and the surrounding country, in cars, in carriages and on "wheels" people gathered on this beautiful spot not only to enjoy visible nature, but to learn something of that invisible realm to prepare for which is one of the chief objects of existence. The largest gathering of the season was on the grounds. A. J. Weaver opened the exercises in the auditorium by expressing the gratitude and joy and aspiration awakened by the occasion, in a few earnest and prayeful words.

Mrs. Kates followed with an address replete with spiritual truth and rhetorical beauty and force. She dwelt on Spiritualism as a factor in the world's progress which history will not ignore. Vigorous applause followed when she emphatically condemned the injustice and avarice of the European allied powers in their long-talked-of scheme to dismember the Chinese empire by force in order to enlarge their boundaries and increase their wealth and power which are already immense.

In the afternoon there was a still larger audience. Mr. Kates delivered a fine address on the need of enlightening spiritually and elevating morally the human race. He emphasized the need of children being born right and then rightly trained, and spoke a good word for the lyceum as a factor in the work. He was cheered when he said "we need to grow Spiritualists instead of making them."

At the close of the address Mrs. Kates came to the front and used her clairvoyant power in demonstrating the fact of spirit presence. The excellent work done by Mrs. Curran and Mr. Dunakin is being successfully carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Kates, who will remain till the close of the week, when Dr. Peebles is expected.

The school work is meeting with unexpected success in each of its four departments: Psychic work, Oratory, Science illustrated and Language Lessons, by Mr. King, Miss Hill, Mr. Kerstetter and Mr. Weaver respectively. For all the good work done at Maple Dell Spiritualism is indebted to the National Spiritual and Religious Association.

The management of the hotel under Mr. and Mrs. Cole deserves praise.

A. J. WEAVER.

Briggs Park, Mich.

Yesterday's meetings were up to the average both in interest and numbers. At the forenoon meeting, Mrs. Burland, of Muskegon, delivered a very interesting lecture on "The Eternal Now." At the close of her lecture she gave some descriptions, all of them being recognized. At the message service in the afternoon all the mediums present took part and there was a most interesting meeting.

In the evening, Mr. Henry Warner, of Chicago, gave a lecture on the subject of "Mediumship as a Science." He took the position that all phenomena (so-called) of any nature could be done by a spirit in the body as well as one out of the body. He referred to the sentence so often used, "calling up the spirit." He claimed that the medium was not the one that did the calling. That it was the persons themselves that did the inviting. That a person who was not all that could be desired as an individual, might be a strong medium, but the quality of mediumship depended largely on the character of the medium. Hence the importance of a medium living a pure life. In referring to "conditions," he said that persons who attended seances would eat a great amount of almost indigestible food and then expect spiritual demonstrations. It was as necessary for a person desiring good results, to make good conditions for the medium as for a carpenter to have his saw or plane sharp and in good condition if he wanted to do a good job in his line.

On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings Mrs. Burland will speak.

Beginning on Thursday and continuing over Sunday, Mrs. Sheets, of Grand Ledge, will be the worker. Mrs. Sheets is of national renown, and we bespeak for her a good audience and her hearers will be well repaid. Tomorrow afternoon, Dr. Knowles; Wednesday, Mrs. Coffman; Thursday, Geo. B. Holmes; Friday, Mr. Ripley. Next Sunday evening there will be another message service.

The funeral of Mr. Walker's child will be held on the grounds at 11 a.m. tomorrow, by Mrs. Claman, who will return for that purpose. X X.

The camp at Vicksburg, Mich., opened Sunday, the 5th inst., with Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly in the chair, who also gave an eloquent opening address at 10:30 a. m., asking the assistance of the whole camp to make this its most successful and enjoyable season, and showing that the basis of success must be harmony, and an earnest wish to be good and do good. This lecture was followed by readings and descriptions by Mr. Edgerly and Mrs. Barton, of Rochester, N. Y., which were fine and well received. At 2:30 Mrs. Marion Carpenter, of Detroit gave us a fine lecture, followed by a full hour given to those sweet soul communions, from spirit to earth plane, that seemed to lift the whole audience to higher conditions, and hold them spellbound.

In the evening the blind orator, Mr. A. E. Tisdale, gave one of his masterly and forceful scientific addresses, concerning and covering that space between agonostic materialism and the spirit, or soul entity, and closing with a grand inspirational poem, thus concluding the first and one of the grandest day's meeting it has ever been my lot to attend; but the list of speakers still to follow at this camp bespeaks for us many more feasts for the soul, ere the fourth Sunday closes the camp.

H. L. CHAPMAN.

Vicksburg Camp, Mich.

A large and appreciative audience greeted the speakers upon Sunday, August 5, Oscar A. Edgerly, chairman of the camp for the third year, gave the opening address. It was from my point of view an able, appropriate address, it was broad and comprehensive.

At two o'clock Mrs. Carpenter from Detroit, lectured and gave tests for two hours, holding her audience spellbound. She is a remarkable medium, has a melodious voice, sings sweetly and is by experience and inspiration qualified to do a good work upon the spiritual rostrum.

A. E. Tisdale, the blind teacher and singer, was present, and sang some of his harmonizing melodious songs, and on Sunday evening gave us one of his interesting, far-reaching and philosophical discourses. The day was one of the hot ones, but there was no suffering on the camp grounds.

There have been some great changes made upon the grounds. Several new cottages erected, the old buildings moved, repaired and artistically painted, the grounds broadened and beautified. The prevailing sentiment—which is strong—is that this camp this year is to do a good work, more far-reaching and satisfactory than ever before. If I should express myself just as I feel, I should say that the Vicksburg camp-meeting has reached front rank as a Spiritual camp, and its growing and continued success is the result of the wisdom and devotion of the clear-headed, honest little woman who manages, and blesses every effort and suggestion that tends to the uplifting of humanity. DR. M. E. CONGER.

Island Lake, Mich.

Island Lake camp is in a prosperous condition. The management are doing all in their power for the advancement of Spiritualism, and comfort of their guests.

Many improvements have been made during the past year and more are constantly added. With such pioneers at the helm as Mr. James H. White, Mr. Asa Smith and the other able workers, we feel safe in predicting a glorious future for Island Lake. Mrs. Ella B. Brown, the secretary, is the right woman in the right place, loved and respected by all.

Dr. J. M. Peebles was with us the week of July 26. His presence and able lectures gave a life to the camp that was felt by all and a sadness came over the entire camp when he departed.

Mrs. Nellie S. Baade, the popular chairwoman, who has been an untiring worker here for four seasons, deserves the highest praise. She has a host of friends, and the verdict seems to be that she must return another year.

Tuesday Mrs. Baade was the speaker and test medium of the day. Subjects submitted to the guides were handled in a masterly manner. In fact she is considered one of the brightest lights upon the rostrum.

Prof. P. O. Hudson, with his able assistants furnish beautiful music for all occasions.

Next Sunday this camp will have the pleasure of listening to the able lecturer, Lyman C. Howe, at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. Sunday evening Mrs. Baade will give a brief address on "Our Republic," followed by "The American Flag" musical recitation rendered by Agnes Tuttle, accompanied by the orchestra. Mr. S. A. Davenport will sing, and the program bids fair to be a decided success.

WINFIELD CAMP, KAN.

A Worker and Medium Has Somewhat to Say.

I would like to ask Mr. Tucker, who reported the Winfield camp through your columns, if he believes in rendering unto Caesar that which is due to Caesar? If so, then why did he not give credit to the workers who, unpaid, yet so generously and largely contributed to the work of the camp to make it a success? It was a much-observed and very visible fact, that the test mediums he named, and who were hired by the society, did not give their messages or tests to skeptics, but confined themselves to a favored few of the old-time Spiritualists they had known for years. Perhaps the society is not aware that the so-called tests did more harm than good in the observing ranks of skeptics. One of the so-called tests was pumped from a child and afterward passed by these two mediums onto the parent as genuine. Will that kind of Spiritualism convert the skeptic? I wonder that justice did not remind Mr. Tucker of the evening of the 10th, when there was a circle of more than one hundred, with about the same number standing on the outside, all waiting and waiting for the society's test mediums to arise and go forth among the skeptics and demonstrate the claims of their Spiritualism, the mediumship of communicating with their dead, giving proof of clairvoyant power to read the past and foretell the future; but alas! their mediums were not there, and the people were growing impatient, threatening a stampede for town, when I arose, resolved in my mind that I would serve the demands of the skeptics and be loyal to spiritual truth regardless of the slight I had previously received from the society. 'Twas then I called for skeptics and many responded. My husband joined me and we gave tests of telling force to skeptics, some of whom had been coming to that camp for several seasons, but had never been told anything they could or would recognize, until that night. The next day we served again the 2 p. m. circle; also one evening in the auditorium we served the society, besides at every morning circle we contributed our mite, which was always given to the skeptics, as we have no time to convert old fossilized Spiritualists, who want to be converted every seven days of the week, by tests.

Justice was slow, or else Mr. Tucker would have spoken of Mrs. Lovett, of Madison, Kansas, who so generously gave her mediumship service to the public. Many were the skeptics she reached through spirit impersonation, thus acting as a beacon light to both mortal and immortal minds. She no doubt is the guiding star of a vast army of progressive minds, who received their first light of Spiritualism through her willingness to lay down her life for the education of another. "He that layeth down his life for another, shall take it up again. He that would lose his life for another, shall find it again." Thus Jesus spake of impersonating mediumship.

Last but not least, we ask, was justice asleep when Mr. Tucker's memory forgot to mention old Father Eastman, the old veteran spirit impersonator and spirit communicator, who has ever met each season of the camp's life. He has been thoroughly shaken down, well pressed on all sides, and as yet, has never been found wanting. He was allotted the privilege (?) of being the all-around roustabout boy of the camp, bringing up the head and rear of the hard work of the camp. In years he numbers more than 80, yet his activity excels that of many of 50. But for the hard work of Mr. Eastman, the camp would have been a complete failure, and but for him the camp would go the way of the wicked.

There were other mediums who were there and who did good service, whose names I do not remember, but they were loyal to the cause of Spiritualism and the interest of the society.

'Tis good that the society paid the expense of camp, but the question of interest is: What did the society or its mediums do to convince the skeptics of the truth of spirit return?

Yours for justice and truth,
MRS. HOOKER M'EVOY.
Fame, Kansas.

Haslett Park Camp, Mich.

Sunday morning, August 5, our meeting opened with the remarks from our president Mrs. Haslett, wishing each and every one on our grounds a hearty welcome as they will come and go during our camp; after which the chairman announced the song by choir, followed with an invocation by our speaker, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley. Solo by Mrs. Shirie, entitled "Sometime." Mrs. Cooley then took the rostrum and read a poem entitled "What the Dead Man Left for His Loved One," after which she took up the facts of Spiritualism and the blessings the light has given to the world at large. She gave us some grand new thoughts on our religion with its higher lights, also spoke of the condition of the human family, closing with the remark that nothing was free to all but the sunshine and pure air that could not be bottled up and sold by a trust. She then introduced to the friends, Mrs. Mullins and Mrs. Sears, of Chicago, who made a few remarks.

Afternoon was opened with an invocation by Mrs. Sears. Dr. A. B. Spinney then gave one of his fine discourses on the works and light of the cause given to people as they seek for the light. As Spiritualism grows the world grows better and its truths advance. The Doctor spoke in the most favorable terms of mediums and their works, and of their true development. Our meeting was well attended.

MRS. O. H. SOULE.

Maple Dell Camp, Ohio.

The campers and workers of Maple Dell Park were pleasantly surprised today by the arrival of about twenty visitors from Lake Brady camp, who drove in with song and happy faces about 11 o'clock a. m. Among them were D. A. Herrick and wife, E. W. Sprague and wife. After a chicken-pie dinner, which was bounteously served by our host J. Cole and wife, the school building and other points of interest were visited. After a pleasant visit under the maples, all repaired to the Auditorium. Short speeches were made by E. W. Sprague, D. A. Herrick, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates, D. M. King and others upon the best plan of unifying the work and workers. Most of the speakers were in favor of an alliance under some plan that would leave the local societies free from the per capita demands of expensive central associations. This would leave funds in the treasuries of local and state societies to pay the expense of delegates chosen to attend state and national conventions, and to build up their respective societies, M. C. DANFORTH, Chairman.

ENCYCLOPEDIA
...OF...
BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM
...OR...
A CONCORDANCE
To the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism;
Together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible.

BY MOSES HULL.

Much that is in this book appeared in an abridged form in a series of nine full pages of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. These articles were prepared at the call of hundreds of Spiritualists who felt the need of some kind of document for ready reference. They only seemed to whet the appetite for more; hence the publication of this work.

The author, Moses Hull, has written many volumes on Spiritualistic and other themes and each one is full of careful study on the subject chosen. Mr. Hull, in his introduction of this work says:

"Hoping that this book will serve to lead the people out of the wilderness of doubt and despair; and that when Spiritualism shall have wrested the Bible from its 'sanctified' enemies, it will not 'spike' it, but will use it to batter down the walls of Christian superstition and ignorance, I send it out on its errand of enlightenment with the humble prayer that it will prove a divine benediction to every reader."

THE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM contains 885 pages, beautifully printed on good paper, contains a full-page portrait of the author and is handsomely bound in cloth. Every Spiritualist should have this work.

OLD AND NEW PSYCHOLOGY.
BY W. J. COLVILLE.

Reports of twenty-four distinct lectures, recently delivered in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Philadelphia and other prominent cities of the United States, have contributed the basis of this volume.

The chief aim throughout the volume has been to arouse increased interest in the workable possibilities of a theory of human nature, thoroughly optimistic and at the same time, profoundly ethical. As several chapters are devoted to improved methods of education, the writer confidently expects that many parents, teachers and others who have charge of the young, or who are called upon to exercise supervision over the morally weak and mentally afflicted, will derive some help from the doctrines herewith promulgated.

SCIENCE OF THE SOUL
BY
LOREN ALBERT SHERMAN.

Sets forth the Philosophy of Existence, with detailed evidence. It appeals to Christians and Spiritualists alike, as it demonstrates the truth of the spirit manifestations of Jesus Christ, upon which the Christian religion is based, as well as the actuality of modern spirit manifestations. Its title page claims that the book is

A SCIENTIFIC DEMONSTRATION
of the Existence of the soul of man as his conscious individuality independently of the physical organism;
of the
CONTINUITY OF LIFE and the
ACTUALITY OF SPIRIT RETURN.

The first eleven chapters are devoted entirely to manifestations of the soul incarnate, with a clear exposition of the psychic philosophy.

The succeeding four chapters set forth the philosophy of the Infinite.

The last twenty chapters are devoted to an exposition of spiritual philosophy, with evidence in detail, much of it being personal experiences of the author.

The price of the book is $1. For sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker.

VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY.
Lectures by the Swami Vivekananda, on Raja Yoga; or Conquering the Internal Nature, and other subjects; also, Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms, with commentaries and a copious glossary of Sanskrit terms. Revised and enlarged, 12mo. Cloth, $1.50. Raja Yoga is an ancient system of Indian Philosophy, and one of the four chief methods that the Vedanta Philosophy offers to obtain freedom and perfection. Swami Vivekananda became a familiar figure in several American cities during the three years following the Parliament of Religions at Chicago; he was cordially received in America, where the breadth and depth of his teachings were soon recognized. His teachings are universal in their application. The book is cheap at $1.50. For sale at this office.

Woman, Church and State.
A Historical Account of the Status of Woman Through the Christian Ages, with Reminiscences of the Matriarchate.
BY MATILDA JOSLYN GAGE.
THE AMOUNT OF VALUABLE INformation succinctly and clearly stated in this volume of 554 pages is amazing. The title, as above given, fails to convey an idea of the fulness and completeness with which the subjects are treated. The Matriarchate, or Mother-rule, is the theme of the first chapter, in which much lore, quaint, queer and curious, is brought to view in elucidation of the subject. This is followed by chapters on Celibacy, Canon Law, Marquette, Witchcraft, Wives, Polygamy, Woman and Work, The Church of To-day, Past, Present, Future; and there is not a chapter in the book that is not handled in a masterly manner, and that for quantity and quality of information, is not worth the full price of the volume. It is packed with knowledge well-arranged, and intensely interesting from beginning to end. No one can possibly regret buying it; it is a valuable addition to the library of any free and truth-loving mind.

BIBLE PROBLEMS.

Reply to J. Young McFarland.

On June 30, I hastily propounded a few questions to Bible experts as a bait to catch one of them for the purpose of vivisection. And the ruse succeeded, as readers will note by reading an article in The Progressive Thinker of July 14, signed as above.

Now, Brother McFarland, if you will only stick to your job of defending the Bible, I will keep you at it with more agility than a somersault clown at a circus.

You say that I am "evidently not a Bible expert." You are correct, and the referee will credit you with the first blood; for here is my record:

At the age of 5 years I could read the Bible without assistance, so you see I started right. I had little else but the Bible and hymn-book to read till the age of 16. I then went to work on a farm for a deacon who was continually preaching and saying "the Bible had been his whole study for 20 years."

After working a while I caught him lying, and would not listen to his prayers any longer. He had read too much about Abraham's wife lying in the presence of angels; Jacob and his mother deceiving Isaac; also, Jehovah wanting some one to be a "lying spirit in the mouth of his prophets." So I dropped the study of the Old Testament 42 years ago, and have to quote from memory. I carried a New Testament through the Civil war, to stop bullets; but I might have carried a rabbit's foot just as well, for I got hit in the left wrist just the same. I did not get civilized until the age of 42, when I read the works of Ingersoll, Paine, Denton and others. Then I rejoiced in mental freedom, but did not get enlightened till one year ago, when the spirit of my son succeeded after seven years' effort, in establishing a wireless telegraph from "over there."

The next thing I notice in your answer is that you think I see "men as trees walking." You are mistaken, sir, for I never use any of the liquid that has that effect; neither as drink, medicine nor at the communion table where the Devil slips in his kindling wood.

You ask if the Bible finds fault with me? Yes, worse than it did with Adam and Eve; for they only got one little windfall from the "tree of knowledge," while I am climbing the tree for all I can reach; and then I will shake off the rest for those who need civilizing and enlightening out of orthodoxy.

You say "one thing at a time." Then let us first clear the track of Bible rubbish that has barred the way for thousands of years. Then the spiritual trains will soon take every one on the road to endless progression, without stopping at frog ponds for baptism, or 1867 year-old grave yards for cannibalizing the remains.

You say, "woe to Spiritualism when its defenders are men who fight the Bible." I reply, woe to religion when men stop probing around an old cesspool, and commence climbing the "tree of knowledge," and get their tips from the better spirits that have been there.

Among my spirit guides is my oldest brother who was called the most humble and devout Christian in Manchester, N. H. When he passed out he started for "Abraham's bosom," but found it so full of "concubines," that he came back in disgust with the outfit of idiots, thieves and murderers that have been "jerked to Jesus" with ropes, and he is now helping me write.

In fact he had better success than the "rich man" for he got a ticket of leave and came back to notify his "five brethren" to keep away from an orthodox heaven.

The trouble with you Christians is this, you began wrong, for there is no doubt that Jehovah and Satan were two brothers when they started into market gardening. Satan was the most truthful, as the garden story shows. He was also much the sharpest in a trade. For while they were dickering about Job, Satan through his assistants got away with "five hundred yoke of oxen, 7,000 sheep, 3,000 camels and 500 she asses."

That gave him a good start in farming, so that about 1,900 years ago he owned "all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them."

No doubt he was much annoyed by "drouths," "pestilences and famines" that Jehovah sent around Jerusalem. But Satan knew all the time that the world was not flat, four-cornered" and "standing on pillars," and he was then doing a thriving business "out west," and in Central America, as the ruins show for themselves. But Jehovah and his boy thought that the next county, where the "Queen of Sheba came from the uttermost part of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon," was the jumping-off place.

But let us give the Devil his due, and remember that he has had no chance to tell his story; that he is not given to bragging and threatening.

When Jehovah could not drive those Philistines out of a valley "because they had chariots of iron," I think Satan could have done better. Read up, and you will see that Jehovah was not in fighting trim, for he had "thirty-two virgins" turned over to him as his share of the spoils of war. You speak of my "not attacking the Bible in the center." Well, I turned to the center, Solomon's Song, and found it too soft to make a landing; so I concluded to use good generalship and strike at the wings first.

But time and space forbid to go further, but if you will give me your street and number, I will send one of my new books called "Spiritual Fire Crackers, Bible Chestnuts, and Political Pin Points," and it will do you more good than a term at a Divinity College.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

For the second time within a few weeks the Spiritualists of Toledo, Ohio, are called upon to perform the last service that can be rendered the physical form. This time it is Sister Mary Eschenroder, of 24 Tenth street, who has been called at the age of 60, to the life beyond. She was one of the veteran Spiritualists, and has always been highly esteemed. Being clairvoyant and a first-class trance medium, she did much in her own quiet way to convert and bring into the ranks of Spiritualism many people, and now she will be sadly missed. In spirit we know she will ever be near and will work incessantly for the growth and promotion of the cause she so dearly loved. May the knowledge of this also constitute the comfort and consolation of her companion and children who remain to mourn the loss of the physical form.

Mrs. Urenia C. Racklyeft, wife of John R. Racklyeft, passed to the higher life at her home, South Waverly, Pa., August2. She had been a patient sufferer with dropsy for some time. She was born at Enfield, N.Y., June 24, 1827. She was twice married, but leaves no children, but an aged husband who will miss her kind face and helpful hands. The funeral was conducted by Mrs. Perrine, of Elmira. Mrs. R. was a medium and a healer, and was beloved by everybody. MRS. E. P. FRALICK.

Passed to spirit life in San Jose, Cal., August 3, 1900, J. R. W. Taylor. Mrs. Cowell officiated as speaker at the funeral on the 5th, after which the remains were taken to San Francisco, to be cremated. He was an ardent Spiritualist, also a member of the A. O. U. W. lodge. H. L. B.

Albert Jones, of Leighton, Mich., joined hands with the angels, July 19, 1900, at the age of 67. He had been a Spiritualist and medium for forty years. Services were held at the house on the 1st by the writer. His many friends made a large audience who listened to a service in consonance with his honest convictions. C. A. ANDRUS.

OUR PREMIUMS.

There are many Spiritualists who know a good thing when they see it. There are others, however, who do not seem to realize what is going on around them, and therefore miss many chances to enrich their minds and enlarge their understanding. Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World is furnished to our subscribers at less than cost, and should be in every family in the United States, whether Spiritualists or not. Volumes 1, 2 and 3 constitute a wonderful magazine of thought on Death in its multifarious phases; in fact you can not find in all the libraries of the world as valuable information in regard to Death as you will have presented to you in these three volumes. They are nicely printed, neatly and substantially bound, and are an ornament to any library. Volume 3 is furnished at 25 cents, much less than the actual cost to us, and the three volumes, when ordered in connection with a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, only cost $1.10. The aggregate cost of the three books to the trade is $4.50. At this price, these three books ought to be in every Spiritualist family.

The Progressive Thinker is the first Spiritualist paper to inaugurate the Divine Plan—a portion of the profits of the office returning to subscribers in valuable books.

"Origin of Life, or Where Man Comes From." "The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter Through Organic Processes, or How the Spirit Body Grows." By Michael Faraday. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"Poems of Progress," By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

"Heliocentric Astrology or Essentials of Astronomy and Solar Mentality, with Tables of Ephemeris from 1830 to 1910." By Yarmo Vedra. For sale at this office. Price, $1.50.

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism, A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, lecturer upon physical, physiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the molecular or spiritual hypothesis of nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

"Our Bible: Who Wrote It? When? Where? How? Is It Infallible? A Voice from The Higher Criticism. A few thoughts on other Bibles." By Moses Hull. Of especial value and interest to Spiritualists. For sale at this office. Price $1.

"The Spiritualism of Nature." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood. Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

THOUSANDS CURED!

Marvelous Has Been the Success of This Well-Known Healer in Curing Chronic and Obstinate Cases.

J. M. PEEBLES, A. M., M. D., PH.D.

If Sick Read His Liberal Offer, Then Consult Him and Be Healed.

Half a century spent in successfully treating chronic diseases and the unsolicited testimonials from thousands of those whom he has cured, after the best local physicians had failed to give permanent relief, have gained for DR. J. M. PEEBLES a reputation that extends from ocean to ocean, as the most successful practitioner and healer in AMERICA.

This eminent man, whose life has been devoted to the relief of suffering humanity, is not only a graduate of the best medical colleges of this country, but he has counseled with the best medical men in every country on the globe, and his study and research after knowledge that would enable him to benefit those around him who are suffering from chronic diseases, has taken him three times around the world, and to-day his advice and counsel is sought after not only by chronic invalids who have learned his ability to cure these troubles, but also by many physicians as well.

This great and true Healer was one of the pioneers in the study and investigation of the Psychic Science, one of the greatest and most wonderful of all the sciences, and one which is destined to do more for the sick and suffering than any other agency ever discovered. He has made a study of this subject for over half a century, and is to-day considered by the advanced students of this grand science the greatest Psychic living. You should read his late essay on this subject, entitled, "The Psychic Science in the Art of Healing," which he will send you free of cost with the diagnosis if you desire it. Learn for yourself of this wonderful power which may be developed by all. The learned physician who fully understands the Psychic Science can read the human body like an open book. All Dr. Peebles' diagnosing is done by the aid of this occult science. All that is necessary for you to do to receive a complete and accurate diagnosis of your case is to write the Doctor a plain honest letter in your own handwriting. If you will do this, he will send you a diagnosis free of all cost and special advice concerning your case, also his essay spoken of above and other literature explaining fully his methods of treatment and testimonials showing some of the most remarkable cures ever performed.

Thousands of sufferers are treated by physicians who do not know positively where the seat of trouble lies. They experiment for weeks trying to hit upon the right point. The result is that instead of getting relief, the patient gradually grows worse and the case becomes, as they term it, "chronic," and at last the poor sufferer receives that awful sentence, "Your case is hopeless." With Dr. Peebles there are no hopeless cases. His life has been devoted to conquering disease, and the tens of thousands of lives he has saved, the thousands of so-called invalids he has made healthy men and women, and the countless number of homes in every part of the world his wonderful skill has brightened, are testimonies of his ability to treat all kinds of chronic diseases.

Remember that Dr. Peebles does not cure by Christian Science, Mesmerism, or any other "ism," but uses mild magnetized remedies in connection with his Psychic treatment. "These Psychic treatments," says one of his patients, "seem as if they would almost raise the dead." Every effect has its cause, and if the cause is seen and removed the effect will cease—health will ensue. What is your condition? It is within your power to know. If he can tell you the exact cause of your trouble, he can bring relief and without doubt a cure. This he can do, and it will cost you not one cent to test it. In order to inspire confidence in those who have been given up beyond hope, he will diagnose all cases free of charge. All that is required is for you to write the Doctor an honest letter, giving in your own writing your name, age, sex, and leading symptom. If you will do this, he will return your diagnosis at once and will also give you special advice concerning your case. A letter of advice from this great and true physician, whose life has been devoted to relieving the sufferings of his fellow-men, drives back the cloud of despair and comes like a ray of sunshine into the chronic invalid's darkened sky.

Remember that it costs you nothing to write the Doctor and learn your true condition. Write to-day and learn your exact condition, and also ask for literature that will give you a full knowledge of this wonderful method of curing disease.

VOLUMES 1, 2 and 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Art Magic, Ghost Land, The Next World Interviewed, and the Occult Life of Jesus (including the Hull-Covert Debate) constitute our premium list. Those seven books have been on sale, costing the buyer in the aggregate, $10.75. We, after paying the postage and expense of mailing, realize only $1.50 for the seven—far less than cost to us. We desire to form the nucleus of a library in every Spiritualist home, hence this remarkable offer. By subscribing for The Progressive Thinker, you then have the privilege of purchasing these books at the premium prices. See terms on another page.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull For sale at this office. Price ten cents.

"The Bridge Between Two Worlds." By Abby A. Judson. This book is dedicated to all earnest souls who desire, by harmonizing their physical and their psychical bodies with universal nature and their souls with the higher intelligences, to come into closer connection with the purer realms of the spirit world. It is written in the sweet spiritual tone that characterizes all of Miss Judson's literary works. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 75 cents. For sale at this office.

"Principles of Light and Color." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A truly great work of a master mind, and one whom Spiritualists should delight to honor. The result of years of deep thought and patient research into Nature's finer forces are here gathered and made amenable to the well-being of humanity. Medical men especially, and scientists, general readers and students of occult forces will find instruction of great value and interest. A large, four-pound book, strongly bound, and containing beautiful illustrative plates. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $5. It is a wonderful work and you will be delighted with it.

We want ten thousand clubs formed in every part of the United States, for which we present inducements never before offered by any Spiritualist paper. These clubs must consist of ten subscribers, and each one will get Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death; or if they would prefer it, they can have the Next World Interviewed. They can have their choice of the two. Each subscriber in order to avail himself of this offer must pay $1.15. The fifteen cents is to pay expense of postage and mailing, and the books sent out are practically a gift. They are not cheap affairs; they are nicely and substantially bound in cloth, neatly printed in clear type and are ornaments to any center table. The contents are indeed valuable, such as every Spiritualist family should have. The aggregate price of these two books to the trade is $2.75. To each of our club subscribers one of these books is a gift, and when they receive the one of their choice they will be delighted with it, and will wonder how we can afford to do so much for them. The one who gets up the club will be entitled to The Progressive Thinker for one year, and Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, and also the Next World Interviewed. He will not only get The Progressive Thinker for one year, but both books. He gets what is equivalent to $3.75 for his trouble. There should be no difficulty whatever in getting up hundreds of clubs.

Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World will not only interest Spiritualists, but church members will be attracted to it. The Rev. M. J. Savage, a leading liberal divine of New York, leads off with several of his masterly productions, treating Death from an advanced standpoint. He is followed by leading Spiritualists who treat of Death in a philosophical and fascinating manner.

The Next World Interviewed is also a very excellent work. The plates of this book were donated to the office of The Progressive Thinker by Henry J. Horn. It consists of communications from the spirit side of life from leading minds there. Fifty-five communications are given by prominent personages, among them Prince Albert, Harriet Martineau, Judge Edmonds, Horace Greeley, Lord Lytton, Fanny Fern, Dr. Livingstone and the Czar of Russia.

TO CAMP-MEETING GOERS

And Spiritualists Generally Who Take no Spiritualist Papers, Greeting:

If you are a Spiritualist and read no Spiritualist paper, then, of course, you cannot know what is going on in our movement. To you it is midnight darkness in that one respect, however wise you may be in other directions. The Progressive Thinker, being the largest Spiritualist paper published, combining cheapness and excellence, it will be a splendid agent to keep you apprised of what is transpiring in the great Spiritualistic Cause. Thousands of Spiritualists who attend our camp meetings, take no Spiritualist paper. They will go there to have a spiritual feast, and then return home to remain in utter darkness and ignorance as to what is going on in our ranks throughout the world. We ask this class particularly to subscribe for The Progressive Thinker, and thus have their homes illuminated throughout the year.

We don't believe that more than one Spiritualist in ten who visits the camp-meetings takes a Spiritualist paper. We greatly desire to reach this class. We are sure The Progressive Thinker will be a benefit to them while they will be a benefit to us. The benefit derived will be reciprocal.

RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.

BY S. WEIL.

Cloth, $1.25. Paper, 50 cents.

This is a work of great value, written by one of the keenest, most powerful and most truly religious minds of the day. It is particularly a work which should be put into the hands of those who have freed themselves from the dogmas of orthodoxy and from the dogmas of materialistic science, for it will strengthen the conviction of the free mind that mind and senses are not the whole of life.

The chapters reveal a new method in psychic and spiritual research. They show vivid glimpses of a stupendous moral cosmos that will supersede moral confusion; that only veritable tenets can survive, and the childhood period of faith and [illegible] be superseded by knowledge and facts. The Other World and This.

A Compendium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1, New White Cross Literature.

BY AUGUSTA W. FLETCHER, M. D.

In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well-handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. It will prove a rich addition to any Spiritualist's library, and a most excellent book for any one seeking information concerning Spiritualism and its teachings.

MAN

—IN THE—

PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

A POPULAR ACCOUNT OF

Results of recent scientific research regarding the origin, position and prospects of mankind.

From the German of

DR. LUDWIG BÜCHNER,

Author of "Force and Matter," Essays on Nature and Science," "Physiological Pictures," "Six Lectures on Darwin," Etc.

"The great mystery of existence consists in perpetual and uninterrupted change. Everything is immortal and indestructible—the smallest worm as well as the most enormous of the celestial bodies,—the sand grain or the water drop as well as the highest being in creation, man and his thoughts. Only the forms in which being manifests itself are changing; but Being itself remains eternally the same and imperishable. When we die we do not lose ourselves, but only our personal consciousness. We live on in nature, in our race, in our children, in our deeds, in our thoughts—in short, in the entire material and physical contribution which, during our short personal existence, we have furnished to the subsistence of mankind and of nature in general."—Buechner.

One vol., post 8vo., about 350 pages, vellum cloth, $1.

A. Schopenhauer Essays.

Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75c.

CONTENTS.—The Wisdom of Life; Counsels and Maxims;; Religion and other Essays; The Art of Literature; Studies in Pessimism.

"Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophical writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 22 CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1900. NO. 561

MRS. PIPER'S SEANCES

Talks with Kate Field through Boston's Famous Medium.

OCCUPATIONS OF SPIRIT WORLD NOT UNLIKE EARTHLY PURSUITS—TENDENCY OF LATE SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERIES TO OBLITERATE THE LINE BETWEEN THE SEEN AND THE UNSEEN.

Some months ago an eminent clergyman wrote me, saying: "In your interviews with your friend, Miss Kate Field, do you get light on such things as, first, her occupation; second, her body—has she one?—what kind?—third, method of locomotion; fourth, food, rest, sleep?—(The Inter Ocean.)

The questions are vitally suggestive, and represent inquiries of general interest. The dawn of the twentieth century finds the world in a new relation to the divine laws that govern the universe, and in a closer receptivity to divine truth than was ever before experienced. The "supernatural" of the past is the natural of to-day; the miracle of a preceding age is the simple occurrence of the next one, because the laws on which its action is based are understood. The discussion as to whether communication may exist between those in the Seen and in the Unseen has concerned itself too largely with but one detail of the philosophy. The real question is as to the true nature of man—his powers, his possibilities of development, and his evolutionary progress.

The physical body corresponds with the physical plane of life. It is manageable on that plane alone. The astral or ethereal body corresponds with the ethereal or the astral plane, and may be controlled—that is, held manageable—on that plane. And what is that plane? It is the plane of all the mental and moral life; of the spiritual life—which is, of course, the real, the essential life of the individual as seen apart from physical functions. A man may eat and sleep well, and yet be hardly alive in the true sense. He does not live—in the true significance of the term—only just in proportion in which he lives in thought. Now thought not only controls the ethereal or astral body; it creates it. The quality of that body, whether fine or coarse, corresponds to the quality of thought. A life lived in pure purpose and noble aspiration creates a refined and beautiful astral body.

CONTROL OF ASTRAL BODY.

A life lived in noble aspiration enables the mental power to so dominate the astral body that it becomes upon its own plane, manageable and perfect in its service to the real being who dwells in it. Now, when one realizes himself as a spiritual being dwelling in his astral or spiritual body, which is encased, but not necessarily wholly imprisoned, by his physical body, he is already a conscious inhabitant of the world of spirits. He can hold converse with those in the ethereal world, spirit to spirit, just as perfectly as with those in the physical life, to whom he speaks viva voce and whose response he hears. Sight and hearing and response of thought and feeling are faculties of the spirit. To a far less degree—far less keen and fine, and far less swift in recognition and response—they are also organs of the physical body, but only in a dim and muffled and imperfect way compared to their greater perfection in the ethereal organism.

Between the seen and the unseen forces science has now established three remarkable links: that of the Roentgen ray, by means of which man sees through solid substances, that of wireless telegraphy and of the telectroscope, the great new invention of the day, which was one of the signal attractions of the great exposition in Paris this summer. By means of the telectroscope man distinctly sees what is passing hundreds of miles away. Combining the two powers of the long-distance telephone and the telectroscope, man finds that, even here and now, there is nothing hidden that shall not be revealed. These three great discoveries—for they are all insights into existing laws of nature, combined with the knowledge as to the manner in which these laws may be utilized, rather than inventions—these three great discoveries will, during the coming century, entirely revolutionize the conditions of life.

SIGNIFICANCE OF SCIENCE.

These new discoveries indicate something of the conquest of man over unseen forces of nature. The degree of enlightenment which the advanced nations of the world have now reached calls for this swift, this instantaneous means of communication in the twofold degree of hearing and sight which the telectroscope offers. Is it not then, evident that humanity is absolutely advancing into the real, spiritual world; that man is acquiring the control and the intelligent direction of those hitherto unknown forces which have been regarded as mysterious, which have been called supernatural, which have been relegated as entirely belonging to an unseen universe, only to be explored by man after death had released him from the physical world? Truly "the end of the nineteenth century leaves man face to face with God. * * The spiritual universe is fast giving up its secrets hidden to all, save a few, since the world began." The same conditions which, heretofore, man has entered upon only after the change called death, are becoming our conditions now and here.

Sir William Crookes stated in a scientific address recently that "it has been computed that in a single foot of the ether which fills all space there are locked up ten thousand tons of energy which has not yet been brought to notice." Now here is a vast storehouse of infinite force; it is at the service of him who shall learn how to use it. At present its resources are as unknown as were those of electricity when Franklin first struck a spark of electricity from the key when he sent up his kite. There is in the ocean a boundless store of electricity. While our ocean steamers are propelled by the cargoes of coal they lay in, which, at a fearful cost of human energy is fed day and night to the remorseless engine, the very water over which the ship is sailing offers her freely an infinitely greater force of motive power, did she only know how to harness it to her use. That this will be done is only a question of time.

OCCUPATIONS OF SPIRITS.

What are the occupations of the life beyond? Perhaps the first condition for entering on this quest is to realize that the physical body is but a transient phenomenon, and has little determining power over the spiritual being, who is thereby related by it for a season to the physical world. The scholar, the thinker, the statesman, the inventor, the discoverer, the teacher, the poet, the man of affairs—or the ignorant, the vicious—what and where are each and all when they vanish from human sight? Is it not according to the law of spiritual evolution that each advances along the line of the forces he inaugurated here—his faculties unfolding and achieving constantly higher planes of action?

It is an open secret that the friend referred to in all the data that I have gathered is Kate Field. Two sittings with Mrs. Piper, held under the auspices of the Society for Psychic Research, were arranged for me by Dr. Hodgson for two consecutive days, and on the second of these I asked the spirit to tell me—as typical of life in the unseen—just what she had been doing from the hour I left her the day before until I was again at Mrs. Piper's. She wrote:

"I was rather tired after talking to you so long, and I walked into the garden awhile to refresh myself, and then we all went to the temple and heard a great lecture by a very brilliant man on 'Light.' He discussed its composition and its relation to color. A great many scientific people were there, and discussed the subject after the close of the lecture. Then we came home, and I sat down, talking to my father and mother, and then I said: 'I must look into earth-life and see what—mentioning my own name— is about.'"

"And did you see me?" I asked.

"Yes; you were sitting by the window with your lap full of my letters."

As only one night had elapsed, this period was fresh in my memory, and her reply described perfectly my occupation at the time. I was then engaged in the writing of her biography, and in connection with the work I had been examining packages of her letters written to me over a period of fifteen years.

ROSA BONHEUR PRESENT.

My friend in the museum continued: "And I said to you: 'Dear, I do not come alone, but I bring a friend with me.'"

"Whom did you bring?" I questioned.

"Rosa Bonheur," she replied. "She was attracted by your writing about her."

It has been my privilege to meet Mlle. Bonheur at her home in France; and on her death, which occurred about this time, I had been engaged in writing an article on her life and work.

"And after you and Mlle. Bonheur had left my room, what did you do then?" I questioned further.

"I had a period of repose," she replied, "and this morning I have been at a musical convention with Addie Phillips. We are composing some music together."

Adelaide Phillips, the great singer, had been an intimate friend of my friend, and they were always much together up to the time of the death of Miss Phillips.

Now here was a perfectly rational and natural account of the experiences of twenty-four hours, indicating the same life of intellectual activity and artistic purpose that she lived while on earth.

When at almost every seance with Mrs. Piper I have asked her the question: "What are you doing now?" and the reply has always indicated the natural continuity of progress. At one time she replied: "I have been writing the history of my experiences since coming here, for distribution among the denser spirits."

"There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body," says St. Paul. Not that there will be, or may be, but that there is. This simple assertion offers the key. The spiritual body, which is the real and the substantial one, is interpenetrated with the physical body, and it is entirely possible to so live that the psychic body shall take command, as it were; shall live its own free, outgiving life in its infinite energy. By auto-suggestion one may transfer all the consciousness of effort to the psychic body, where effort becomes—not fatigue, as with the physical body, but expression and achievement, which is a joy and not an exertion. The secret of being always in good health, always full of exhilaration and energy, is to live in the psychic, rather than in the physical body. The former has its infinite store of energy which can be drawn upon in proportion as the physical body is kept subordinated by the minimum of food and by exercise and air, and by demanding constantly the supply of spiritual strength.

EFFECT OF MATERIAL THINGS.

At a seance with Mrs. Piper, I asked Miss Field:

"What do you see in my room?" I one day asked her.

"Well, dear, when I am actually in your room, I see your spiritual body and the material body also, yet the material is much the darker of the two, and yet I see them both; and the material looks like the outline of a portrait."

"Can you see my gown, for instance, its color, or general effect?"

"Yes, at times, but not at all times."

"Would it depend on my state of mind whether you saw it more or less clearly?"

"Not specially that, dear; but on all other conditions."

"Is there anything I can do to make the conditions better for you to be near me?"

"Yes, when your thoughts are with or upon me, so to speak, and when you are in specially rested condition, I come more easily."

The body is the temple of the indwelling spirit, and it has laws which must be obeyed. The body is the result of its range of attraction. It is constantly changing, old atoms being thrown off and new ones attracted, and because of this, one can make his body what he will. It may be gross and heavy, or it may be made light and subtle. As its only use is as the vehicle of spirit, the more light, and agile and subtle it can be made, the better it fulfills that purpose. The factors in making it light and subtle are air, water, exercise, food, and thought. Fresh, pure air is one of heaven's best gifts, and no one is less appreciated. Not merely is it enjoyed by going out of doors, but by keeping every room constantly supplied with pure, fresh, life-giving air. The cold bath on rising in the morning is—in its effects, at least—almost as much a condition of spiritual as it is physical vigor. It may be made far more efficacious by impressing upon the subtle body the thought of the spiritual cleansing and renewal that is typified by the physical cleanliness.

EFFECT OF SYMBOLISM.

To direct the thought thus upon the purification of the spirit is to invest the bath with an intense current of magnetic power. The day is past when it could be considered an absurdity to stamp the impress of thought upon an external act. Let one plead, as he plunges into the cold, sparkling, invigorating water, "Cleanse thou me from secret faults." Let him assert himself as he emerges: "I will arise in newness of life." The bath may thus be invested with fairly magic properties, and one is made anew and made alive, and every nerve responds to a higher range of vibration. It is not necessary to be an athlete in order to take sufficient exercise for the attainment of the finer state of life. The spirit in which one takes his walks in the open air is far more important than is their length, their frequency, or their duration.

The question of food is always important, and the eating or abstaining from meat is not a merely arbitrary distinction, but is based on laws as exact as those of mathematics. Every substance has its own rate of vibration. The vibration of animal life is on a far lower scale than that of human life. It is instinct with crude passions, fears, desires, all relating themselves to a lower plane of existence. When this food, then, is taken into the human body, it sets up its own range of correspondence, and it builds up—not the finer, the subtle and the ethereal body, but the coarser one. Food should really be taken for the subtle rather than for the physical body; it should be of such a quality that the subtle body can appropriate the finer aroma. Food that is pure, light, wholesome, fits the body to respond, like a fine-tuned instrument, to the higher vibrations of spiritual energy. Food that is heavy and coarse unfits it to respond to this range, and this clogs and imprisons the indwelling spirit.

FOOD AND ITS EFFECTS.

Once realizing this principle, man can determine for himself the quality and quantity of the foods that best fit him to express his higher life. There can be no arbitrary rules. Needs and powers vary with the individual, and each must, by test and experiment, determine for himself. The human organism is a chemical laboratory of the most complex variety, and the action and reaction of food depends upon a thousand things, inclusive of both physical and mental, which cannot be decided, in any authoritative way, by one for another. More potent, however, than any one of these, and more potent than all combined, if multiplied a thousandfold, is the factor of thought. "As a man thinketh, so is he." It is literally true. Thought shall determine his form, his bearing, his presence, his atmosphere. Thought shall also determine his power of commanding his life, rather than to accept it at the mere drift and mercy of circumstances.

BE BUOYANT.

If you wish to satisfy,
Be buoyant.
Do not look "prepared to die,"
Be buoyant.
Be equipped to nobly live;
Have a hopeful word to give;
Smile, and laugh where'er you can;
Vitalize the weak and wan;
Be buoyant.

People do not fancy weights;
Be buoyant.
Better that which elevates;
Be buoyant.
Hanging riders are not sought,
Twiners choke out healthy thought,
Modest weakness is passe;
Help illuminate life's way
Be buoyant.

Don't be sinkers on some life
Be buoyant.
Rather float it high o'er strife;
Be buoyant.
Self-sustaining try to be,
Never clinging, aimlessly,
Unto others dear to thee.
Stand self-centered, loving, free;
Be buoyant.

If you would attractive be,
Be buoyant.
Let your spirit sparkle free;
Be buoyant.
Jewels brilliant aids may be;
Silks, and velvet drapery,
Robe you rich as royalty;
Soul has greater potency;
Be buoyant.

Don't be wading in the slime;
Be buoyant.
Don't be always telling crime,
Be buoyant.
All the angels are not dead;
Earth is whirling on ahead;—
Not as straight as one would wish—
Have a bon-bon from my dish?
Be buoyant!

Spiritualism and Science.

In the April number of Harper's Magazine" there is a long article entitled "The Results of Psychic Research," by Dr. James Henry Hyslop, professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy at Columbia University, New York. "Harper's Magazine" is one of the leading monthlies—perhaps the best illustrated of them all—and has a very extensive circulation throughout the world. It is noteworthy, that such a periodical should have ventured to publish an essay on the once universally despised subject of psychic phenomena, an essay, too, in which the writer distinctly avows his belief in spirit return. This indicates how great a change has taken place in public opinion, since Thackeray nearly ruined the "Cornhill Magazine," financially by printing in its pages an account of a seance with the well-known medium, the late Daniel Home. Yet, it cannot be denied, that Spiritualism is viewed with great disfavor in many quarters, Nineteenth century civilization has not entirely eradicated the desire to persecute. At one time those who differed from the ruling powers in matters of opinion, were made to suffer—fine, imprisonment, or death—but in these enlightened days, the penalty is merely loss of livelihood and social ostracism. The New York World says: "It is the opinion that Professor James H. Hyslop has endangered his position as a member of the faculty of Columbia University, by his recent utterances on the subject of Spiritualism. His endorsement of Mrs. Piper, the medium, has created considerable adverse criticism at the University." It is well there are some people in this commercial, selfish money-grubbing age, who have the courage of their opinions, and are not afraid to proclaim the truth undeterred by consequences. Such men as Alfred Russell Wallace, Prof. Sir William Crookes, F. W. H. Myers, Alexander Aksakof, Camille Flammarion, Dr. Hyslop, and numerous others that might be mentioned, have been convinced by the irresistible force of facts that Spiritualistic phenomena do actually take place.

But the public are not convinced of anything by facts, being guided rather by custom and convenience, and are mostly quite unable to rightly estimate the importance of psychic research, which is striving to obtain scientific proof of the existence of the soul. All rational investigators will at once admit that a great amount of chicanery and trickery has been mixed up—not only with Spiritualism—but also with hypnotism as well; still no one would attempt to deny the reality of the phenomena induced by hypnosis, although it has taken official science one hundred years to discover that there is anything worthy of investigation in hypnotism. Fifty years ago Dr. Elliotson, the celebrated surgeon, was ejected from his professorship at University College, London, for believing in—and practicing—such folly as mesmerism was then considered to be, so that psychic researchers need feel no discouragement at being looked upon with contemptuous distrust by those who are ever willing to make their own ignorance the measure of other people's knowledge—perverse beyond all reason—"too blind to have desire to see."

RIPPLES

From "The Golden Gate."

To the Editor:—By experience has come knowledge of one summer in this wonderful state, with garments of fertility, golden-fringed, lying so calmly and cozily on the Ocean of Peace. Although having resided here almost a year in the total, the true points of the compass and my previously fixed idea of latitude and longitude, have not equated. It seems as if my face was set to the West when in reality I am moving East, all my fault of course. Notwithstanding this aberration, I have learned which way to move to find the golden gate, through which is easy passage to that vast wilderness of waters even in billowy tumult. Local points are also becoming familiar.

From my window I can see mountaintops stretching up and up, not quite to the snow-line. The view has lessened in its breadth, for man has stuck in some of his houses quite carelessly; nor is it as gorgeous in all its purple lavishness as the one from Prof. Dawbarn's study window. I can assure your readers, with that outlook it would be impossible for his sensitive soul to refrain from giving out those magnificent "Ego ideas," with which he has recently favored The Progressive Thinker family. The clearness of the beautiful blue sky, the whiteness of the sunshine, the blue-purple haze of the far-off mountains, with all the appropriate filling in, make a picture that must be seen to be understood or appreciated.

If I stay out here long, there is danger of my perperating another book, ger of my perpetrating another book, myself. All that prevents immediate activity is the failure to be wound up to the sticking point of asking Prof. Dawbarn for the loan of that view for thirty days, or such a matter. The seeming impossible sometimes does happen.

While people in other parts of the country have been toasted way up into the hundreds, we have never reached "enduring point" this summer. I like San Francisco climate.

With the constant stream of men and supplies pouring from the East, into the bottomless abyss of China, and the islands of the sea, war's alarms are ever before us. We feel as if we were simply on the outposts. There is a continual service of transportation machinery, and other lines that might indicate prosperity, if some other fellow paid the bill; but when Uncle Samuel simply puts his hand into one pocket for funds to put into another, there is no balance of trade in our favor.

There is a great deal of Chicago vim here, although difference of situation has produced marked variations. More than any other city in the world is San Francisco unde the sway of psychic power.

First and last, many of the present residents started from the Garden City of Lake Michigan. I am writing in the studio of one such, an artist, C. A. Rogers, who still remembers Chicago affectionately, but has wholly given his allegiance to California. The walls of his studio are crowded with both studies and finished pictures of mountain, valley, stream and ocean. They are life-like and true to the high color of which I have spoken. Anyone seeking a choice bit of California scenery for a spare wall-space or a souvenir, could not fail to be suited here. Brother Rogers is an ardent Spiritualist. His work is inspired art with all that is meant thereby.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie, of Boston, opened the season's work, in a large hall, the 5th inst. Rev. Benjamin Fay Mills is still talking weekly. The Hermetic Brotherhood follow the tenet of their Order, working in love, harmony and silence, wherever they can place a helping hand. The spread of their numbers and influence is something astonishing.

W. P. PHELON, M. D.

AFRAID TO DIE?

Afraid to die? Oh, no, not I.
The crawling worm in law sublime
Must lay his worthless body by
And make a change to wings in time;
'Tis Nature's way. I, too, will change
This form and pass, as with a breath,
To higher spheres. 'Tis not so strange,
And when he comes I'll welcome
Death.

Chorus:—
Do what you will around my grave,
Or burn my form the dust to save,
But, oh, weep not nor mourn me there;
Nor give for me an empty prayer,
But say that I fought for the high
And the good, and feared not to die.

Afraid to die? Afraid to die?
The birds that sing from leafy bough,
Or sail far up against the sky,
Teach me to call this fleeting now
A moment's or a second's time
In this eternal whirl of things,
And I will seek another clime,
When I can sail on spirit wings.

Chorus:—
Ah, me; I do not care to live
Forever where I cannot give
This soul its highest liberty
To all I am and aim to be.
I know that some day I must go;
When that times comes—ah, be it so.

Why should I dread to close my eyes
In sleep and dream myself awake
On fairer shore, where I can rise
And from my very spirit shake
The load that all past years held down
The angel part, the spirit I,
When I would rise and gain the crown
Of right? Oh, this is not to die!

Chorus:—
It is to live, to rise and be
Whate'er is waiting there for me;
To spread my soul beyond confine,
And claim and own whate'er is mine.
I would not die before my time
But Death to me is so sublime.

WHAT CLAY SAYS.

There Are No Disembodied Spirits.

A COMMUNICATION WRITTEN INDEPENDENTLY IN THE PRESENCE OF OSCAR WARD, THE MEDIUM, AT NEW CANTON, ILL.

That is, all spirits have bodies, all spirits are material; for I hold that what is not matter, nor a property of matter is not anything. A spirit is not a nonentity; and that it has a real body, though not of the flesh and blood sort, has been the constantly iterated and reiterated teaching of spirits. Whenever spirits have appeared in any age of the world, they have always appeared in bodies; but does it not follow that spirits are matter, and that all bodies are material? That depends entirely upon the definition given to the terms matter and material. I give you one definition of matter: That which is visible and tangible. This is doubtless the common or ordinary conception of matter, namely, that which can be seen and felt by the external senses of sight and touch. According to this limited definition spirits are not matter, neither are spiritual bodies, nor any of the invisible and intangible elements and forces of the universe which are known to exist all about us. In fact every form of matter known, may, by chemical and mechanical processes, be made invisible and intangible, and in that sense to become no matter—that is, immaterial; yet by no means does it become annihilated by any such process. I also give the definition, elementary substances, perceptible by any of the senses. This enlarges the conception somewhat, but yet if merely the external senses of sight, hearing, touch, and smell are meant, the term matter would still not include either spiritual bodies, or even many of the impalpable forms into which matter may be converted, and which are not perceptible to these senses. I add this comprehensive definition of matter, in a more general and philosophic sense: The substance of which all bodies are composed; the substratum of sensible qualities, though the parts composing the substratum may not be visible or tangible. This conception of matter which is that now becoming prevalent among scientific and philosophic minds, takes it out of the exclusive realm of the external senses, and makes it the substance of which all bodies are constituted. Substance (from sub, under, and stans, standing) is that external reality which stands under the visible and tangible forms of things, and in its infinite modifications, changes and activities, produces the endless variety of those forms which are their qualities. (Substratum is that which lies or spreads under, and means substantially the same as substance.) This larger definition of matter, as every one can see, makes it an altogether different thing from the former crude and limited notion; and we add to it the conception as some do, and as seems unavoidable, that all the intelligence which we see active in the universe are inherent in this "substance," but manifested in different degrees in its varied forms, then we have the idea of spirit, which is the underlying, all-pervading source or cause of all the phenomena of the visible world. According to this definition matter and spirit are from and of the one universal and external substance or rather, as matter in its ephemeral forms, is but a modification of spirit, which is the one eternal reality. In its crude and more inert state, it has less of activity, life, intelligence of spirit; in its finer, more spiritualized condition, it has more and more of the qualities as it approximates to pure spirit. Whether matter ever existed or can exist wholly apart from spirit, or spirit wholly free from matter, in any degree of refinement, it may not be safe to affirm, since we know of them only as conjoined. We can separate them only in thought, not in reality. To say, then, that spirit is material, and that when it is not matter it is not anything, is evidently a mistake if by matter is meant that only which is perceptible by the (external) sense. But if the meaning of the word matter be enlarged to include the underlying substance of all things, then it is equivalent to spirit. By a spirit is of course ordinarily meant an individualized, finite intelligent being, not robed in flesh. If this has once been clothed in a body of flesh and has laid this aside, it is correct in one sense to call him a disembodied spirit, but yet the term is inexact, since it may be taken to imply that he is without a body of any sort. This no spirit has ever claimed.

DANGER SIGNALS.

"God in the Constitution."

I borrowed a Progressive Thinker of Dr. O'Dell, and do not intend to return it! The first article that engaged my attention was the "God—Constitution," by "Patriot" and E. M. Macdonald. Everybody should read it, and re-read it, and study the lessons it presents until enthusiasm is at white heat to meet and vanquish this fanatical folly, before it is too late.

"Oh, there is no danger. No sectarian God can ever be foisted in the Federal Constitution, with all the intelligence, and free discussion, and progressive liberalism that abounds in our land." This is the gist of the general expression wherever an "Alarmist" signals danger. I hope it is sound reasoning. It looks that way from a surface view. But no one is qualified to dispute the strong tendency that way, or to show by infallible proofs that it is impossible. The movement may rest for awhile, but it is not dead. It has many able and determined advocates, who doubtless see nothing but promise and blessings in the movement. They are urged on by a fanatical zeal, which unfortunately does not inspire its opponents. Apathy loses many worthy enterprises; and zeal and persistence win many unworthy victories. There is a strong undercurrent working for the amendment, and the great body of American patriots have the myopy of Brother Boddy. It is not probable that one in ten sees the point as it is shown in the quoted words of the advocates, and Dr. McAllister's reply to the chairman of the committee. But thousands will not see the danger even in that; and it is necessary to keep it before the people.

EXPOSE THE PIOUS FRAUD

this revolutionary effort is trying to perpetrate against the government and the liberties of the people. Not even the most pronounced orthodox sect is safe, if this nefarious scheme should succeed; for the Bible is to be taken as the supreme authority in civil affairs. Each contending sect finds a different meaning for the Bible. By it one sect renders murder for murder—capital punishment. Another would "resist not evil." One would compel all to worship the first day of the week. Another the seventh. One would insist that "the word of God" inhibits woman from any part in church government, or in the direction of civil affairs; while another finds warrant in scripture for a measure of freedom in both. One sect would allow no divorces, and but one marriage for a life time; another, from the same Bible, justifies plurality of wives. The Mormons predicate authority for polygamy on the Bible, and are abundantly justified by both precept and example.

It is evident that such a recognition carried to its legitimate ultimatum would involve all religions in a Kilkenny cat tangle and fight, and religious and civil liberty would die together; or rise to a rational acceptance of a secular government, perhaps after drenching the soil in blood.

It is not the Freethinkers, Spiritualists, Jews, Quakers, Adventists and Unitarians alone that would suffer from the effects of such stupid enactment; but everybody who lives under this government, which without a recognized God in its Magna Charta, or the Bible as the supreme law, or a Pope as the vicegerent of God on earth, has arisen to the most exalted, and commanding position ever held by any nation of the earth.

THERE MAY BE DANGER,

Surely there is if we ignore the secret scheming of these wily fanatics and fail to counteract their plots by vigorous protests and thorough exposure of their plans.

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Let us not forget the lessons of history.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

WHAT LOVE IS.

Love is the center and circumference;
The cause and aim of all things—'tis the key
To joy and sorrow, and the recompense
For all the ills that have been, or may be.

Love is as bitter as the dregs of sin,
As sweet as clover-honey in its cell;
Love is the password whereby souls get in
To heaven—the gate that leads, sometimes, to hell.

Love is the crown that glorifies; the curse
That brands and burdens; it is life and death;
It is the great law of the universe;
And nothing can exist without its breath.

Love is the impulse which directs the world,
And all things know it and obey its power.
Man, in the maelstrom of his passions whirled;
The bee that takes the pollen to the flower.

The earth, uplifting her bare, pulsing breast
To fervent kisses of the amorous sun—
Each but obeys creative Love's behest,
Which everywhere instinctively is done.

Love is the only thing that pays for birth,
Or make death welcome. Oh, dear God above
This beautiful but sad, perplexing earth,
Pity the hearts that know—or know not—Love!

ETERNAL RELATIONSHIPS.

Not One Only, but Many Mates In the Grand Cycles of Eternity.

Over and over again, in Spiritualistic literature, we find cropping out the assertion that every soul born into physical existence has somewhere a "counterpart" or "soul-mate," and that, although the two may never meet in earth life, somewhere in spirit life they will be united, and that this union will continue through all eternity.

When or where this doctrine originated I do not know, but it seems to have found in Spiritualism a congenial soil, to have struck its roots deep, and to flourish apace.

Although a question of no vast importance, and so far as the phase relative to eternal life is concerned, one of which we know and can know nothing of a surety, still I should like to say something on the other side, and to present some thoughts from Emerson, who has, in my opinion, a wider conception of spiritual and eternal relationships than the average writer or thinker.

In the first place, where is the warrant for the assertion that every soul has somewhere a "mate" or "eternal counterpart," and must be united with this other half before it can attain perfection? The soul is a unit. It is not the half of anything, but a whole in and of itself, and capable of attaining its own perfection. "The soul was not twin born," says Emerson, "but the only begotten."

Our Spiritualist friends scoff at the orthodox doctrine of the trinity, of the three in one and one in three, and have themselves brought forward a similar doctrine, a doctrine of duality, of two in one and one in two. Oh consistency, thou art a jewel!

Again, this doctrine of soul-mates implies deliberate design, special intention on the part of a creating power. Trace this theory down, and at the bottom of it you will find "special providence." You cannot find anything else. Nothing else is capable of thus providing a particular mate for each particular soul. Natural law will never do it. You will have to go behind that for such results as these, the special fitting and preparation of each and every soul to become the mate of some other, of that particular one and none other.

That special form of love which unites man and woman in the marriage relation has its place and does its work on the earth plane. It is right and proper in its place, and without doubt plays a necessary part in the grand work of evolution, but when it is asserted that this essentially narrow and exclusive sentiment is to be perpetuated through all eternity, I cannot resist the impulse to send in a protest.

Sex is a characteristic of physical life. The spirit knows it not. We have been told again and again, by some of the highest intelligences that have been able to communicate with us from beyond the veil, that in the higher spheres of spirit life, sex has no existence. Why should it have? Already, in the highest types of men and women, the attribute of sex begins to fade out. Think of the loftiest soul you know, and you will find upon analysis that you do not think of it as a man or a woman, as the case may be, but only as a soul, a mind, a spirit. But the man or woman who can produce such an impression as this must be of the highest type, and possessed of spiritual attributes that overshadow mere personality.

All of this mating and pairing belongs to the earth plane, and must inevitably be left behind in the process of higher unfoldment. In the lower spheres of spirit life there may be something analogous to the marriage relation here, and those who have missed that experience on earth, and cannot progress until they have had it, may find it there. But this is not saying that they will not eventually outgrow it and pass on to something higher.

The fatal element in this one to one relation is its exclusiveness. It is doomed to perish by reason of this very fact. "What is excellent, as God lives, is permanent." Whatever is truly of the soul will endure, but the limitations that are not of the soul must fall away. All things tend toward the universal, and love is no exception to the rule. The sense of exclusive possession and ownership, the desire to appropriate and monopolize, these are no part of real love. They belong to the lower, selfish, animal love from which the higher has been evolved, and which in some measure still clings to it. This exclusiveness is a necessity here; there could be no family life without it. On this point I wish to be understood. But it is a mistake to suppose that limitations which the present life requires are to be perpetuated throughout eternity.

Always we are mistaking the transient and the temporal for the unchangeable and the eternal. In our theory of things we fail to take into consideration one mighty factor, namely, soul growth. "Evermore it is the order of nature to grow, and every soul is by this intrinsic necessity, quitting its whole system of things, its friends and home and laws and faith, as the shellfish crawls out of its beautiful but stony case, because it no longer admits of its growth, and slowly forms a new house." "The things we now esteem fixed shall one by one detach themselves like ripe fruit, from our experience and fall. Nothing is secure but life, transition, the emerging spirit. No love can be bound by oath or covenant to secure it against a higher love. No truth so sublime that it may not be trivial to-morrow in the light of new thoughts." And again the same author says: "By the necessity of our constitution, things are ever grouping themselves according to higher and more interior laws. Neighborhood, size, numbers, habits, persons, lose by degrees their power over us. Cause and effect, real affinities, the longing for harmony between the soul and the circumstance, the high, progressive, idealizing instinct, these predominate later, and ever the step backward from the higher to the lower relations is impossible."

After much thinking, I have come to the conclusion that nothing in all this universe will prove of permanent value and lasting benefit to us, save those things which can be shared one with another. Those things, whatever they may be, upon which we put the stamp of "my" and "mine," are transient in their influence and effect upon us, temporary in the benefits which they confer. They have their place and do their work in the soul's unfoldment, then pass forever away. Truth, Beauty, Love—these are the private property of none, and subject to no monopoly. They are universal in their nature and must be universally owned and shared. They become of lasting value only when so recognized. Forever they slip from the grasp of him who seeks to appropriate and monopolize.

And not only does the universal demand recognition by the soul, but the soul itself demands the universal. "The universe is the bride of the soul," says Emerson. The soul will never remain satisfied with a part; it seeks the whole. It demands perfection, and will never rest satisfied with anything less nor anything else. It is foolish to think we can find in one human soul that which will forever satisfy all demands of the spirit. Perfection, the rounded and full development of all lofty and beautiful attributes, is not to be found in any one soul. In many souls we find the attributes which we look for in vain in one. No one soul, however highly developed, can stand to us as the embodiment of all spiritual beauty and perfection. Always there are limitations. Always we are conscious of more or less of disappointment.

I venture the assertion that whoever finds in one human soul that degree of perfection which enables it to stand to him for the whole world, which absorbs him and blinds him to the existence of others, is himself in an undeveloped condition, and one from which he will sooner or later evolve.

All this is not saying that there are no near and dear companionships, no strong and deep attachments, in the higher spirit realm. I believe there are, but they are not of the narrow, exclusive, one-to-one variety. Like Emerson, "I please my imagination more with a circle of godlike men and women, variously related to each other, and between whom subsists a lofty intelligence."

We can have but little conception of what love means to these highly unfolded souls, love that is higher, purer, less selfish, broader in its range and sympathies than anything we here may know. Nature is not so poor that in all the realm of spirit, each soul can find but one other soul which it can love or by which it can be fully recognized and appreciated. If it is so sweet and blessed a thing to be recognized and appreciated by one soul, why not equally so by another and another, and still another? Why set any limits? Love, understanding, appreciation, are not rendered greater, nor productive of more of happiness when given or received by one alone.

Let it not be thought that I am here advocating the abominable doctrine known as "free love." Anything but that! I am speaking only of that love which exists beyond the confines of this life, where selfishness is unknown, and where the last trace of animalism has been refined away. It does not belong to this life, and if it makes its appearance here, must oftentimes be denied expression. The world would never understand it.

Nothing will be lost in this transformation of the lower into the higher. Whatever is truly of the soul, whatever is purely spiritual, will endure; whatever is not must pass away. All selfishness, all jealousy, all fear of rivalry, all desire of exclusive possession and ownership, must pass. The love that can stand this test will endure. All else must perish. These other things are no part of real love, but the necessary attendants of an undeveloped state. They will drop away in the course of the soul's higher unfoldment.

You cannot bear that thought, you who rejoice in the thought that another heart is all yours, your very own, for time and eternity. But fear not. The change will come so gradually that you will not realize there is a change. Slowly but surely the lower, selfish, earthly passion will become transformed into the higher, purer, diviner love—the love that gives all and asks nothing; that seeks no one-to-one relationship; that dreads no rival; that claims no proprietary right; that seeks neither to possess nor monopolize; that is glad if some return be given, but happy too without it—the love that is the sign manual of angelhood; that finds its highest happiness in helpfulness, in service; that can live on, if need be, without recognition and without appreciation, through time and separation, through absence and forgetfulness, through forty years of death.

And the soul capable of such love as this is not to be narrowed and restricted. It has grown too great for that. That which was once lavished upon a single object will now go out to many, must go out to all of its own spiritual kindred who are sufficiently developed perfectionward to call it forth. Love in its highest form is closely akin to worship, and can be stirred into life only by high and noble attributes in other souls.

The soul has not one mate, but many, a band of companions, a circle of friends that must ever grow wider as its capacity for loving increases, as it becomes more and more open to the perception of lofty attributes in other minds and characters. We in our present state cannot predict the "grandeurs possible to the soul" in its higher unfoldment. We are like the sheathed insect, still in its narrow, chrysalis shell, striving to picture to itself the life of the emancipated butterfly.

The above quotations are all from Emerson, and he now has the last word for us on this subject:

"Thus are we put in training for a love that knows neither age nor sex, nor person, nor partiality, but which seeketh virtue and wisdom everywhere to the end of increasing virtue and wisdom. There are moments when the affections rule and absorb the man, and make his happiness dependent upon a person or persons. But in health the mind is presently seen again—its overarching vault bright with galaxies of immutable lights, and the warm loves and fears that swept over us as clouds, must lose their finite character and blend with God, to attain their own perfection. But we need not fear that we can lose anything by the progress of the soul. The soul may be trusted to the end. That which is so beautiful and attractive as these relations, must be succeeded and supplanted only by that which is more beautiful, and so on forever."

A Drunkard and His Child.

"Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

There was one "little child" whose soul passed out from under the Twenty-third street viaduct last Friday, here in Denver, writes Hal Reid in the Denver Times, who was suffered to come unto Him, the gentle, loving Savior. You who sit in your luxurious homes may wonder how we learn of these things, and the answer is, by searching among the lowly, where squalor is and the wolf is constantly at the door.

"Maggie" was her name; I'll not tell you the other one, for the father promised me to reform, and I am waiting to see if he means it.

He has been a drunkard for thirty years, and this story is from his own lips. He had neglected his wife, beaten her, abused her, starved her and the "little one," and one day she was so tired of life, so weary of "hoping against hope" that she folded her hands and "went over." Maggie was left to him, but after he had seen his wife buried in the plain pine box, he remembered the days when he had courted her and his conscience would not let him alone; her thin dead face kept coming up before him, and he drank worse than ever to drown it all out.

Last Thursday he came home to the barren room, where little Maggie lay sick unto death, and without a crust of bread—drunk, mean, nasty drunk, without pity, without mercy, without one iota of humanity within his besodden being. Maggie pleaded:

"Don't drink any more, papa; don't please, for your own sake, for poor dead mother's sake—for God's sake."

He did not notice the flush on her cheek; he did not notice the thin blue lines around the childish mouth; he did not know that the dread reaper was standing at the side of the neglected bed. He was too drunk. The devil was in him. He felt in his pocket for a piece of chalk, "billiard cue" chalk which he had picked up in the last saloon. She had mentioned God. How dared she do that—the one and only being he was afraid of; the one he must one day answer to. So he went to the blackened wall at the side of her bed and wrote:

"God is nowhere."

And, pointing to it with a coarse laugh, he walked out of the room and into the nearest saloon.

It was Friday morning when he returned, and Maggie lay there dead, the piece of chalk in her hand. He turned to the wall and could see where the fever-stricken little hand had rubbed out the "w" of where and had moved it over so that his scrawl now read:

"God is now here."

He could have heard the gentle whirr of angels' wings if he had but listened then.

He has said he will reform. I am going to try to help him, and I hope God will, too.

MODERN SPIRITUALISM

is the new wine which will be more sought after when it has become older and has acquired something of the old flavor. As a prophet is thought nothing of in his own day, even so may it be said of Modern Spiritualism. A little over half a century has passed, and it has already become almost, if not quite, respectable. It is the little leaven that is leavening the lump; it has converts in all classes of society, from the prince to the peasant; it has devoted supporters amongst every sect and denomination. There are even those in the churches who would gladly take it and label it "divine," rather than 'diabolical.' Its numbers are legion, and must not be gauged by the number of labelled societies, which are but as ripples on the surface. It is, in fact, an army of stragglers' without organization. Behind it, however, there is the great cloud of witnesses, a well organized and invincible army, whose numbers are as the sand on the seashore.

Self-deluded enthusiasts in the past, possibly sincere, but, nevertheless, grossly mistaken, without perhaps knowing it, and therefore grossly ignorant, took it for granted that that fragment of religious literature called the Bible, was the last will and testament of a departed God. Though a universal experience corroborates and confirms the indubitable fact that books are the productions of mortals, yet it sufficed for those fanatics to find a passage in the Jewish records condemning what they thought to be witchcraft. Let us hope they were as sincere as they were earnest in their devilish and diabolical efforts to quench the spirit which still manifests its presence and power in this age.

To quench the spirit it would be necessary to wipe out the whole human race, because, if the fact of spirit communion proves anything, it proves that man is now, while in the flesh, a spiritual being; and, therefore, spirit communion is daily and hourly carried on between spirits in the body.

Spiritualism, therefore, to begin with, is only an extension of what is perfectly natural there under present conditions. Spiritualism proves that it is quite possible for man here, according to laws little understood at present, to converse with man after he has "shuffled off the mortal coil." The miraculous and supernatural are wholly dispensed with, and thus is all in nature and in harmony therewith. To talk of anything outside nature is as puerile as to talk of something existing outside the boundless universe. God, and man, and all things that are, or can be, must be in nature. To assume the (unthinkable) otherwise is to live immured within a concentric circle, or a series of such circles, and declare there is nothing beyond. This is only to limit God and nature; it is, in fact, something like placing one's self in the position of the snail curled up within its shell, the interior dome of which, it might be supposed to believe, surrounded all creation.

DR. HENRY SLADE.

Slade took an accordion, and, opening it to show me that it was an ordinary instrument, held it down in one hand by the bellows end, his left arm resting on the table, when the instrument began to sound, and an exquisite melody was played in very artistic style. I had hitherto regarded an accordion as a musical toy, but I found there was music to be got out of this humble instrument after all. Mr. Slade then stood up, and, holding the instrument as before, by the bellows end, stretched out his arm, and lo! the same melody was heard and the instrument was seen going to and fro in a horizontal direction. The accordion was then given to me to hold. Seated in my chair, I held it by the bellows end in my right hand, the farthest from Slade, and I soon found it being pulled, and heard sounds. It was then pulled so forcibly that I got up and held it by both hands in order to retain it. Louder sounds were then heard, but no tune was played. I never touched the keys.

But now came the most wonderful of these extraordinary proceedings. I was sitting quietly in my seat by the table when I noticed touches on my feet, then on my knees, and then my coat became unbuttoned. I was on the point of looking down to see what was doing it, when up came a hand, right in front of my face. It was a middle-sized hand with rather fat fingers and of pinkish hue. Dr. A. R. Wallace testifies to a similar experience with Slade in London. I may further add, in confirmation of my own statement, that four first-class German scientists testify to similar experiences at Leipzig University, which are recorded in "Transcendental Physics,' by one of them, Professor Zollner, and when Slade was in Berlin, at the request of his influential patrons, Bellachini, the court conjurer, was requested to investigate the matter. He did so, and said he could not explain it—it was "beyond the resources of his art."

ANIMISM—OR SPIRITISM?

After many years of patient investigation, and witnessing phenomena of nearly every kind, materialism included, I am so confirmed in my belief in Spiritualism that nothing will ever move my confidence in its general theories. Yet I have recently come to a knowledge of experiments which go to show that much we have attributed to the agency of disembodied human spirits would more correctly be referable to living human power. To save space, I will leave your readers to draw their own conclusions from a statement of facts.

A man whom I have known for some months, who is naturally skeptical, was drawn within the range of Spiritualistic influences, and finding the theological views thus brought under his notice to be congenial, he sought an opportunity of joining a private circle. In connection therewith clairvoyance was apparently developed in three or four of the sitters, more especially so as regarded two young children whose parents occupy the house where the weekly sittings are held. My friend, earlier in life, had studied and successfully practiced "electro-biology'—or, as we now call it, hypnotism—and he very quickly decided in his own mind that the supposed clairvoyance was the result of conscious or unconscious suggestion on the part of the sitters. The major portion of the circle were anxious to establish themselves in their Spiritualistic belief, and they "with one accord scouted the idea that any but unseen spirits were responsible for what was seen and described. By and bye the new-comer tried his own power over the mediums, and found, as he expected, that he could make them see any image or vision he chose to conjure up. When he stated the result of his experiments, there was a good deal of indignation, and it was intimated that he was "unspiritual," and had better withdraw from the circle. He of course withdrew, and kept away. On the night of the following weekly sitting, being at home—some half-a-mile away—he secluded himself, drew a rough outline of the conventional devil, with horns and tail, etc., placed it in his waistcoat pocket, and set himself to concentrate his mind and transfer the picture to the circle from which he had been excluded. At that very time (as it was afterwards acknowledged), one of the child clairvoyants cried out, 'Dada, there's the devil on the table!' The father was much shocked, and tried to drive out the notion, but both children persisted in declaring that Satan was outlined before them, and another of the mediums, not a child, confirmed what they said. The consternation occasioned by this experiment may be guessed.

On the night of the sitting in the next week my friend went in for further test work. At the time when the sitting began, he established himself upon a hill near his residence, and when he judged that the opening prayer would have ended, he caused a vision of a terrible nature to fall upon the circle. It was seen by all, and so frightened them that they rushed from the house in a body, overturning chairs, etc., in their haste to get away. Four fierce-looking beings had apparently descended from the ceiling, bearing naked swords in their hands, and their aspect was so frightful and malignant that all the sitters, having lost their self-control, and for the nonce their "wits," got away; and this took place while they were singing, to solemn strains, "Holy! holy! holy!"

Now, I do not approve of what my friend did; it was unwarranted. But, does it not suggest that we Spiritualists may often unknowingly confound the results of Animism and Spiritism?

HARBINGER OF LIGHT, MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

TELEPATHY OR APPARITION.

In the Annales des Sciences Psychiques (Paris) it is stated that a certain M. Lacoste, while suffering from a very severe attack of typhoid fever, complicated with delirium, manifested on different occasions, some curious phenomena of telepathy (so-called) and lucidity; predicting or perceiving, clairvoyantly, various facts concerning his friends or acquaintances, which were invariably verified. We will mention in detail a single fact in relation to a young nurse girl who had been in his service and had been attacked with typhoid fever four days before himself; namely, on the 14th of December, 1898. They had her removed to the hospital in Toulon, where M. Lacoste resided, during the night of the 4th of January, 1899. In his delirium, M. Lacoste was constantly interested in that young person, and when he inquired about her of his wife, who was the only one he recognized, she said that she was going on well. On the morning of the 6th of January, he cried out, on waking abruptly, and still somewhat disordered in mind, "They have deceived me. I know that Katie is dead. I have seen her clothed in white and he described the garments she was buried in. I asked her how she died, and she replied that at present she was quite well; and that I should presently recover. Then she leaned over me and kissed my forehead." When M. Lacoste became convalescent, they concealed from him the death of Katie, so as to spare his emotions; and it was not until the 10th of April that he learned what had actually happened.

In a case of this kind, as it appears to us, telepathy offers no rational explanation of the phenomenon. Katie's spirit presented herself to M. Lacoste, at the moment of her departure, and was immediately recognized by his inner vision. Voila tout!

A TRAGIC DREAM.

Our correspondent in Hungary, writes the editor of the Echo du Merveilleux (Paris) informs us that a considerable sensation has been excited at Groswardein, by a mysterious fact, of which the details are these. A few days ago, a traveling hawker, named Marcus Rosenberg, set out to visit the various villages in the neighborhood. The night following his departure, his wife had a strange dream. She saw her husband attacked in a forest near Groswardein, clubbed and stripped of his valuables. After he had been put to death, she saw him burnt by the malefactors. Terrified by her dream, she awoke, sprang out of bed, called up her children, and told them of the calamity which had befallen their father.

On the morrow she set out for the forest, and was not long before she found her husband's walking stick, as also some bones almost completely calcined. She is therefore convinced that her dream is true. The gendarmie, apprised of the fact, have scoured the wood, and organized a search throughout the district, but they have nowhere found any trace of the missing man.

In this case, also, the enfranchised spirit of Marcus Rosenberg, hastened to his wife and succeeded in impressing her mind with the circumstances. Something similar happened in England about 70 or 80 years ago, when "the tragedy of the Red Barn" was the theme of universal conversation and was dramatised on the London stage. The facts were these: A farmer's wife in Suffolk, dreamt one night that her daughter Maria, who was missing, came to her and informed her that she had been murdered, and that her body would be found buried under the floor of what was locally known as the Red Barn. The dream was so vivid, that Mrs. Martin could not rest until she had prevailed upon her husband to take up the flooring at the spot indicated by her daughter's spirit. The corpse was found there; and if I remember rightly, the crime was confessed by a man named Corder, who had been the girl's sweetheart, and he was hanged for the murder.

FOR a moment stop and consider. The Progressive Thinker is the one original dollar Spiritualist paper. It introduced a new era in the ranks of Spiritualism. Its success financially has been all that could be desired. Notwithstanding the rise in the price of print paper, it has still maintained its status as the only one dollar Spiritualist paper. Not only that, but it introduced the Divine Plan in its business with its subscribers—a portion of the profits of the office returning to them. Just think of the Seven Premium Books being sent out to our subscribers for $2.35. After paying the postage of these seven books, and the expense of mailing them, all that we have left is $1.50. You can readily see that we are furnishing them for less, by far, than the actual cost to us. We do this work in accordance with The Divine Plan, in order to assist in forming the nucleus of a library in every Spiritualist home. Read carefully our premium list, and you will certainly want to become a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker, if not so already, and obtain the books we announce.

The Progressive Thinker one year and the seven premium books.	$ 3.35

These seven books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art will be furnished to our subscribers alone for $2.35. But bear in mind that in order to secure these SEVEN valuable premium books for $2.35, the order must be accompanied with a year's subscription for The Progressive Thinker. The paper one year, $1.00; the seven books, $2.35. Total, $3.35.

The aggregate price of these seven books to the trade is $10.75. In order to assist in forming a Spiritual and Occult Library in every Spiritualist's home, these seven valuable books are furnished to our subscribers for $2.35, which is less by far than their actual cost. The authors make no charge for the vast amount of labor bestowed on these works, and which extended over many years. The publisher receives not a single cent for the great expense he was to, hundreds of dollars being paid out in putting them in type, and electrotyping the pages, and making them ready for the printer. That is why you are getting these intensely interesting books for almost nothing. We are only carrying out the Divine Plan, inaugurated only by The Progressive Thinker. There are thousands of Spiritualists who take no Spiritualist paper, and this inducement is offered, in order that they may commence forming at once a Spiritual and Occult Library, and thus keep in line with the advancing procession. The postage on the above books and expense of mailing is about 85 cents, hence you are almost receiving them as an absolute gift.

By taking 85 cents from $2.35, you will find that all we have left us for those seven books is only $1.50.

Postmasters.

We have been swindled out of a large amount of money by postmasters, who knowing a person desires The Progressive Thinker, sends his money, deducting a large commission. The Progressive Thinker is one dollar per year. The great rise in print paper renders it utterly impossible for us to give any commission to news agents or postmasters.

Bear in mind when making a remittance, that only one book, the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3, is furnished for 25 cents. You must not substitute any other of the premium books for that one.

LIGHT ON THEOSOPHY.

Ancient Wisdom Religion Discussed.

AIMS TO BE TOLERANT—CLAIMS TO EXPLAIN MOST OF THE MYSTERIES OF LIFE—FINDS SPIRITUALITY IN ALL KINDS OF WORSHIP—EXPOSITION OF ITS TENETS BY O. C. SPEER.

If anything could seem absurd to the wise man, the ancient wisdom religion would suffer in the hands of the thoughtful after perusing an article entitled "Theosophy, Old and New," by Professor Washburn Hopkins of Yale college. In a recent number of the New York Independent.

Nothing that engages the attention of even a few earnest people can be amusing to the student of science, however far as he may be removed from a condition of familiarity with it. The fundamental tenet of literary criticism, that every writing shall be interpreted in the spirit in which it is written, is too well known to need repetition. The same rule applies primarily to the opinions of others in science, religion, or whatever may be the topic under discussion. Theosophy can be amusing only to the superficial; for, back of every man's conscience, stands the Almighty, and from the conception of God in the universe held by the Hottentot of mid-Africa to the most exalted conception experienced in the sanctuary or the cloister, it is God that speaks through a man's religion, however thick the veil thrown over his expression of it.

Theosophy teaches us to be tolerant even of intolerance, and to respect the state of progress at which the intolerant man, as well as he who ridicules, has arrived. Theosophy, as a science, asks only as much respectful attention as the student in the laboratory would give to the enunciation of a well-known chemical law—i, e., just enough gentlemanly courtesy to come and make the experiment.

EXPLAINS LIFE'S MYSTERIES.

Theosophy, as a religion, claims to explain more of the mysteries of life than any other belief presented so far to the human race. Theosophy is not psychism, nor is it the peculiar form of yoga with which Professor Hopkins seemed to be familiar. Theosophy is not an attempt to destroy any religion that a man already has, so that no timid soul need cry out, "They have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid him." But theosophy is an attempt to find the spirituality in every form of religion, and to eradicate the materialism or explain the spirituality back of the materialism that has crept into them through the too close following of the letter of the law.

Christ came for the very purpose of interpreting the spirit of the older law, "that all might be fulfilled." Moses said, "Thou shalt not kill." Christ said, "Forgive your enemies, bless them that curse you, and pray for them that despitefully use you." Also, "Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more." The Elder Brother could not condemn the erring sister. The One who had reached the perfection of the Father could not condemn the child at the other end of the journey.

PERFECTION IS THE GOAL.

Theosophy says, Practice the truth that thy brother is thyself. Theosophy says, Christ was born in the manger to show that he must be born in the hearts of even the least of us, just as he was born in the heart of the Father, and he said: "Be ye, therefore, perfect, even as my Father is perfect," and the teaching is not that the Christ is an ideal, a Savior without us, but an ideal that we must become—the Savior within—the mystery of God in the flesh.

It takes up such problems as why one is born in the palace and another in the hovel, and explains them by Karma, which is, briefly, the law of cause and effect. Karma shows how we have free will under the law to choose to do well or ill, and the law is, that "as a man soweth, so shall he reap." God does not put him in the hovel, or make him to be born blind, or lame, or a thief, but in other lives he has pursued such a course that only by the life of the blind or the cripple or the thief can give expression to his activities and give him the chance of further unfoldment and the working out of the law of his destiny.

Every man is destined to a union with the Father such as Christ prayed for. Science says: All nature is for the perfecting of a type. Drummond said that perfect type was the "mother." Christ said: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as my Father in heaven is perfect." Theosophy climbs the whole ladder, and says: The life which is veiled in the atom of the mineral evolves by experience through the various stages of the plant and the animal till, being a resultant of all these experiences, no form is complete enough to express it but the human form.

If the perfection of the type is to be the end of it all, shall a Shakspeare, a Spenser, a Bunyan, or a Whitfield be the goal? Theosophy comes to the rescue and holds that God, nature, and man are not separate, but are so interrelated that by the power of God that worketh within man "to will and to do," man unites with Himself and recognizes himself as a center of consciousness within the absolute.

MYSTERY IN ALL RELIGIONS.

Do not fear that because the vocabulary of a religion differs on account of language that religion is a stranger to any people. There is no unknown God except to the man, and he may be found under many skies, who denies the God in his own heart.

In Theosophy there is not the peculiar anomaly of God and a power prevailing against him, working not for righteousness but against it, but it says there is always harmony within the law. All are going forward to the ultimate goal, however slight their experience may be and however far they may choose to wander, and how many bitter lessons they may have to learn ere they will learn the difference between being in the image and being the likeness of the Father.

In spite of the learning of the doctors, there has never yet been a religion promulgated upon the earth which did not have an esoteric side. Buddha's teachings included. One need only to refer to the familiar example of Jesus and the parables with which he taught the multitudes and his teachings to his disciples. A subject is esoteric to those who cannot understand it in all its bearings. Proclaim a great truth as Moses did when he said, "Thou shalt not kill." No one interpreted it beyond the letter till Christ came and said, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

For hundreds of years the esoteric truth was covered by the letter of the law. To some the truth will be a "stumbling block," to some "foolishness," and some may "turn and rend" the giver, but a few will recognize in it the "power and wisdom of God." They are far enough along on the journey to interpret it. Whenever you find a religion that has no heights or depths to which the carnal mind cannot reach, I will show you a religion that is only a shell in which the spirit of life has died and which is described so aptly in that message to the church of the Laodiceans, "I would thou wert either cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold not hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth."

And this is the goal—divine union. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne."—Oliver C. Speer in Chicago Inter Ocean.

THE GHOST.

Some Remarkable Manifestations.

STRANGE STORY THAT COMES FROM PENNSYLVANIA WITH THE INDORSEMENT OF NUMEROUS WITNESSES.

Connellsville, Pa.

This town has no congregation of Spiritualists. There does not flourish here any coterie of palm readers, seance enthusiasts or miracle manufacturers.

But just now the whole town has a decided interest in a real, live spook story. The ghostly visitor has come not only once, but several times, and unlike most ghosts it has come when not only one man or woman was present, but has come when no less than eight people have seen it, touched it and talked to it.

The scene of the ghostly visit is in one of the oldest houses in Fayette county, and one of the most noted. On Main street, this place, is what was for a century the Page House. It is a primitive-looking stone mansion house, with curious pyramidal chimneys. When the house was erected Connelsville was only an eight-year-old infant in the heart of the Allegheny Mountains. There are many tales of adventure and romance coupled with the old hostelry.

Some old citizens state that the guests in those days here did not register, and this removes one of the connecting links between the ghost and the cause of the ghost's return to the premises. For one night, when a fierce mountain storm was raging, to the hotel came a man and a woman, drenched with rain, seeking lodging for the night. At this time Samuel Page, the original proprietor of the house, was the landlord. The weary comers were sheltered. In the morning there was a revelation.

The woman and man had disappeared in the night!

In their room they had left not a sign of their going. Nothing was ever heard again of the woman.

Out in the rear court of the hotel was found the dead body of the man, stabbed. All evidences of identity had been removed from the pockets of the dead man, and nothing had been left to give a clew to the guilt of the woman.

For several weeks back the old house has been strangely disturbed. The house is occupied by two families and both have been startled by the strange sounds heard at night. In one side of the house lives Mrs. Amanda Kerr and in the other side lives William Rowen, his wife and children. With Mrs. Kerr lives her brother, John Grindell, and with Mrs. Rowen lives her brother-in-law, Bert Rowen. Mrs. Kerr's daughter, Miss Hannah, also lives in the house with her mother. The sounds were not so bothersome as the material evidences of the visits of the spook. Mrs. Kerr and Mrs. William Rowen in the morning, for almost a week, noticed that the flowers in the rear court would be uprooted in their beds, the soil was dug up around a coalshed, and a board walk through the court leading to this seemed to be an especial attraction to the spook, who invariably overturned it each night.

Then came the climax. Mr. Grindell was lying upon a couch on the rear porch. In the doorway sat Bert Rowen and Miss Kerr, and on the porch were Mrs. William Rowen and a few of the children. The story is best told by Mr. Grindell, who said:

"I was lying on the couch, not asleep. I heard steps down the little board walk, and then whines as of a dog—a strangling dog. Sometimes the whines were broken by rack coughs. I raised myself on the couch and sat up. Just then Miss Kerr uttered a shriek, crying, 'Look! Look! Bert!' Up the board walk came the ghost, or this thing, whatever it was. It was white, a part of the snowy shroud being doubled up over the head. All the time the thing kept up the interest in the ground, and poked about, with its foot, sometimes stooping and clawing at the dirt.

"Right up to the porch the thing came. Miss Kerr fled, but others came out of the house at the shrieks and the utterance of the thing. It came to the porch. I said, 'What do you want here?' But the thing could not say anything, but stood, struggling and trying to get something out of its lips. All it could do was whine. Then it turned and went down the board walk, and pointed along the way, as if trying to show something. Again it returned. In the meantime I had collected myself a little, and the others in the house had gathered out on the porch. I said then, 'In the name of God, speak and tell me what you want.'

"At once the ghost could talk. With hurried words it wailed and said pleadingly: 'O, do help me to find my husband's body. Many years ago I killed him, and his body was down at that corner somewhere. I have been hunting here for many nights. Will nobody go with me and seek him?'

"I got up. I put my hand on the thing to move it back from the porch, and it fell like a real person. Some people say that when you put your hand on a ghost it goes right through the thing like a cloud of air. It seemed so real that I started with the thing, but the women yelled at me 'Where are you going! Be careful, man!'

"'Wait till I get my shoes,' I said to the thing. 'No, at once, or it is in vain,' the thing pleaded, but I returned to get my shoes."

Then the story is taken up by Mrs. William Rowen, who was interviewed this morning, also. She said: "I have never believed in ghosts, and it seems foolish to talk about this, but I saw this one and so did everybody on the porch. So many of us saw it that we could not all have been mistaken or duped. Well, when Mr. Grindell turned to go, I said, 'Will any two of you go with me and help the poor thing?' Bert Rowen started and so did Grindell. We went down the board walk. 'Here, look here,' the thing said, as we reached the corner of the yard, where the ground was dug up more than anywhere else. But before we could scarcely realize the meaning of the words, there was a sound as of the splashing of water—just like as if some person had tumbled into a pool—and the thing was gone.

"I'm a woman that never believed in ghosts, and I'm not afraid of them. We will not leave the house, nor fear the return of the thing, nor will the other family, because we don't think any harm can come to us. I joined the church many years ago, and I fear the Lord and him only, and I believe that it is not in the power of any spirit to do bodily harm to me or my children."

A crowd of people have visited the house since the appearance of the ghost, has been so widely heralded by the families in the house and through the press, and old residenters are called upon to tell tales which their grandfathers told about the house in its early days. Main street was at that time known as Spring street—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

VISIT PUGILISTS.

And Why Not? We Ask.

SPIRITS COMMUNICATE WITH JOHN L. SULLIVAN, THE PUGILIST, ILLUSTRATING THE SUBLIME FACT THAT SPIRIT COMMUNION IS COMMON TO ALL CLASSES, AND NO ONE PERSON HAS A PATENT RIGHT ON IT.

John L. Sullivan has not exactly become a Spiritualist but he has had a bout with the occult science and, in his words: "It was the worst knock-out I ever got."

Carefully stored away in the room back of Sullivan's new cafe on Forty-second street, near Sixth avenue is a stack of nine slates. They appear to be of the kind schoolboys buy for a nickel each. Since Wednesday night the chief occupation of the oldtime pugilist has been to examine these slates.

Brooklyn Jimmie Carroll, John L,'s partner in the cafe, wishes he had had nothing to do with John L.'s investigation of Spiritualism. On one of the slates is a message signed with the name of a relative of Brooklyn Jimmie's who died nine years ago, and, it is said, in his very handwriting. This dead relative Brooklyn Jimmie had actually forgotten until he got the slate covered with the ghostly writing.

Bob Adams, a sporting man, is also mystified, as he got messages from his dead grandfather and cousin.

NOT A DROP IN FOUR WEEKS.

Sullivan had been looking at life from a strangely serious viewpoint and had not touched a drop of liquor in four weeks. Two doors from the cafe, on Forty-second street, lives Frederick Evans, a slate-writing medium. Adams suggested that Sullivan and Carroll go with him to test the powers of the medium. They agreed. Evans wanted to give separate seances.

"Not on your life," roared Sullivan. "If there is any fake we want to know it. You might fool me, but you can't fool three of us."

"All right," said Evans. "Sit down."

John sat on one side of a little plain deal table. On his left sat Carroll, and on his right Adams. On the other side sat Evans. The room was brilliantly lighted.

Evans had a stack of new slates and told each to pick out two. They did so, examined them carefully and cleaned them.

"We won't take any chances," said Sullivan as he rubbed the slates. "The gazaboo can't fool us."

Then the three put rubber bands about the slates and held them between their knees. Evans told Sullivan to put his slate flat down on the table and hold it there with his fingers so he would know it was not touched by the medium. Carroll and Adams put their fingers also on the frame.

"In a minute," said Adams yesterday to a World reporter, "my finger began to hop up and down on the slate as if I were a telegraph operator sending a message. I tried hard to hold it still, but couldn't. Carroll's finger was also moving up and down but not as much as mine. John's didn't move at all. He pressed down so hard on his finger that I thought he'd break the table. But he said that all the time he had his finger on the slate it felt as if some one were sticking a needle into the end of it."

When the slate was lifted off the table and the other side examined Sullivan nearly rolled off his chair.

"It's from my brother Mike," he bellowed, "and Mike's been dead four years. Who wrote that?" he yelled to Evans,

The medium started to explain the Spiritualistic theory of slate-writing.

"Shake a day-day to that!" said Sullivan. You're out of my stride. Come back on earth and tell me who wrote that. If it was the spirit of my brother Mike, all right. We'll let it go at that."

This was the message on the slate that so startled the big pugilist:

"God bless you, John. I am more than glad to meet you here to-night investigating this grand truth of spirit return. I am glad to be able to come back from the so-called dead and give you this convincing evidence that I still live.

"I am glad to see, John, that the coming years will bring you more happiness and prosperity than you have enjoyed in the past, and as you have learned the lessons of life bitterly you will be able to profit by past experiences and take advantage of the opportunities that are coming to you.

"Cheer up; the dark clouds of your life are dispersing and the sunshine and happiness and prosperity will soon shine upon you. Your brother,

"MICHAEL SULLIVAN."

"Mother Catherine sends love."

"Catherine was my mother's name," said Sullivan. "Did you know," addressing Evans, "that I had a dead brother, Mike, and that my mother's name was Catherine?"

Evans declared that he did not.

ON A FIVE-CENT SLATE.

"There must be some trick in this," said Sullivan.

"The idea of a dead man writing on a five-cent slate is too much to swallow right off the reel. I'm knocked out. That's right."

Carroll and Adams in turn got a message from a dead relative.

"This is what knocks me," said Adams. "I got a message from my cousin, Billy O'Brien, who has been dead twenty years, and written in his own handwriting, too. I had forgotten all about him for many years."

This is the message from O'Brien:

"God bless you Adams, old man. Glad to see you. Hope you will be as happy as your old friend,

"BILLY O'BRIEN."

Sullivan whispered to his friends. He thought the slates might have been prepared. He picked up one and wrote his name "Sullivan," in big letters clear across it. On the other side Adams wrote his name.

"Now if the writing comes up underneath what we have written we'll know it's a fake," said John.

"I'll tell you what I'll do," said Evans, "you can put that slate on the floor, and one of you can stand on the frame and the message will be written in crayons in all the colors that are in that rug."

The slate was placed on the rug and Adams put his feet on the frame. Two minutes later, when the slate was picked up, the following message was found written in blue, gray, red, white, yellow, pink and green colors, the same as in the rug:

"I am pleased to greet you here to-night. I hope your stay on earth will prove as happy as mine is in spirit.

"May God bless and help you both.

"J. ADAMS."

"J. Adams," said Adams, "was the name of my grandfather. The old man has been dead I don't know how long.

"We asked that Spiritualist who was going to win the fight and he said Fitzsimmons. Of course, any one could have made a lucky guess, but John and the rest of us can't get away from those letters."

"It's too deep for me!" grunted Sullivan. "To think of Mike, who has been in his grave your years, writing me a letter on a five-cent slate."—New York World.

Freeville, N. Y.

Freeville camp has had its two weeks of camp-meeting, and it has been a success in every respect. The principal speakers were J. C. F. Grumbine, of Syracuse, N. Y.; J. W. Dennis, of Buffalo, N. Y.; Dr. J. M. Peebles, of Battle Creek, Mich., T. Grimshaw, of St. Louis, Mo.; Mrs. Mary Von Kanzler, of Fulton, N. Y.; Mrs. Lizzie Brewer, of Belmont, N. Y., and others of a local reputation; Mr. George Green, of Dryden, N. Y., musical director; B. L. Robinson, president, who can be addressed at McLean, Tompkins county, N. Y.

Mrs. Mary Von Kanzler proved to be the test medium of this camp, and her platform tests each day were far above the average. Any camp or society will make no mistake in engaging her for a test medium, or a lecturer, and a platform worker, as she can take part in the musical portion of any entertainment. We could not have gotten along very well without her.

Mrs. Lizzie Brewer is also a good and quite an entertaining lady at camp, and is an extremely hard worker.

The greatest feature about the Freeville camp grounds is a splendid flowing well of very cold water that is of a medicinal nature and as clear as crystal. I for one can testify of its medicinal qualities, for it completely cured me of a catarrhal inflammation of the inner or mucus surfaces, and very many others can testify to the fact that this water is a benefit to any one that is troubled with any inflammatory condition of the human system. A sanitarium built at this place would be a beneficial thing for humanity. One feature of this water is that it can be drank in large quantities without any inconvenience to the partaker thereof, even if he drinks two or three glasses of it at a time. The inflammatory symptoms of rheumatism give way in cases where the water is freely partaken of. And a line addressed to Dr. B. L. Robinson, McLean, N. Y., will bring you a ten-gallon keg of it if you will pay for the keg and the freight, which will be only a few cents by any railroad.

Buffalo, N. Y. J. W. DENNIS.

Grand Ledge, Mich.

The Grand Ledge, Mich., camp is having good success. The attendance is larger than last year. G. W. Kates and wife commenced a week of service there on Saturday, August 11. The Sunday meetings were large, although the weather was rainy. Mrs. Kates gave a splendid address at the morning session upon "Let there be light." Mr. Kates spoke upon "Mistakes" in the afternoon, and held his large audience well entertained and instructed. "Margaret" controlled Mrs. Kates for tests and gave a number of most remarkable ones. She captured the camp.

We had a joyful home-coming of our loved president, Mrs. A. E. Sheets, on Monday, August 13. She had served the Grand Rapids camp for a few days and we had missed her. She was met at the gate and escorted through a double row of campers waving flags and singing "Home, Sweet Home," and at the hotel was seated in her favorite chair handsomely decorated with flowers and ferns. Then four men bore her in the chair to her cottage through the double ranks of campers, with the latter singing "Happy Greeting." Mrs. Sheets was much affected, but made a splendid address of thanks, and then three hearty cheers were given to signal the campers' esteem of their genial and worthy president. Such episodes bind us in love. SCRIBE.

Briggs Park, Mich.

Although it rained almost the entire day last Sunday more than 500 persons were on the grounds. Mrs. Sheets was the speaker at the forenoon and afternoon services. Her lectures were grand. We feel rather as if we had a claim on her, for she was here a great deal of the time when she began her public career. Her subject was "What Does Spiritualism Stand For?" She handled it in a masterly manner. The thought brought forth in regard to the "confessional" was a beautiful one. She spoke of it in the light of being such a relief to the sincere penitent who conscientiously unburdened her soul and formed new resolutions, and while she did not endorse it nor in any way encourage it, she was able to see that much good in it, which the writer is free to confess that he had never before seen.

At the message service the mediums who took part in it were the means of bringing solace and comfort to some hearts that were wounded and sore.

This week promises to be one of great interest to all who may attend on account of the State Association meeting. This week is under the management of the state board. The election of officers is of vital importance to all Spiritualists, whether public workers in the field or "privates in the ranks." We feel that our camp has done a great deal of good, and that repays for our labors. THOS. J. HAYNES, Secretary.

Lake Pleasant Camp, Mass.

The twenty-seventh session of this camp-meeting is now in full progress. The fine lectures of J. Clegg Wright, Mrs. Carrie Twing, Miss Lizzie Harlow, and Prof. Lockwood are drawing intelligent audiences. The course of lessons by J. Clegg Wright and Prof. Lockwood have been of great benefit to their classes.

The Schubert Quartette is popular as ever. They gave a splendid concert August 9, in the Temple.

The dances are well patronized, Milligan's orchestra furnishing excellent music.

The hotel, under the management of Pendergrast and Holmes, is giving general satisfaction.

Lectures, conferences, dramatic and musical entertainments give the people here plenty of attractions.

The weather has been pleasant, the healthful grove, Jacob's Well, etc., all contribute to make Lake Pleasant a joy these summer days.

The meeting closes August 26. Mrs. Lease and Mrs. Pepper will be here the last week. B.

Maple Dell Camp, Ohio.

The speaker for Sunday, August 12, was Dr. J. M. Peebles. He is well-known as a man of eighty years of age, tall, straight, and as strong and active as a man of forty. His first lecture was on Saturday, and he prefaced it with the following incident:

When Spiritualism began to attract attention he went to a Dr. Dunn who was a medium, through whom came a message from a spirit who gave his name as Aaron Knight, and said he lived in Yorkshire, Eng., about three hundred years ago. He said he had a brother, Rev. James Knight, who was ordained a minister in the Church of England, and he spoke of other items of interest.

In the year 1869, Dr. Peebles was appointed United States Consul to Asiatic Turkey and on his way to his appointment he stopped in England to find out if possible whether there was any truth in the message. He obtained the aid of the city clerk, who began a thorough search of the records, and to the utter astonishment of Dr. Peebles, he found the name of Rev. James Knight, the date of his ordination as minister, and the old church in which he preached, and many other objects and events exactly as had been given through Dr. Dunn.

On Sunday there was a large gathering in the auditorium in spite of the rain.

He illustrated how Spiritualism had helped him as a spiritual teacher by relating an incident which took place at a funeral when he was a Christian minister. A heart-broken mother, leaning over the casket and gazing upon the lifeless form of her only son, said to him, "What you have said about faith in God is well enough ordinarily, but what I want now is some knowledge about my boy. I do not want guesses. Do you know anything about my son?" "And I stood silent as a post," said Dr. Peebles. "In after years I met her and said to her, "Now I can answer that question which you asked me at your son's funeral."

"I do not need your answer," was her reply, "for my boy has been to me and answered it himself."

Jennie Hagan Jackson is to be the speaker for the next two weeks.

A. J. WEAVER.

Vicksburg Camp, Mich.

Our camp-meeting at Vicksburg, Mich., had a most auspicious opening on Sunday, August 5. The opening address was given by the chairman, Oscar A. Edgerly; it was enthusiastically received by the large audience present. The afternoon lecture of the opening day was given by Mrs. Marion Carpenter. Her lecture was followed by many convincing tests. The evening discourse was given by Mr. A. E. Tisdale, the blind medium. Mr. Tisdale's lecture for eloquence and logic, has never been surpassed at Vicksburg.

August 7, 8, 9, 10 our rostrum was occupied by Mrs. Marion Carpenter. Both her lectures and tests gave the very best satisfaction.

Saturday, August 11, was designated on our programme as "Soldiers' Day." The address was delivered by Mr. A. E. Tisdale, and was indeed a masterly effort, one well calculated to stir the blood of patriots. Sunday, August 12, our rostrum was occupied in the morning by Mr. A. E. Tisdale, and in the afternoon by Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing. Mrs. Twing gave us a most beautiful discourse from the subject, "Be True to the Heavenly Vision." Mrs. Twing will remain with us until August 18, consequently we are expecting to receive many more beautiful thoughts from her inspired teachings.

Friday, August 10, was observed as Children's Day. Dr. Rosa Conger, of Chicago, gave a very nice talk to the children. At the conclusion of the exercises the children enjoyed ice cream. Owing to the indefatigable efforts of Miss Jeanette Fraser, there have been many improvements made on the grounds this year. Next year we expect to have a new hotel.

Drs. M. E. and Rosa C. Conger, are having splendid success in their classes and the management of the camp consider that they are doing a good work here.

Mrs. R. W. Barton, of Minneapolis, Minn., is present at our camp, and has done some excellent work in our conferences.

Our chairman, Mr. O. A. Edgerly, leaves here Tuesday to go to Chesterfield, Ind., to fill a week's engagement, but will return here before the close of our camp. REPORTER.

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

Eighth Annual Convention of National Spiritualists Association.

KAREZZA.

ETHICS OF MARRIAGE.

By Alice B. Stockham, M. D.

Karezza makes a plea for a better birthright for children, and aims to lead individuals to seek a higher development of themselves through most sacred relations. It is pure in tone and aim, and should be widely circulated. Price, cloth, $1.

ASTRAL WORSHIP.

By J. H. Hill, M. D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Superstition in all Ages

Or "Le Bon Sens,"

By JEAN MESLIER,

A Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastoral service of thirty years in France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and asked God's pardon for having taught the Christian religion. He left this volume as his last will and testament to his parishioners and to the world. Translated from the French original by Miss Anna Knoop.

Post 8vo., 389 pages, with portrait. Cloth, $1.00; postage, 14 cents.

"The work of the honest pastor is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind that the last century produced. . . . Paine and Voltaire had reserves, but Jean Meslier had none. He keeps nothing back; and yet, after all, the wonder is not that there should have been one priest who left that testimony at his death, but that all priests do not."—James Parton

Woman, Church and State.

A Historical Account of the Status of Woman Through the Christian Ages, with Reminiscences of the Matriarchate.

BY MATILDA JOSLYN GAGE.

*THE AMOUNT OF VALUABLE IN*formation succinctly and clearly stated in this volume of 554 pages is amazing. The title, as above given, fails to convey an idea of the fulness and completeness with which the subjects are treated. The Matriarchate, or Mother-rule, is the theme of the first chapter, in which much lore, quaint, queer and curious, is brought to view in elucidation of the subject. This is followed by chapters on Celibacy, Canon Law, Marquette, Witchcraft, Wives, Polygamy, Woman and Work, The Church of To-day, Past, Present, Future; and there is not a chapter in the book that is not handled in a masterly manner, and that for quantity and quality of information, is not worth the full price of the volume. It is packed with knowledge well-arranged, and intensely interesting from beginning to end. No one can possibly regret buying it; it is a valuable addition to the library of any free and truth-loving mind.

Price, $2.00. For sale at this office.

AFTER HER DEATH.

THE STORY OF A SUMMER.

BY LILIAN WHITING.

Pervaded with pure and beautiful spirituality of thought. Instructive and helpful to all who love and seek the higher and finer ways of spiritual experience. Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

MAHOMET,

BY EDWARD GIBBON.

This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25c. Sold at this office.

The New and the Old,

Or the World's Progress in Thought. By Moses Hull. An excellent work by this veteran writer and thinker. Price 10 cents.

Father Tom and the Pope,

Or a Night at the Vatican.

Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "puttein," and an Irish recipe for "conwounding" the same. "What's that?" says the Pope. "Put in the sperits first," says his Riv'rence; "and then put in the sugar; and remember, every dhrop of wather you put in after that, spoils the punch." "Glory be to God," says the Pope, not minding a word Father Tom was saying. "Glory be to God!" says he, smacking his lips. "I never knewn what dhrink was afore," says he. "What's that?" says the Pope. "Put in the sperits first," says he—"it's Necthar itself, if is, so it is!" says he, wiping his epistolical mouth wid the cuff of his coat. Paper, 25cts.; cloth, 50 cents. For sale at this office.

IMMORTALITY,

...OR...

FUTURE HOMES AND DWELLING PLACES.

BY DR. J. M. PEEBLES.

AN INVALUABLE WORK!

This admirable work contains what a hundred spirits, good and evil, say of their dwelling-places. Give us details—details and accurate delineations of life in the Spirit-world!—is the constant appeal of thoughtful minds. Death is approaching. Whither—oh, whither! Shall I know my friends beyond the tomb? Will they know me? What is their present condition, and what their occupations? In this volume the spirits, differing as they may, are allowed to speak for themselves. No man is better qualified than Dr. Peebles to place a work of this kind before the people. He treats of the Mysteries of Life; Doubts and Hopes; The Bridging of the River; Foreglearns of the Future; Testimony of Saints; The Rebirth and Perfection of the Spiritual Body; Is it the Soul or Body that Sins?; Clothing in the Spirit-world; Our Little Ones in Heaven; The Personal Experiences of Aaron Knight; The Red Man's Testimony; Evil Spirits; Testimony of Physicians in Spirit-Life; The Homes of Apostles and Divines; The Friends and Shakers in Spirit-Life; Spirit Homes of Bruno and Others; Many Voices from the Spirit-Land. Many other matters are treated, too numerous to mention. Price, cloth, $1; paper 50 cents. Postage 12 cents. For sale at this office.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice, at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One year	$1.00
six months	50c
Thirteen weeks	25 cts
Single copy	5 cts

REMITTANCES.

Remit by Postoffice Money Order, Registered Letter, or draft on Chicago or New York. If costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so don't send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Direct all letters to J. R. Francis, No. 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

CLUBS! IMPORTANT SUGGESTION!

As there are thousands who will at first venture only twenty-five cents for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER thirteen weeks, we would suggest to those who receive a sample copy, to solicit several others to unite with them, and thus be able to remit from $1 to $10, or even more than the latter sum. A large number of little amounts will make a large sum total, and thus extend the field of our labor and usefulness. The same suggestion will apply in all cases of renewal of subscriptions—solicit others to aid in the good work. You will experience no difficulty whatever in inducing Spiritualists to subscribe for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, for not one of them can afford to be without the valuable information imparted therein each week, and at the price of only about two cents per week.

A Bountiful Harvest for 25 Cents.

Do you want a more bountiful harvest than we can give you for 25 cents? Just pause and think for a moment what an intellectual feast that small investment will furnish you. The subscription price of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER thirteen weeks is only twenty-five cents! For that amount you obtain one hundred and four pages of solid, substantial, soul-elevating and mind-refreshing reading matter, equivalent to a medium-sized book!

TAKE NOTICE!

☞ At expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly, write to us, and errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it is then sent, or the change cannot be made.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The Progressive Thinker is furnished in the United States at $1.00 per year, the postage thereon being but nominal, but when it is sent to foreign countries we are compelled to charge 50 cents extra, making the yearly subscription $1.50. Please bear that in mind.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1900.

Take Your Choice.

Behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.—King Rehoboam—I Kings 12:28.

These gods which the king of Israel thus glorified and set up for worship, were two calves made of gold, representatives of the Egyptian bull Apis.

Aaron, the high priest, while Moses was in the mount, and God was playing sculptor in writing the commandments on plates of stone, to pass down through a rift in the cloud to his deputy, made a golden calf of the ear-rings of the people, and employed precisely the same language as did Rehoboam several centuries later. See Exodus 32:4—"These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt."

True, Moses was mad about that calf, and "brake the tablets" of stone in his wrath because of that calf business; but unless the high priest and the king both lied, and the Psalmist, 106:19, and Acts 7:41, misrepresent, the pets of God absolutely sacrificed to a calf and worshiped it. Though an idolatrous act, was not the worship of that hand-made and extemporized golden god more creditable to the wandering tribes of Israel than was their worship of the "Lord God," whoever that functionary may have been, who instructed them to "Smite with the edge of the sword, and utterly destroy all the cities of the plain and leave nothing alive that breathed?"

Reader, take your choice between these gods. The golden calf, if converted into coin of the realm would have some redeeming qualities, and may be preferred by some to the God of slaughter, for neither of whom has The Progressive Thinker any regard.

A Dictatorial Priesthood.

Years ago the absorbing question with the press was, "Does the dog wag the tail, or is it the tail that wags the dog?" From the earnestness shown in the discussions it would be supposed the fate of empires was contingent on the issue.

A more vital question to-day: "Is the government run by the clergy, and in their interest; or by the people to advance human happiness?"

From the meddlesome interference of the priest in everything pertaining to the well-being of the race, the superficial observer would suppose he alone controlled all legislation, and that it was carried on solely at his dictation.

Now is it not merely possible he is overdoing the dictation business? It will be remembered the clergy attempted to suppress the use of the bicycle by ladies. They assumed it was immoral, and destructive to the souls of those who rode on them. Instead of lessening them they were multiplied by millions. The last dodge of the priest is a proposition to prohibit long and fast riding. It is killing the dear creatures, and adverse legislation must be employed to prevent "scorching." Can any one tell why a preacher never asks for the Sunday laws to be enforced upon those dear sisters who get up choice dinners for the pulpiteer on Sunday? Fancy cooking on Sunday is very exhausting, and for the sake of the dear sisters' immortal souls the practice should be abandoned.

New Field for Scholarship.

The learned F. F. Arbuthnot, in a recent work published in London, entitled "The Mysteries of Chronology," says:

"It will be news to many that the introduction of Arabic numerals into Europe must be placed at so late a date as the 14th century."

He tells us further:

"The dates of the births, accessions, and deaths of the English sovereigns, are also in many cases uncertain, the official records having been very loosely kept until the reign of Henry VIII. Considerable doubt as to facts and dates likewise attaches to the work of the earlier chroniclers who attempted to write the early history of this country."

That period known as the "Dark Ages," covering a thousand years, and ending when priestcraft began to wane, and learning began to revive, about the beginning of the 16th century, is one in which little trust can be placed on any date. The few records extant come to us from the hands of priests, guilty of falsification on whatever subject they wrote. They labored to enlarge the dates, and make everything appear more ancient than they really were. Perhaps it is not true that the thousand years commencing with the 5th century, and ending with the 15th, do not embrace more than 500 years, but we are fully satisfied the period has been largely exaggerated to give an antiquity to Christianity to which it is not entitled.

The Horrors of War.

"War is hell," said the lamented Ingersoll, but of all the wars which have cursed the world, those waged by Christians in promulgation of their faith, or to punish those who opposed its extension, have been the most unrelenting and cruel. Sometime ago we referred to the barbarism of the Crusaders, but withheld an account of the worst cruelties, to avoid shocking the sensibilities of our readers. Neither age, sex nor condition were spared, but all opposition was crushed by indiscriminate slaughter. If a God of justice ever interfered in the affairs of men, then was a fit occasion to interpose his mercy; but the slaughter went on until the streets of Antioch and of Jerusalem were blocked by dead bodies and flowed with gore.

Mrs. E. B. Drew, wife of the British Commissioner of Customs at Tien Tsin, lately arrived at San Francisco, from the Orient, on the transport Logan. She reports:

"During the bombardment we lived most of the time in the cellar of our house. Our house was partially wrecked by big shells. Sleep was out of the question most of the time, and so unstrung were we that little food satisfied us. There was ever present the haunting fear of the Chinese triumphing and slaughtering every foreigner and convert.

"Some, probably all, of the women were prepared to act in case the Chinese effected an entrance. But, aside from the unpleasant recollection, it appears the allied officers were prepared to act. I did not know it at the time, but I understood that 10 or 20 men had been detailed to kill all the foreign women in case the Chinese were victors."

Mrs. Drew, with much indignation, then spoke of atrocities committed by Russian troops, saying:

"They pillaged, looted, tortured, and murdered right and left. There were many infants and children killed by bayonet thrusts. And many were tossed from bayonet points only to be caught and again tossed time and again. There is ample evidence of these unspeakable occurrences.

"And about Chinese women. They were mistreated and murdered in house after house. It seemed as if nothing could stay the mad frenzy of these Russians.

"Out from Tien Tsin, along the Pei-Ho and Yellow rivers, are numerous little villages. The Russians swept through the villages, destroying life and property. In these places they also tossed infants and other children in the air from bayonets. And every time this child-tossing tragedy was indulged in the dead body of a mother, father, or both would be hard by. The Russians also drove women and children into the Pei-Ho and Yellow rivers, where they were drowned.

"After shooting and murdering to their hearts' content the Russians would pillage, loot, and burn every house that caught their eyes. There was no attempt at concealing all of the remarkably barbarous conduct.

"I do not pretend to say how many women and children were butchered by the Russians. I never heard the number estimated, save that a great many had been bayoneted and some shot.

"In view of what they had been guilty of in and around Tien Tsin, none of us was surprised to hear of a murderous act by the Russians at Taku. It is generally accepted as true that the Chinese commander of the Taku forts was murdered by the Russians when he was in the act of surrendering his sword."

Reports from numerous other refugees from Tien Tsin all concur in their statements. Prof. O. D. Clifford of the Imperial University of Tien Tsin, who was one of the last to leave the besieged city, says:

"Looting by the allied forces began as soon as they got the upperhand. The Russians led in this and went to extremes. They are naturally cruel, and, expecting no mercy, they showed none. I was an eye-witness to eight cold-blooded murders by them. The victims were old and infirm Chinese. The Russians stole everything in sight, looting the houses in the settlement, as the Chinese would have done."

Crimes are incidental to war, and are incidental to war everywhere, and should be reported to excite hatred of wholesale bloodshed as practiced on opposing belligerent nations; but the Russians in China, pressed on by priests, have excelled in acts of horror, for which they deserve universal execration.

Condolence.

"God bless 'em, let 'em go,
I plays de banjo still,"

was the refrain of Sambo as he sang and recalled the loss of friends and the desolation which followed. He was a philosopher, and had learned no tears can restore the past, or give back departed friends. Churchmen may with propriety take a lesson from the poor African, and be content with their lot, however severe the affliction. But with their most intellectual leaders retiring and teaching Liberalism, members withdrawing, pulpits vacated, church structures decaying, and public journals suspending, they cannot even gain consolation from the soft strains of music which under other circumstances would be soul-inspiring. Well, "what can't be cured must be endured."

A Worthy Example.

Wm. Case, who died at Lafayette, Ind., on the 23rd of July, aged 82 years, said of himself in a paper recounting a sketch of his life work:

"If I have any religion, it is a firm belief in Spiritualism. When I die my body is to be cremated, and my ashes thrown broadcast on Mother Earth. It is all the return I can make for the sustenance I have received from her. There is to be no priestly attendance on me while sick, and no funeral ceremony over my dead body."

Mr. Case's wishes were executed to the letter, and a good man, born at Little Falls, N. Y., is at rest, while his worthy example will remain to encourage others in good works.

Painfully Correct.

"Are you in pain?" inquired a sympathetic old gentleman of a boy writhing in agony. "No, the pain is in me," was the prompt reply.

Wonder if our Christian brothers, whose misery is so intense because of the decline of faith, are not in a similar predicament with the tortured juvenile?

Played Out.

The Occident, a Presbyterian organ at San Francisco for the last twenty-five years, has ceased to exist. It failed to be profitable to its owners, and now is a thing of the past. Others of the same ilk can be spared without any loss to the world.

Don't Disturb the Dead.

One of the cardinal religious teachings of Confucius, and which is still held in reverence by every Chinaman, is adoration of ancestral spirits, who they believe watch over human affairs, and direct in all the concerns of life. Because of this belief in the spiritual existence of those they call dead, and of their ultimate reanimation, whose remains are preserved with sacred care. Christians have designated them as "Ancestor Worshipers." Probably no people of the present age bestow greater care on the deserted earthly body than do Chinamen.

In every home in China, whether rich or poor, it is said the joss sticks and jar of food is placed before the image of the ancestor, where they are left until the unseen loved one has feasted on the spirit of the food, then the remainder is removed, to be consumed by the family.

As a means of humiliation and punishment for the late outrage on Christians and aggressions on the foreign legations it has been proposed the allied armies, now marching to the relief of their national representatives, destroy the ancestral graves and temples wherever located, and particularly those of the royal family.

If the object is to intensify the hate of those people against Western civilization, and make them still more bitter against the Christians, then the carrying into effect of this novel proposition will certainly accomplish its purpose.

Among every people the remains of the worthy dead have been held sacred. Imagine an army sweeping over this country, entering the cemeteries, demolishing statuary, monuments, and tombs, and desecrating the dead! It is too sacrilegious to think of. Savages would not descend to such shameful acts. And yet the Christian clergy are said to favor such ghoulish procedure to revenge the Chinese for their cruelty.

If it is necessary to make a striking example of the Chinese, to prevent a repetition of their outrages, destroy the entire royal family, behead a million or so of mandarins, if so many can be found, demolish all the castles and fortresses, waste the resources of the country so that famine and pestilence shall follow, but don't make war on the dead!

True, the Christian powers have a distinguished precedent, in the case of Origen, one of the early Fathers of the church, for violating graves. According to received history he was born at Alexandria in A. D. 185, and was the most learned and influential of all the churchmen of the period. Because of his teaching of the final restoration of the wicked to divine favor, and the plurality of worlds, he incurred the hatred of the monks, who made open war upon him, caused him to be arrested and tortured, hoping thereby to make him subscribe to their errors, which subsequently became fundamental in the Christian system. His father was persecuted to martyrdom, and the family were deprived of all means for support. Synods denounced Origen, and after his death he was formally excommunicated. Some years later his bones were exhumed and dishonored, but the name is still the brightest in the galaxy of the church.

Pray, Brothers, Pray.

The American missionaries have issued the following call:

"To the Christian people of the United States: The missionaries in China ask a special prayer from every pulpit for the guidance of the government and the speedy succor of Americans and native converts in extreme peril."

Governments may be guided by prayer, but God never, unless he is as vacillating in his actions as the Bible and Churchmen represent him.

If the missionaries in China will quietly withdraw from that country, and cease their meddlesome attempt to fasten their creed on an unwilling people, all will sympathize with that movement. But as we write, the churches are still plotting to send a new army of missionaries there; and the Methodists have absolutely sent forward a Bishop to take general charge of the work so soon as the loud-mouthed cannon engaged in destroying Chinese cities shall cease its roar. With this fact, and the experience of the wise old fox, in the fable of the fox and flies, "If you drive away these flies a more hungry swarm will come to take their place." So the dictatorial "I am more holy than thou" missionary, augmented in numbers and strengthened by national combinations and arms, will put on new airs, and become so intolerant and overbearing they will soon incite new disorders. That being the case it may be as well to let those now experiencing Chinese hate have their fill, for we are told: "Fools only learn by experience."

Treaties with China.

As showing how privileges were gained from China in the interest of missionaries, it is related that in drawing up the supplementary treaty between France and China in 1860, a French missionary, who was employed as an interpreter, slipped into the text the following clause:

"It is, in addition, permitted the French missionaries to rent and purchase land in all the provinces and to erect buildings thereon at pleasure."

When the Chinese discovered this trick practiced on them it was too late to repair the mischief; and later, under pressure, acknowledged the right of all missionaries to reside inland. In the amended treaty of 1858, between the United States and China, occurs—

"Art. XXIX.—The principles of the Christian religion as professed by the Protestant and Roman Catholic churches are recognized as teaching men to do good and to do to others as they would have others do to them. Hereafter those who quietly profess and teach these doctrines shall not be harassed or persecuted on account of their faith. Any person, whether citizen of the United States or Chinese convert, who according to these tenets peaceably teaches and practices the principles of Christianity, shall in no case be interfered with or molested."

Ten years later another treaty assured the citizens of the United States in China and to Chinese in the United States entire liberty of conscience and exemption from disability or persecution on account of their religious faith or worship in either country.

A Fighting Preacher.

Rev. Pettinger, a new arrival in Bowden, North Dakota, undertook to teach the mayor how to run the town. They did not agree in methods, so a rough-and-tumble fight followed, the parson coming off victor. Now each participant wants the other to leave town. The fighting preacher drew his inspiration from the words of the Master: "I came not to send peace, but a sword."

CULTIVATE CHILDREN'S SPIRITUALITY

Correct Their Bad Habits While They Are Asleep.

An Article That Should Receive the Careful Attention of Every Thoughtful Mind.

If your little child has a bad habit, says the New York Herald, don't scold it—don't even reprove it. If you do you are liable to make matters worse. Besides, it is a crime to scold children for doing things which to them there is no logical reason for not doing. Let the naughty darling be happy the livelong day. Take a mental note of the habits and conduct which you think should be corrected, and then when night comes, and the little prayer has been lisped, and the tired baby lost in Dreamland, talk to it and reason with it to your heart's content.

This is the gentle discipline which scientists have planned for the training of the twentieth century baby, and by this method little Katherine Kerr, of Chicago, Ill., has been trained since babyhood, and is still being trained. Never in all her life, which now extends over a period of six years, has this little girl been scolded or even reproved for a childish offense, but she has nevertheless received a training as rigid in its requirements, as broad in scope, and as beneficial in its results as the most severe and exacting mother could desire.

The fortunate little girl is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Kerr, of Glen Ellyn, and the granddaughter of Dr. Kerr, professor of Greek in the University of Wisconsin. Mrs. Kerr, or May Walden Kerr, to use the name by which she is best known, is one of the most advanced women in the West, and much of her time and thought in the last few years have been devoted to the study of child culture, her own little girl being the subject of her experiments.

The methods followed by Mrs. Kerr are extremely simple, and are capable of being repeated by any mother, with the result that nail biting, thumb sucking, round shoulders, pigeon toes, bowlegs, etc., may be quickly and completely overcome. Mrs. Walden Kerr has written the following:

While my little girl Katherine was still a tiny baby my attention was called to the fact that children could be cured of bad habits by talking to them while they were asleep, and I resolved at that time to test the accuracy of the statement as soon as she displayed the slightest tendency toward the formation of any of the unpleasant and very often injurious habits to which all children are more or less prone.

Of course, needless to say, I did not have to wait long, as any mother will readily understand. Despite the most careful watching, before the little mite of humanity was six months old she had formed a most irresistible desire to suck her thumbs. It was then that I began my experiments in training by suggestion, but with absolutely no success. I then came to the conclusion that the suggestion theory was entirely theory, and not capable of actual practice, and I contented myself by talking to her while she was awake and keeping little gloves on her thumbs, which I had made out of old kid ones. At night she had mittens which were made a part of the nightgown sleeves.

But all these safeguards were futile, and the thumb-sucking habit grew so bad that I feared the delicate expression of the mouth would be completely destroyed and the contour of the lips made irregular and unsightly. I was then told that my experiments had been useless because my child was at that time too young to have developed a moral sense. I was advised to renew attempts when she reached the age of three years, at which time the mind is supposed to experience its first perceptions of right and wrong.

So on the third anniversary of little Katherine's birth I said to her: "Now, to-night after you are asleep mamma is going to come to you and tell you that you are not going to suck your thumbs any more. You don't want to suck your thumbs. You want them to be little helpers and do many things for you when you grow up. You will want to teach them to sew and to cook and to play the piano, and they cannot grow and be little helpers if you suck them all the time. You will remember and answer mamma, won't you?"

She would promise, and when she was sound asleep I would go to her and say: "Mamma has come to talk to you about sucking your thumbs. You will hear what I say and answer me, but you will not wake up."

Then I would take her hands and, rubbing the thumbs gently, repeat over and over, in a low, firm tone: "You are not going to such your thumbs any more. You never will suck your thumbs again, will you? You will not put your thumbs into your little mouth again. You will remember what I say to you. Now you are all right. You are sound asleep. You will wake up in the morning well and happy, and you will not suck your thumbs."

I kept this up night after night. Sometimes she would answer me, but oftener she would not, though she would turn over and murmur inarticulately. The habit was not broken at once, but gradually, and at the end of one month I had the satisfaction of seeing her completely cured. I think this could have been accomplished sooner had I given her the suggestions regularly, which unfortunately, I was unable to do.

If you can interest your child in the methods you pursue, so much the better. Then you will have its co-operation, and results will come much more rapidly. Do not think because your little one is only three years old that it will not understand much of the proceedings. That my little girl was interested and understood the methods was proved by the following incident:

A young lady friend who was ill was staying at our home, and every evening Katherine undertook to alleviate her suffering and put her to sleep by the following rigmarole, repeated while stroking her forehead with her little hands: "You haven't any nose, and you haven't any eyes, and you haven't any stomach; and you will be sound asleep when I count ten. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten!"

The next bad habit which I conquered by the same method was that of talking in a high key. Like many other children of a highly nervous temperament, whenever she was excited she would raise her voice to an incredibly high, shrill pitch, and talk very fast. I would correct her by repeating slowly, in a low tone, the words she had used. Then she would repeat them properly. At night I gave her suggestions in the same way I had given them for the thumb-sucking. Before this habit was cured she contracted another and equally bad one. This was the practice of turning her toes in. So for some time I had to give her double suggestions each night.

Along with my suggestion for the inturning toes, I gave her feet and legs a gentle rubbing and pressed the toes outward, while in her waking hours I had her run barefooted as much as possible. It was a comparatively short time before this peculiarity had entirely disappeared.

Biting the nails and allowing the shoulders to fall forward are two bad habits which my little girl did not form, but had she done so I am positive I could have easily overcome them in the same manner. As biting the nails is entirely a nervous affection, and can be checked by a little exertion of the will power, there is no excuse for any mother's allowing her child to mar the beauty and usefulness of its little hands, and nail-biting, if checked early in life, is not likely to recur.

The value of suggestion as a factor in child culture is really unlimited. A few months ago I discovered a tiny decayed tooth in one of the little girl's teeth, and I told her that we would go to Dr. H.——, whom she knew well, and he would put something in to stop the hole up. She never had visited a dentist, and never had any one talk about painful operations, and I did not want her to connect the idea of pain with dentistry, so I told her it would not hurt her. She talked about it very gleefully to visitors who came in and looking forward to going to see Dr. H——.

When we arrived at the dentist's office she saw a lady come out of the operating room and lie down on a couch. She was curious to know what the matter was with her. I explained that she was not feeling well, but did not tell her the cause. Katherine's turn came next, and with no thought of anything except eagerness for the new experience she went through the operation without a quiver. When it was over I said, "It didn't hurt you, did it?" She said, "No," and at once attacked the luncheon I had provided for her.

People ask me "What is suggestion? How do you do it? Don't you think it injurious to disturb a child in its sleep?"

To the first question I answer: Suggestion is an impression which you make upon the mind of another through the medium of one of the senses. Our whole system of education is carried on by suggestion. When used intelligently suggestion becomes an invaluable aid to the parent, teacher and physician. When I say, "You will be a good little girl, because you love mamma and want to please her," I give a positive suggestion which will nine times out of ten be accepted and do good. If I say, "You naughty boy, you bother the life out of me!" I give a negative suggestion, which will be accepted as readily, and which does more toward making a bad man than any parent realizes.

The second question is sufficiently answered in the example given, and to the third question I reply that it does no more harm to disturb a child's sleep in order to give suggestions to him than it does to take him up in the night before he has learned to control the sphincter muscles. In each case you are trying to get rid of a bad habit by forming a good one.

Much remains to be said upon this important method of child training which cannot come within the scope of a newspaper article.

The Bible Teachings and Crime.

The promoters of God-in-the-Constitution would have the Bible the supreme authority in law, beyond which there should be no appeal. The Progressive Thinker has from first to last been opposed to every such movement, and emphatically expressed its opinion. To show what the Bible teaches and the actions which logically flow from its lessons, the following historical resume is here presented in evidence. It was published in a leading journal without comment. We call attention to the fact that however wild and fanatical the crimes committed they were suggested by, and were committed in supposed obedience to the commands of that book:

"The results of an analysis of a series of legal actions involving prosecution for crime supposedly committed under the spell of fanatical religious beliefs serve to illustrate this point. Thus the Convulsionists, a sect existing in Paris about 1760, were wont to crucify members of their order, in emulation of the crucifixion of Jesus, in the belief that the souls of the surviving members would be saved by the sacrifice of their fellows. In 1817, the "Paschelians," an Austrian sect, murdered a man, his wife and their daughter, under the delusion that the trio, who refused to go with the fanatics, were possessed of the devil. On the following day they crucified one of their own number, a girl of 18 years, who had offered herself for the death, in imitation of the death of Jesus, in order to save the souls of her fellow-believers. In 1823 the leader of a Pietistic circle in Switzerland, after having dispatched her sister, who gave her life as a means of saving the souls of her relatives, was crucified by her followers at her own command, in order that she might die, rise again after there days, and restore to life the sister whom she had slain. In 1865 two mothers, adherents of the "Holy Men," slew their sick children, believing them to be victims of demoniacal possession. In 1875 a Hungarian Miller, belonging to the "Nazarenes," killed his son as an offering for his own sins, after the fashion of Abraham. In 1870, in Irkutsch, Russia, one of the "Schismatics" convinced himself by prayer and fasting and much Scripture reading that to save his soul he must be crucified. Accordingly he attempted self-crucifixion, and succeeded so far as the circumstances of the case would permit. In 1830, in the government of Parem, Russia, a peasant killed his child as an offering for sin, and buried the body in an ant hill.

"Likewise, in the government of Vladimir, another peasant killed both of his children in due Abrahamic form, and while the babies bled under the father's knife the devout mother celebrated the service by reading aloud selected portions of the twenty-second chapter of Genesis. In 1854, in the government of Tamboff, Russia, a peasant, convinced that to save his soul a man must have a sin to repent of, killed a neighbor with an ax in order to satisfy this highly imperative condition.

"It is a part of the creed of the "Wanderers," a Russian sect, that Antichrist rules in highplaces there, and that, accordingly, good men must have naught to do with governmental affairs of any sort, continues this writer in the American Journal of Sociology. In conformity with this belief a man murdered, in various ingenious ways, 25 men, women and children, including his own wife and babies, in order to free them from the danger of losing their souls by suffering the contaminating contact of the government census taker. This occurred in 1897. The "Deniers," another quite interesting Russian sect, believe that evil taints all earthly good, and that the only escape is death. In 1825 sixty of these men, strong in the faith, after having murdered their wives and children, permitted themselves to be put to death, one by one, by their leader. The "Scourgers," who also form a widespread and influential sect in Russia, in obedience to the behests of their "saviors," are in the habit of indulging in human sacrifice, cannibalistic feasts, erotic dances and other lewd procedures, as an extremely efficacious method of keeping the hand of evil from off their immortal souls."

Christian Savagery.

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 15.—"I thank God that Allen and Lambeth, over there, and the Methodists in this country are responsible for the present trouble in China. With bowed head I thank God that in some small way I am to blame for the unrest in China to-day. I thank God that each and every one of you and all the Methodists in the country are to blame. It is the itinerary of Methodism."

So spoke Bishop H. C. Morrison at the laying of the corner-stone of the Fourth Avenue Methodist church, corner of Fourth avenue and St. Catherine street, to-day. He continued, saying it was that pushing spirit, that outstretching for the beyond that had sent the Methodist missionaries into the far East.

Bishop Morrison blessed God that the present unrest, as he termed it, had come about. It was just a foreshadowing of the time soon approaching when China would be cut from end to end by the armies of the cross, carrying the gospel to the heathen.

The bishop displays the genuine spirit of savagery that characterized the Jewish Jehovah of the Old Testament when he commanded "his chosen people" to slay and exterminate with ruthless barbarity the "heathen" tribes. It is the spirit that inspired the "Inquisition," the Crusades and numberless "religious wars" that blacken the pages of history.

These religious zealots should be distinctly given to understand that our government is in no sense responsible for their missionary enterprises and is under no obligation to protect and defend them therein; that if they choose to go forth as missionaries among a people that does not want them, they do so at their own personal risk entirely. The people of this country are under no obligation to spend money and the blood and lives of our soldiers, to assist in Christianizing the Chinese or any other people.

Thoughts for Spiritualists to Ponder.

We think no Spiritualist will admit that there is in the essential principles of the church creeds and doctrines, anything that makes them superior to Spiritualism. Comparing the church teachings with Spiritualism as best we may, we find that Spiritualism possesses definite excellences that distinguish and stamp it above the churches—we mean more particularly the self-styled orthodox churches—as entitled to credit for vital principles that accord in the highest degree with pure common sense, pure morality, pure reason, the higher and nobler instincts of enlightened, moralized and spiritualized humanity, and the humane impulses, emotions and feelings of humane human nature.

These distinguishing features give Spiritualism a high and strong vantage ground over orthodoxy. Spiritualists are not called upon to advocate and defend principles and doctrines contrary to morality, to common sense, or the high and humane instincts of noblest, purest and best developed human nature. Spiritualism is in every way consonant with highest and purest ethics. It has no angry tyrant God to worship, adore and defend at the expense of stifling and ignoring the noblest attributes and sentiments of manhood.

The moral instincts of humanity, the seeds of which are implanted by Nature, and the cultivation and growth of which mark the ennoblement and spiritual progress of man, are in accord with the teachings of Spiritualism.

In this respect the Spiritualist differs from the orthodox believer; the heart and finer feelings of humanity in every thoughtful orthodox believer rise in smothered protest against some of the doctrines taught in his creed and in his Bible. When he allows himself to think in accord with his natural sense of justice and right, his inner soul protests against such doctrines, and to maintain his orthodoxy, he is compelled to stifle his highest thoughts and his truest conceptions of right and justice. How many poor orthodox souls thus stifle and smother the thoughts of their higher natures, and make themselves believe all such thoughts are of "the Devil."

It is truly pitiful to contemplate—moral sense stultified and mentality throttled and bound in self-forged chains of creedal slavery. Poor mentally and morally stunted specimens of this sort may be seen on every hand, made so by the doctrines they are taught to believe under penalties of hell torments if they disbelieve or reject them.

We have written these things with a definite purpose. We want Spiritualists to take cognizance of these facts and ponder their purport; study their significance, and what they mean to us as Spiritualists.

And now, by way of application, a question: Is it wise, is it just to ourselves or to others, that the children of Spiritualists shall have their plastic minds indoctrinated in the teachings of orthodoxy, with the consequent mental and moral stultification which are among its natural results?

Not only looking to the welfare of the Cause of Spiritualism, but as well to the mental and moral freedom and expansion of the young minds coming on to the stage of action in life, as citizens and as factors in social and religious affairs, what should be the instruction and education of the children of Spiritualists?

Surely not that quality found in orthodox Sunday-Schools. Surely their young minds should not be imbued with the doctrines of orthodoxy—doctrines that tend to mental and moral stultification.

Surely, again, they should be instructed and educated in the larger and far better ethical principles dominating the Spiritualist cult.

In the Lyceum they will be taught truths that will expand, enlarge, ennoble their mental and moral natures; things that will not shackle mentality and cause moral stultification, but help to strength and freedom of thought and moral growth.

Surely they should be taught what, in the course of true spiritual growth, they will not have to unlearn, and at the cost, perhaps, of much pain and mental strain, free themselves from bondage to false religious ideas.

For instance, how immeasurably better it were, instead of stuffing young minds with the morally hideous monstrosities of the Westminster Catechism, or the teachings of any orthodox sect, to take the course of lessons found in Tuttle's Lyceum Guide. Just as to inhale pure, sweet, fresh air, is better than to breathe into one's lungs the foul miasm of a stagnant swamp; or as it is better to live in the pure air and sunlight, than to dwell in dark, dank and noisome underground caverns.

Spiritualists should take hold of this matter and act from a feeling of love for Spiritualism and from a sense of duty to their children. The children of Spiritualists should never be left to be gathered in by other hands to be offered up as whole burnt offerings on the altars of the Moloch of orthodoxy.

The mental, moral and spiritual interests of the children demand that they shall be instructed, trained and educated in the beautiful philosophy of Spiritualism, and the facts and proofs of spirit continuity and return. For these purposes there are no means so simple and so effectual as the Progressive Lyceum and the Home Circle.

"The Lesson of the Hour."

Discourse by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond,

At Corry, Pa., Sunday, July 29, 1900.

Civilization, as it is called; Christian civilization, as Christians desire to call it, perhaps influences one-third of the population of the earth. That is a very large estimate; we should say it influences less than one-fifth, one-third less than that are professing Christians. We will not say how much smaller the number of real Christians lest it should humiliate you.

One-third of the population of the world has been folded and wrapped in long silence and seeming sleep, and that sleep, until lately had never been disturbed; yet it was a sleep that held the mighty records of Confucius; it was a sleep that held the civilizations of thousands of years. For Chinese philosophers and historians declare, that for more than two hundred thousand years they have a distinct record, and the claim is even made for a much greater period of time. There is no book outside of China that tells when the Chinese Empire began. There is no record outside of China that tells when that nation's civilization was in its infancy. At the door of China no ruler would have ever been admitted, even if he had dared to ask for admission. The great conqueror, Napoleon, paused only there, not daring to set his ambitious foot or his ambitious mind to invading that ancient citadel of civilization. We say civilization, because wherever there are books, wherever there is intelligence, wherever there is mathematics, wherever there is skilled workmanship, wherever there is knowledge of material law, and a religion,

THERE IS CIVILIZATION.

You call them "heathen" because their civilization is not Christian, because it is not modern, because it does not conform with Christian ideas and Christian rule. You declare these people, of whom you know very little, and who but lately set foot upon your soil in large numbers only to be restrained by the proverbially hospitable(?) American legislation, to be heathens.

What is heathenism? It is barbarity; it is cruelty; it, sometimes, is the sacrifice of friends as well as enemies; it is ignorance; it is superstition. Yet the works of Confucius and of the philosophers of China contain the central ideas of all the ethics of the world; they bear the record of a mighty past of learning; they had knowledge of mathematics, and intricate mechanical revealments, and declared the splendors of that astronomy, which in ancient Egypt first came from China, and then disappeared to return again to China. India has arisen and fallen with her knowledge of her sacred Vedas, her knowledge of the Brahmin religion, and the reformation of Buddha, and China has accepted and adopted whatever was best in her civilization, many of the Chinese being Buddhists. But she has not perished with all the other nations of the earth claiming great antiquity. The Chinese civilization and empire is the only one of which you have no record of its having risen and fallen. To-day all Christian nations stand demanding admittance. For what? "For civilization," they say; "for enlightenment," they say.

Was it for civilization and enlightenment that England —knowing her limited empire—started out in her commercial career to conquer the world, slaying those who could not otherwise be conquered, and extending her empire at the point of the bayonet and the mouth of the cannon for the sake of the Sermon on the Mount? Was it for Christian civilization that the Puritan Fathers and the colonies of Virginia landed upon the American soil? "To worship God," they said, "according to the dictates of conscience." When Roger Sherman, William Penn and Daniel Boone illustrated that the North American Indian could be treated with and could be influenced by the higher, more potent message of love, was it Christian civilization that caused the Virginia and New England colonies to wage war upon the Indians, deceiving them, betraying them, setting them the example of treachery and finally slaying them? Was it that made every mile of the territory of the United States a battle ground against these people, instead of enfolding, including and teaching them the higher arts of self-government? Was it Christian civilization that pointed to Great Britain the vast treasure there was in India, and as the defender of the East India Company—now fashioned for more than a hundred years—England waged the war of conquest, and she called it of civilization? To what end? To benefit the East India Company, to raise the standard of her increased exchequer, and to allow the natives to starve by the millions, as they are doing to-day. Was it for Christian civilization that England, under King George III. made war upon the colonies that had sought religious freedom? and failing, the welkin rung with their thought of freedom, and the whole earth was thrilled with what America might be. Sullenly withdrawing, England again in 1812 tried to "civilize" her colonies at the POINT OF THE BAYONET.

They repelled her then, and ever after those colonies established the standard of freedom for themselves and non-interference on the American continent with the rights of any nation seeking for freedom.

Now, because a few missionaries have gone from every Christian nation beneath the sun into China, where they were not wanted, and because they have appealed to the ministers of their different nations to protect them, the civilized world has a war upon its hands, the parallel of which has never been witnessed.

There are between three and five hundred millions of Chinese. There are fewer white men upon the face of the earth. Do you suppose the long-sleeping energies, the discipline in industry and physical endurance and customary privations are going to wait until the civilized world takes possession? Do you not suppose in the complications arising with Russia, circumstances have aided and abetted her until England, busy in South Africa, busy elsewhere and having enough to do without this conflict, slowly and surely as the eye of fate Russia has been encroaching upon the boundaries of the East, striving to open the "eye of the Orient" to her commerce, striving to find an outlet for her wares and to receive in return that which the East can give? If you will trace the lines of railways that point directly to the border that is occupied by the British in Afghanistan, and following the line of the possession of Russia in Siberia toward the East, you will see that the time is coming when she will hold as a cordon all these outposts of the civilized nations near the Chinese empire. China will not dread Russia as much as Germany and England, and—God forbid—America! But America will be drawn into the toils. America has ceased to regard her ancient prowess; has ceased to stand aloof from the monarchies of the earth; has ceased to refuse to allow them to interfere upon this continent with other countries and people seeking for self-government. But people say, "China is behind the age; China will not allow commerce to proceed; China will not yield to civilization." Nevertheless, you know not what you do when you insist upon China's being "civilized." She has no ships with which to come over here to invade your country; she has no navy that is disciplined. But all Europe has been putting guns into her hands ever since her failure to defeat little Japan, and teaching her the "Christian" art of using those guns, as Germany has, and even the United States. Now she is turning the weapons upon her instructors. Do you suppose the Sermon on the Mount prompted this? Do you suppose the great teacher taught this when he said: "Go and preach the Gospel unto all the nations of the earth." Did he mean that the missionaries and then call upon diplomats, and finally upon armies to enforce their demands? "Go without scrip or staff." Did he not know that love would win where hatred and scorning would fail? Did He not know that one missionary clothed in the light of God's love and of the spirit of the Christ could do more than all the cannons in the world toward converting people to Christianity?

But this is not the whole solution. In everything that relates to manual labor; skilled labor of the hand, disciplined labor of the mind, the Chinese are superior to any European or American. Let them open up China to civilization, and the factories, mills and all kinds of manufactories will be theirs. China will sell her wares here for she will be able to produce them one-third, if not one-half, cheaper than you can. Then who will protect your labor, your industry; then what will become of your tariff laws that have been indulged to foster the exclusiveness of manufacturers? There are millions upon millions who want something more to do. They will find that Russia will help them to it; Germany will help them to it; France will help them to it; England will help them to it; America will help them to it, and your manufacturers, commerce, will be in the hands of millions of Chinese, who will know how to use it and the EARTH WILL BE THEIRS.

While the Chinese are hedged in by the walls of China they are powerless, they are slowly declining, their race deteriorates, they have been sustained upon a small amount until they require less to maintain a vigorous existence. But once let loose the shuttles and spindles, the steam engine and the electric force, and lo! all these people will compete with yours. Their hands have been trained for centuries to skillful toil; they are clear and exact mathematicians; they understand the logical force of necessity. They can live upon one-tenth of what the European laborer can; they can live upon one-twentieth of what the American laborer can; and they can in the supply for their daily wants reach the minimum and in labor. We do not say this war can be stopped. But we say, for the conqueror there is conquest; for him who uses arms to force others, there is a force that will return, and if you shut the Chinese out of America he will still compel you to come to his door, and to his terms.

Two must always play at any game, and the game of "civilization" has never been one-sided. Just as soon as it was Egypt fell, and Rome, becoming corrupt, was destroyed. Great Britain, reaching her height of imperial power by the conquest of ancient nations and distant colonies, trembles now in the balance, waging war against a seemingly helpless Christian republic. The Boers have as much right to their government as the Americans had to theirs. The diamond fields of South Africa, the rich mineral treasures there tempted the cupidity of adventurers, until at last England is called upon to defend and sustain them. Who are these people who want another kind of self-government in South Africa? Those who have followed what is called civilization have plunged after those who seek wealth in the diamond fields; then they have quarrels and cannot stay there and defend them, but ask the government to do so, and the whole Christian world looks on and cries—most of them—"Shame!"

America cries "shame!" to that. We speak freely, we are above human praise and human blame. But who cries "shame!" when America wages open war upon the Filipinos? Who cries "shame!" when having driven off the old-time aggressor of the world, ambitious, vaunting Spain, she does not withdraw her armies, warning all nations to keep away, but stays to subjugate the people, who do not understand the use of her weapons; who do not know the meaning of her civilization and who do not want it? What is she doing with Cuba? What is all this thirst for empire? Why this aggressiveness to add to her dominion? Why spread out over the whole world, when she has enough for a thousand years to feed all that will come here and much of the rest of mankind? The granaries of the Northwest, the vast fields and fertile prairies raise enough grain to feed the whole world. What does she want in China? What does she desire in Asiatic waters? Ah! she is not an individual, like Napoleon, whose "vaulting ambition overleaped itself" and ended in St. Helena. But let her beware. The moment she takes on the spirit of the Pharoahs, the moment she carves a way like the Caesars; the moment she seeks for empire, like the Alexanders, the moment she betrays her ancient spirit, that moment

HER DOOM IS SEALED!

We do not say that she will at once perish, but that ideal Columbia, that nation of George Washington, who refused the crown of a king because they had fled from the bondage of a kingdom, that spirit will have taken its flight from the fields and valleys, the beautiful villages and large cities where you love to have your standard waving. There will be no longer the symbol of that nation that refuses any complications with the monarchies of the earth.

Let England be an empire, if she will. Let Russia go on with her imperial dynasty. Let France turn republic or monarchy by turns, as suits her best. Let Italy cry out for the perfect standard of freedom to be there. But where is the ideal land? Where the dream of the poet and philosopher? Where the great hospitable, all-sheltering land? Where the dear Republic whose petals, like flowers of light, lifted themselves unto the skies? Where the land of religious freedom in which all people had "the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience," Mongolian, Parsee, Brahmin, Jew, Christian, any and all,

WHERE IS THAT LAND?

You refuse to have the Chinese at your door. If they are good enough for you to associate with in China, they are good enough here.

What is the civilization of the edict of the Christian, German Emperor, to "spare no one, to take no prisoners?" Then he asks God to bless the soldiers.

Christ upon Olivet and upon Calvary, suffering long the maledictions and persecutions of the Jews, taught not this. George Washington, the Adamses, Madison, Thomas Jefferson, and that infidel, so-called, Thomas Paine, taught not such a religion. "My country is the world, my countrymen all mankind," repeated by that noble, patriotic life, Abraham Lincoln, "My country is the world, and to do good my religion." What is doing good? Slaying people? What is doing good? Persecuting them? When a Christian, in close fellowship with the church, said to your speaker the other day, that this government should take from the Chinese life for life, was that a representation of the true spirit? Are you not living in the Mosaic Dispensation? Is not this "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth?" Do you suppose all this warfare is the flowering out of the highest civilization? Do you understand it to be the best and noblest thing you can do with your sons to send them to battle, especially when your homes are not invaded, and your territory is not in danger? Do you think it most honorable to send them out to gain conquest over people that are not as intelligent, you say, that are not capable of self-government, therefore, you will kill them?

We speak plainly, but why not? The heart of the American people is right. It is the

and it is because of the leaders, the party leaders, and those who seek for political place and power. They do not appeal to the American heart, but they stultify the reason, they obscure the judgment, they turn the heart away so that the people do not know what they are doing. Is it civilization?

Over there in India the best and most enlightened people learned the lesson of peace, of not taking human life, of going about doing good. Buddha wore his yellow robe and his sandals upon his feet, and ministered unto the lowly and downtrodden. Not an insect was harmed, not a bird of the air, no life was destroyed, and every human being that came that way was held to be a brother and a friend. Does that kind of people need "civilizing?" The Vedic came up to the "Parliament of Religions" with the old-time philosophy, telling that the law of brotherhood is inviolate, that the great Infinite Ruler is over all, and he showed you the example and precepts for daily guidance, and he said, "we are all brothers." The Buddhist came from India and showed you the life of the man who left the princely palace, all the conquests that his father attained, only to go out and preach to the lowly, giving them the lesson or philosophy of life. This spread over into China; it went beyond. Its encircling light is revealed in Edwin Arnold's "Light of Asia," showing the truth of the Reformer's teaching. Now in the two thousandth year of the Christian era we reveal no mild mannered Christians, or but few, who raise up and say, this war is not in accord with

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

There are very few who will say, the Christians teach these people the law of loving kindness, to do right as far as they desire it, inspired with our love of liberty.

In fact, in this clamoring at the gateway of the commerce of China the nations of the earth seek for gold and the power of empire.

While in the streets of New York, Chicago and London children are starving, and squalor, poverty, wrong and sin abound, let us keep our missionaries at home. Keep them here, until there is not a child that does not know the name of love; keep them here until there is not an outcast in our cities; keep them here until, like the Salvation Army, those true home missionaries; they go down into the slums of the great cities and teach people to sing songs of praise. Let us have an army like that. It is a greater civilizer than Gatling guns, bayonets and rifles.

The world has been on the verge of this great crisis. Year by year that which is coming has been predicted through this instrument; and you have been told that this is not the way of the highest light and truth; that down from their blessed heights, ever present in their ministry of light, the counselors of the nation warn you against this step. Those who presided over the first councils of this government turn aside in sadness to see that Mammon usurps the name of Freedom; that men would serve Mammon more than they would the Goddess of Liberty.

Over there, in the name of Christ, the Germans, French, English and Russians, all with separate aims and opposite intentions, seek to gain admission to this empire of the heathens. What will you do with the Chinese? You will establish schools. You will teach them how to be educated in different ways. Germany sent her guns and instructors. They are now profiting by that instruction. They are ready pupils; their imitation is great; they will understand what you mean by civilization; they will be civilized to your heart's content before you know it. Bear that in mind. The great light of the world is not all in the Anglo-Saxon race; the learning is not all here.

You are young. You are arrogant, yet the philosophy of the older schools is still in the world, as is the Sermon on the Mount, and that race which will best and most swiftly unfold to its highest precepts will be the chosen race. Day by day, week by week, year by year the

to the sun and the earth yields her products unto the toil of man's hands. But thousands and thousands of acres are untilled, and the time will come when you cannot compete with the swift hands, ready brains, disciplined patience and endurance of this mighty horde that you are setting free upon the civilized world. Albeit you shut the Eastern and Western gates of America, but if you go to China she will not have any need to come here.

So the world is in the great swirl and whirlwind of war, and there will be a new call for the "flower of the land" of Europe and America. Soon no young men will be left, only the feeble and infirm men, the women and children. Where will your counting-rooms be. Where your workshops, your factories and railways that need hands to toil? Lo! the old world minions will come to answer your petition. Then who will be the tillers of the soil, the, the workers in the factories and other fields of labor? Those whom you call heathens.

Look what the Irish have done in this country! They were oppressed, downtrodden and outcast; they looked to this land for freedom. They could not gain it at home; they could not gain it in England. What would they have done if it had not been for this land of freedom? They found here work; they found here education and opportunity and have grown to be a part of the governing intelligence of this country. Look at the Poles, the Scandinavians, the oppressed of all nations; by and by these will grow up; these will be educated; these will be part of the governing powers. Look at the Jews, the outcasts from all the nations of earth, and now winning by industry, and by the peculiar faculty which they know, the wealth of the earth; the Rothschilds in Europe and a large Jewish population in America, all are becoming American citizens. We say, that it was to mould all these nations into citizenship here. To teach them freedom in the culture of the soil, free education, "equal rights for all and privileges for none." Now she joins with empires, with monarchies, with armies and navies of the world to conquer.

Alas! alas! The civilization of the Sermon on the Mount, it was known would not prevail. When Jesus said: "I come not to bring peace, but the sword," he knew that truth and righteousness would not then win the day. Neither will they now, that stand upon any height and say: "Woe unto ye, scribes, pharisees and hypocrites." The scribes, pharisees and hypocrites turn, and the words of Olivet are betrayed, and the voice of truth again is not heard in your midst, and the sweet lives of your children are not heeded; your names are not revered and respected; your women will not be clothed, your men will fade and fall at the head of landing armies, and lo! poverty like that which reigns on the bare, barren and desolate moors of Ireland will be here; and lo! old people will mourn for the young lives that have gone out and left the home nest desolate. By and by nowhere over all the plains and prairies will the land be free, but all will be held in entail, and rentals will be exacted. The New England, Middle States and Western farmer will be no more. The boys that desert the plowshare and seek the life of commerce have gone out to war and perished by fever or battle. Where then, where, is the boasted civilization of the world? Up from the great shadow comes only one light, the light of a perfect and divine future that shall find the race and the people that love Freedom for its own sake, truth for its own sake, liberty for its own sake, education for its own sake, and the spirit of civilization—which is the spirit of gentleness—for its own sake; and upon some other Olivet, fair and bright, this truth will shine and gleam and glow. You who teach your sons the use of fire-arms before you teach them the meaning of liberty and love, will have to pass away, and a new race will appear, born of all the nations of the earth. They will come up gladly to the house of praise and the house of rejoicing. There will not be one, even the least of these nations of the earth, that will not be respected and loved and taught the way of peace.

Civilization is a circle, it moves in vast cycles. People lapse into barbarism by corruption; Egypt is not. Ancient Rome is not. India will rise as a new giant in her strength; and this China, shut out from the rest of the world, will show you where she stands.

Bending above all the nations, and above your own at this hour is a mighty congress of patriots, and the fathers of your country, the leaders to freedom, seek to guide the people. Will you be led? Or, falling into the pitfalls of Mammon, will the nation go down in ignominy and shame like the nations of the past?

VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY.

Lectures by the Swami Vivekananda, on Raja Yoga; or Conquering the Internal Nature, and other subjects; also, Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms, with commentaries and a copious glossary of Sanskrit terms. Revised and enlarged, 12mo., Cloth, $1.50. Raja Yoga is an ancient system of Indian Philosophy, and one of the four chief methods that the Vedanta Philosophy offers to obtain freedom and perfection. Swami Vivekananda became a familiar figure in several American cities during the three years following the Parliament of Religions at Chicago; he was cordially received in America, where the breadth and depth of his teachings were soon recognized. His teachings are universal in their application. The book is cheap at $1.50. For sale at this office.

SCIENCE OF THE SOUL

BY

LOREN ALBERT SHERMAN.

Sets forth the Philosophy of Existence, with detailed evidence. It appeals to Christians and Spiritualists alike, as it demonstrates the truth of the spirit manifestations of Jesus Christ, upon which the Christian religion is based, as well as the actuality of modern spirit manifestations. Its title page claims that the book is

A SCIENTIFIC DEMONSTRATION of the Existence of the soul of man as his conscious individuality independently of the physical organism; of the CONTINUITY OF LIFE and the ACTUALITY OF SPIRIT RETURN.

The first eleven chapters are devoted entirely to manifestations of the soul incarnate, with a clear exposition of the psychid philosophy.
The succeeding four chapters set forth the philosophy of the Infinite.
The last twenty chapters are devoted to an exposition of spiritual philosophy, with evidence in detail, much of it being personal experiences of the author.

The price of the book is $1. For sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker.

WAR--CHRISTIANITY.

A Freethinker Gives His Views.

Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, said the Dakota Indians once had a war dance near a mission house. He went to Wabaska, the chief, and said: "Wabaska, you asked me to send you a missionary and I sent him, and now you are having a scalp dance. You killed an enemy, and the Great Spirit is angry with you and will send you to a bad place." The old chief drew his pipe from his mouth and replied: "White man goes to war with his own brother and kill more men than Wabaska can count all his life. Great Spirit smiles and says: 'Good white man; he heap good; he has my book; I have good place for him by and by.' The Indian is a wild man, he has no big spirit book; he kills one bad Indian enemy, and has scalp dance; Great Spirit heap mad, and says bad Indian; he put Indian in bad place and burn him heap much by and by. Ugh! Wabaska don't believe what white man says."

For good reasons the American Indian has lost faith in the professions of Christians. He knows they preach peace and kindness, but practice war and have shed rivers of blood. The "heathen Chinee" is finding out what the Indian learned many years ago. Buddha taught a gospel of kindness and peace; so did Confucius long before the Christian Era began, and billions of their followers practiced their precepts. Jesus also said: "Love one another; resist not evil; if thy enemy smites thee on one cheek turn to him the other." Are Christian nations following the teachings of Christ more closely than "the heathen" obeyed the commands of their great teachers? For eighteen hundred years Christians(?) have persecuted Jews unto death, and deluged the earth with Hebrew blood. They have kidnaped and enslaved millions of negroes, and they are now armed to the teeth ready to tear each other to pieces for territory and trade. Like Mohammed they proselyte with the sword. To-day Christian England is overrunning the Transvaal, laying it waste and killing the Christian Boers. What for? India was conquered and Great Britain's excuse was that the gospel must be spread in that heathen land. To-day eleven millions of those subjugated and peaceful people are starving and dying because they have been robbed of their lands and of their substance. Christian America is slaying the Filipinos and calling it "benevolent assimilation in the interest of Christian civilization." Several years ago Christian England forced the "heathen Chinee" to open her markets to the opium trade; the Emperor pleaded on his knees that his people be spared and that opium be kept out of China. England replied with cannon and grape shot and the awful opium curse was fastened on that country. Christian Europe sent missionaries to the heathen with Bibles, but also provided them with guns and powder. China was compelled to make one concession after another in which much territory was surrendered and harbors and ports and "open door privileges" were turned over to the Christian countries.

The gentle Nazarene said: "Take no thought for the morrow what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink or wherewithal ye shall be clothed," but his professed followers regard those teachings as theoretical only, and not content with the concessions of China, set about planning how they would carve up that country and parcel it out among themselves. The heathen revered the graves of his ancestors and was satisfied with the teachings of Confucius and Buddha, and was not ready to be "sliced up." So he began to eject the Christians and now war rages and blood is flowing.

Gen. W. T. Sherman said: "War is hell." If he was correct, then Christian(?) nations have been industriously engaged in raising it for centuries and are still in the same line of business. The writer cannot conceive that Jesus came to nurture the war spirit and to thus establish the kingdom of Satan on earth instead of the kingdom of God and peace. His gospel was a gospel of peace on earth, good will to men. It looks very much like we still have a great deal of spurious Christianity in the world. The so-called Christian nations are puffed up by pride and self-righteousness and bigotry, and they are ready to kill their enemies or even their friends, for revenge, or to plunder them for gain. Recently the Emperor of Germany is reported as saying in his parting address to his soldiers: "I send you to China to wreak out vengeance. Take no prisoners, but kill all."

It is quite possible that we are prejudiced against China and are judging her 400,000,000 people from the few who have come to this country. America would not like to be judged by some of its adventurer representatives who go abroad. China invented printing and the compass. Her laws require children of any age to honor and obey and tenderly care for parents. There are thousands of hospitals for the homeless and unfortunate. Even public hospitals are maintained where old wornout horses and other animals are cared for. That country has been at peace with the world for centuries. They are peaceful, industrious, frugal, hospitable, and had but little drunkenness before England flooded them with opium and whiskey. They have great libraries, universities, and art galleries, and they are skilled in manufacturing china-ware and beautiful textile fabrics. They have but few paupers and but little crime. They are "heathens" from the European and American standpoint, but how do we know but that they are working out the problem of life according to the divine plan. Certainly they are our brothers and we have no right to murder them and rob them.

So far, "Christian countries" have not yet brought heaven down to earth. We have our enormously rich and our poor in squalor and crime; we have our unjust laws; our corrupt congresses and courts; our murders and cruelties; here crime is increasing every year. Drunkenness curses Europe and America like a scourge; speculation, gambling and prostitution reign with a high hand in our every town and city; prize fighting is becoming a popular national amusement. It illy becomes us to boast of our great superiority over our fellow men of other lands.

In every church in Europe and America the Lord's prayer is repeated every Sunday: "May thy kingdom come on earth and thy will be done as in heaven," but are Christian nations trying to live that prayer? Will the kingdom of heaven be ushered in with cannon, and swords, and bayonets? Will the will of God be done on earth as it is in heaven by adopting the advice given by the Emperor of Germany to his troops? While "Christian nations" are boasting of their superiority and are strutting up and down the earth claiming to be the only Christian peoples and all others are heathens, are they quite sure they are true Christians themselves?

ACROSTIC.

Precious is the dream of sages.
Reaching down the fleeting ages—
Over death to be victorious,
Gaining life eternal, glorious:
Reach at last Hope's full fruition,
Escaping every vile condition.
Soul! Serene, triumphant, move
Steadfast toward thy goal above.
In thy short span of life on earth,
Value that alone which hath true worth,
Enjoying thus the true New Birth.

That which makes "our lives sublime,"
Holding sway throughout all time,
Is the spirit, soul, or mind.
Not to perish when this mortal
Kneels and passes through Death's portal,
Entering but Life's wider sphere,
Released from lowly bondage here.

WE call special attention to The Next World Interviewed, one of our special premiums. We are enabled to furnish it to our readers at the price announced in our premium list, from the simple fact that Mr. Horn donated the plates of the book to us. We have sent out thousands of copies of this book, and it has been well received everywhere. It should be circulated by the millions among all classes of Spiritualists. The seven books that we are offering to Spiritualists as premiums contain a large storehouse of useful knowledge on Spiritual and Occult subjects. You should have them on the shelves of your library where you can have access to them at any time. Read carefully our premium announcement.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

The Progressive Thinker goes to press early Monday morning of each week. Camp-meeting reports should always reach the office on the previous Friday or Saturday at the very latest. Bear that in mind.

The Chicago Chronicle says: "The people of Salem, Mass., are flocking to see a young woman who declares that she is bewitched. Her name is Carrie Peabody Bly. She lives part of the time in an ancient house built more than 100 years ago, an addition to the famous house at North and Essex streets. The greater part of the day, however, Miss Bly spends in the witch-house itself, either in the upper chamber or in the garret beneath the roof. There Miss Bly says she holds communion with their spirits, goes into trances and flies off into space and does numerous other things which have startled her townfolk. She is controlled, she says, by the spirit of Nathaniel Hawthorne and the spirits of Betsy Williams, and other noted personages hover about her. The day before Chas. H. Hoyt received his freedom from the insane asylum in which he had been placed in Connecticut, Miss Bly says she saw the spirit of his dead wife, Caroline Miskel Hoyt, and she gave her a message to send to her husband. 'I had never heard of the name of Hoyt,' said Miss Bly, 'but the name came to me as distinctly as could be. She said that she would not be happy until the judge had released her husband, who, she said, was not insane.'"

Mrs. L. J. Lewis writes: "When I take up a secular paper all I see of importance is China, its wars and massacres; but why send our missionaries to foreign ports and sacrifice blood, when we have so much missionary work to do at home. Before the gift of second sight, or clairvoyant sight as some call it, I was persuaded, at one of the Chinese Sunday-Schools of Chicago, to take a pupil. As I neither belong to any denomination nor profess to know much about the Bible, I hesitated; but I realized after a little while that all they wanted to be American citizens, was their freedom and the first rudiments of the English language—A, B, C, how to put them together to write and spell. One of my Chinese pupils, not of the acute kind, came to see me before the World's Fair, and said he knew the Bible all through, and wanted to be my interpreter when I went to China. But the one thing that seemed to impress me very much, was that they were more polite and appreciated what was done for them, more than our own American children. It seems hard to say so, but we have to acknowledge truths sometimes. I find my best thoughts come when I take time to rest my brain and give my departed friends who were independent in this life, time to come to me and enlighten me as to mysteries of the past, present or future, as far as necessary for me to know."

The Chicago Dispatch says: "Bearing the appearance of a haunted man and staggering from the lack of food and rest, which he had not had for nearly five days, Frank Smith, wanted by the Chicago police for the murder of John Barnum, Sunday night, July 15, entered the central police station in Milwaukee, Wis., the following Friday afternoon and gave himself up. The story of Smith's flight from Chicago, penniless and ghost-ridden, came out in the Desplaines street police court, where he was arraigned. He confessed his crime and a continuance was granted him. The belief that the wraith of Barnum was pursuing him and haunting him wherever he wandered, caused the fugitive to pass sleepless nights, pulling his hair and gnashing his teeth while tramping through the woods along the shore of Lake Michigan toward Milwaukee. When Smith entered the police station in Milwaukee he asked for something to eat, which was given him. When he had finished the meal he asked for Detectives Broderick and Switzer, of the Milwaukee police force. Detective Broderick is a brother of Senator Broderick of the West Side in Chicago. When Smith was ushered before the detectives he said: 'Broderick, I know your brother in Chicago. I have been mixed up in a shooting affray there, and the reason I asked for you is that I may give myself up, as the police are after me now. I cannot stand it any more,' continued Smith, 'his face is in front of me wherever I go and it will drive me mad.'"

Martha A. Brown writes from Sheridan Park, Ill.: "The three premium books came duly to hand and for which please accept my thanks. I shall only be repeating what every one has said, who has, like myself, received the premiums which you so liberally give to all the subscribers to your valuable paper, how can you afford to give so much for such a small sum, for I think the paper alone is worth the price, and I would not be without it if I had to make a great sacrifice. In reading the experience of Rufus W. Peckham, in Vol. 1, who was lost in the ville du Havre, and who was a friend of my husband, I was reminded of the description given at my own house of the loss of the steamer Arctic, by a medium who gave in pantomime the full account, all of which was verified by myself, on telling to a friend at whose House I dined the day before the Arctic sailed on her last trip."

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

D. A. Richardson, of Paulding, Ohio, writes: "The Progressive Spiritualist Society of Payn will hold a grove meeting in Barnes' grove, east of Payn, on September 2. Mrs. Marion Carpenter will have the meeting in charge. Her husband is expected to be present."

On July 25, Samuel Blodget, of Grafton, N. D., and Mrs. N. Reid, of Vicksburg, Mich., were united in marriage at the Palace Hotel, in Colgary, on their journey to Alberta, N. W. T., where they expect to make their future home.

The Indianapolis (Ind.) News says of the report of Chesterfield camp: "The report of the treasurer shows the receipts were $4,000 and the expenses $3,000. P. B. Milspaugh has been chosen president again, his election being a victory for those in control of the camp this year. Miss Flora Hardin, of Anderson, was elected secretary, and F. J. McComber, of Anderson, treasurer."

In discussing the responsibility for the present situation in China, Sydney Brooks, an English traveler, the son of a member of Parliament and an authority on far Eastern affairs, said: "One of the first and most noticeable problems confronting the powers when they set about the work of reconstruction in China will be the missionary difficulty. Perhaps it would be going too far to say that the present crisis is solely due to a revolt from the evangelical propaganda we have forced China to license. Missionaries may plead with some force that the political pressure of the West upon the East, the seizure of Kiao-Chou, the alienation of Port Arthur, Manchuria, Wei-Hai-Wei, and the endless demands for 'concessions' are the real occasion of this semi-national rising. But we have to get down beneath the superficial and transitory causes into the permanent reasons for the Chinese hatred of foreigners. And that missionaries have a great deal to do with that is shown by the unanimity with which they and their converts are singled out for the first violence of attack. To the Chinaman the missionary is at once a mystery and a menace. His presence is a mystery; what he can possibly want in the country is a mystery; his preachings seem aimed at the foundations of all Chinese morality and social organization, of all that has made and kept the empire a whole. He is obviously supported and protected by foreign arms. A being therefore at once unaccountable, inexplicable, formidable, and aggressive, he attracts not only the instinctive antipathy of one race for another race, but whatever more can be engendered by fear, and ignorance, and superstition, and ceaseless suspicion on the one part and blundering provocation on the other."

Hon. F. P. Baker, of Topeka, Kansas, writes: "You are doing a noble work. I trust that you will be able to hold it up indefinitely. I don't see how you can succeed financially, but it seems you do."

"What was known as the Shepard house, on the old bay road, near Easton, Mass., was for many years reputed to be haunted by the ghost of a former occupant of the house who had hanged himself," writes Samuel S. Kingdon of "The Haunted Houses of New England," in the August Ladies' Home Journal. "Strange stories are told of the annoyances experienced by various tenant at all hours of the night, but they were never favored with a sight of the intruder. In one of the chambers was an old-fashioned corded bedstead, and on several occasions its occupant was awakened suddenly by finding himself on the floor, the cords which sustained the bed having been removed by unseen hands without breaking or cutting. Many times the whole family were alarmed by what sounded like a wagon load of stones falling from a great height on to the roof, threatening to crust it. These disturbances became so frequent that it was with difficulty that tenants could be found for the house, so much dread did people have of ghostly intruders."—Columbus (Ohio) Journal.

Maria Buchanan writes from New Zealand: "I acknowledge the receipt of your premium books, which came to hand all right last month, and for which I thank you very much. We are often pleased that The Progressive Thinker came under our notice to become subscribers to so instructive and grand a paper in every sense. There are only a few 'of us' in this district as yet, but we are in hopes of the beautiful truth spreading in time. It is very hard to disabuse people's minds of superstition. I am also pleased to tell you that Mrs. Burgess' books came all right and she is very thankful for them."

Is it tempting Providence? President Kruger's Volksraad once discussed the wickedness of firing cannon to bring down rain, though what has struck most scientific observers is the uselessness rather than the wickedness of this proceeding. In Italy, however, cannon have been used during the last month for an exactly contrary purpose, and with good results. At Rogeno (Como), where much damage has been done to the vines in previous years, fourteen cannon opened fire on some clouds that were gathering for hail, with the result that nothing fell but a little sleet here and there. In several districts where cannon were fired for dispersing the hail the results exceeded all expectation, whereas round Alessandria, where this precaution was not taken, the vineyards were completely destroyed.

Several leading Spiritualists of Belmont, N. Y., are engaged in securing leases of land on the east side of the river road between Belmont and Scio, for the purpose of drilling for oil. The first well is to be located on the Ingraham farm higher up than any have yet been located. It is stated that Homer Elliott, an experienced driller from Wellsville, will have charge of the business. The Spiritualists, it is alleged, state that the spirits of departed people who were acquainted in the vicinity where the well is to be located before they left this terrestrial sphere have assisted in designating the place where there are the most favorable indications

The Indianapolis Sentinel speaks of the Chesterfield Camp: "To-day was the largest week day since the opening of the Indiana Association of Spiritualists' camp-meeting. A large per cent of the 8,000 present Sunday remained, and every available space is filled. The attendance increases as the meetings progress, and the executive committee has been forced to plan extra accommodations. The addresses of to-day were by Mrs. Cahill, Mobile, Ala., and J. Clegg Wright. There will be another lecture by Swami Abhedananda, the celebrated Hindoo philosopher. It has been announced for Wednesday afternoon. Ignatus R. Donnelly, of Minnesota, will also deliver a series of lectures. Tests by C. L. Ainsworth are attracting wide attention."

Mrs. Olive Whitney writes from Oakland, Cal.: "The three volumes of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World to hand all right. Although I have not had time to more than glance through them, I know they contain a world of knowledge."

Herbert H. Patrick writes: "I have read the premium books, Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World. I think they are the most interesting books which you have sent out as premiums, and they should be in every person's library in the land, as they clear away the mist and superstition which has so long blinded the minds of the people. They reveal the beautiful truths of Spiritualism, and guide the people how to lead a good and harmonious life on earth, and when they reach the spirit world to have a grand start to search the unlimited realms of knowledge. I would not be without The Progressive Thinker for any price. It is the best paper to furnish a starving mind with food that was ever published. All Spiritualists should be as proud of the grand work you are doing as I am, clearing away ignorance and superstition, and furnishing in its place truth and wisdom."

L. H. Henley writes from Marshall, Texas: "They are a live set, these investigators of Spiritualistic phenomena, and to prove this I want to state a few facts. Some time ago I wrote an account of a seance held here which I attended. I did not embellish, I only stated facts in connection therewith, and I dared to mention a certain minister of this city who had the nerve to attend, and to state facts without apology to anyone. What I wrote was true. Now from every state and territory nearly come letters to this preacher, to the postmaster, and to the county officers, asking about my sanity and my reputation for veracity. Now, the pointer is clear, and a kind word to all. When you write to The Progressive Thinker, don't you for a moment expect gratifications by delivering yourselves of a big story, thinking it will never be read in your section, and that the soul-hungry folks in other sections and states will not do their best to get at the fountain whence came the statements. I've tried 'em, and they have fished in every nook. I do think, however, such matters of interest should be reported, but let us prepare to face our statements made at home and abroad when we are making them, just as I have done and am willing again to do."

Geo. F. Perkins, speaker and test medium, writes: "We have discontinued our meetings at Milwaukee for the present. Our audiences have been as large as anyone could expect through the summer. We have many friends in that city, and The Progressive Thinker has visited many families through our distribution. Our address until further notice is 3558 Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago, Ill."

Mrs. Izora C. Chandler says: "We claim to be the superiors of animals. In some respects we are, but we can learn much from dogs. They serve us faithfully, they show their gratitude for the smallest kindness and their faith in us is sublime. Dogs feel love and hatred. They experience despair, they have patience that is angelic, they know the pangs of jealousy, and they show a desire to help and comfort that is more than human. Man has a will. So have they. They are capable of obedience, whether present or absent from the one giving the command. They endure self-denial for the object of their affection. I believe that the possession of all these indicates a soul and that all souls have a future state."

W. W. Aber writes from Delphos, Kansas: "I will resume my work in Spring Hill, Kansas, the first week in September. I have so many letters of inquiry that I think people must be interested in the work."

Mrs. M. W. Ingraham, of Manhattan, Kansas, Box 945, wishes to correspond with mediums and Spiritualists who intend sending their children to the Kansas State Agricultural College. Will furnish board and rooms, and also the privilege of sitting in developing circles once a week.

Dr. L. H. Stansbury writes: "I wish to ask some information of the mediums who read your paper. About one year ago we formed a circle of seven members here for the purpose of materializations. We progressed finely; we could see etherealized spirits moving about the room and in the cabinet. We could see them plain enough to be able to recognize some of them, but of late, notwithstanding we have met regularly and had the same members present, we have gradually declined in spirit phenomena until we have finally got to where we hardly have any manifestations whatever. I also developed a high state of telepathy until I could actually distinguish the voice of certain departed friends. That also has nearly entirely failed. My sister had a peculiar gift of seeing spirits in daylight, so plain as to be able to recognize a number of them; that has also nearly played out. What is the matter with us? I do hope that some one will be able to tell us where our trouble is. I also wish some good medium and lecturer would visit our town, which has a population of about 5,000, and help our little band. Address me at Longview, Texas."

A more contemptible man never lived than Dowie. The Chicago Tribune of August 20, says of him: As a result of a sensational address denouncing all Christian religions made by Elder Volvia of the Dowie Church, Cincinnati, O., one of the most prominent members of the local branch publicly announced that he had withdrawn from the body, and delivered a scathing denunciation of Dowie himself. Mr. Davidson, the bolter, said he had been identified with the church for years, but after Elder Volvia's tirade he was done with the Dowieites. Continuing he said: 'They preach against worldliness, yet there is more worldliness displayed among them than in any other church I know of. I recently went to Chicago and found there that Dowie was building a city, the splendor of which will surpass ancient Babylon; also that he is living in a condition of luxury not enjoyed by Kings and other potentates. He declares himself to be the reincarnation of John the Baptist, but, unlike the famous evangelist, he is laying his hands on everything within reach. Recently he departed for Europe in a private train and engaged staterooms on board a steamer at the enormous cost of $1,500. The money all comes from the pockets of the poor, and yet he says he is carrying a glorious work and is following in the footsteps of the lowly Nazarene. I am done with them for all time.'"

H. W. H. writes of the Ottawa (Kans.) Camp: "Attendance extra good, and the last three days were crowded. D. W. Hull was at his best, on the subject of 'Bible Spiritualism.' Mrs. A. L. Lull's lectures and tests were fine. Mrs. E. E. Hammond and Mrs. Wagner held a test circle, and were liked very much. Mr. B. F. Hayden, trance lecturer, was well received. Mrs. Hayden's tests were good and often received with cheers by the listeners, being pointed and convincing. The Ottawa Spiritualist camp scored a success in every respect. Lecturers, mediums and the people were all satisfied with their outing, and will come again next year. The programme for literary entertainment was well rendered, consisting of instrumental and vocal music, dancing, comic lectures by Elder Black. All were admonished to take The Progressive Thinker and hurrah for J. R. Francis. Officers elect, H. W. Henderson, president; Cyrus Beard, vice-president; Jacob Hey, secretary, R. N. Kur, treasurer; E. A. Carpenter, superintendent of grounds."

Annie Easton writes: "The four books for which I wrote you, arrived yesterday, for which accept my most heartfelt thanks. They abound in truths that should elevate and bless all who read them. I am proud and overjoyed to possess them along with your valuable paper."

A dispatch from Vienna says: "The Vaterland, which is a journal usually well informed on all Catholic church matters, claims to have received from reliable sources in Rome information which justifies it in publishing a statement containing the following six declarations: 1. The Holy Father held no sacred mass for King Humbert. 2. The Holy Father neither authorized Cardinal Ferrari to offer condolence in his name nor sent a telegram himself. 3. When he heard that it was said that the King had not been excommunicated, he was indignant, and referred to the constitution of the Holy See. 4. As the King had not been personally excommunicated a church burial was permitted, owing to important reasons, among which was the pressure exerted by the Italian government. 5. The archbishop of Genoa, whom the government had asked to officiate when he applied to the Cardinal Vicar, received no refusal, but also no permission, and his officiating simply was not opposed. 6. The peculiar prayer of Queen Margherita was not approved by the Holy See, but by the Bishop of Cremona, who is an intimate friend of the royal family, and in this matter the last word has possibly not been spoken yet." Now it does not matter what the miserable old Pope does—he cannot injure the spirit of Humbert in the realms above. The Pope is only a very small specimen of humanity—exceedingly small.

Lily Dale Camp.

Sun, moon and stars seem to have entered into a combination with the earth sphere at the present writing, to make the closing weeks of Cassadaga camp even more beautiful than the preceding ones have been. This morning, Aug. 14, is as near perfect as a morning in summer can be, and this is as near a perfect place to enjoy such a morning as one could find. Not alone the place, but the people, seem to be approaching perfection as fast as it is desirable to do.

This week closed Prof. Lockwood's work here for this season. Mr. Lockwood has always been popular at this camp, and this year has added even greater laurels to his already magnificent wreath.

The board of directors decided to continue the classes, another year which were conducted by J. Clegg Wright here this season, also Prof. Lockwood's services have been secured to help on the educational movement, and pledges have been made to secure the required aid for such schools to be established permanently. Judge Osmer, of Franklin, Pa., pledges twenty-five dollars a year as a starter. Doubtless others will follow, and Cassadaga Camp will soon be as renowned for its educational advantages, as it has heretofore been as a Spiritualistic center.

Moses Hull's school will also be continued here, and it is safe to say no other camp in the Union will have the advantages to offer to the public that Camp Cassadaga will offer in the year 1901.

Wednesday was Woman's day, or better called, political equality day, Rev. Anna Shaw being the star speaker of the day. In the morning there was a symposium in which Miss Shaw, Mrs. Clara Watson, Mrs. McDonald, Mrs. Brewer, and Mrs. Mary Webb Baker took part. Miss Kate O. Peate presided as chairwoman, at both sessions, very gracefully performing her duties. Miss Shaw is too well known to need any eulogy of ours. Sounds of applause attested the appreciation of a large audience. This closes her work for this season.

The dance in the evening, under the management of the ladies, was a decided success. Taking all in all, perfect weather, large attendance, and the excellence of the program, this day has excelled any of the equality days of previous years.

Hon. Dr. Montague and Thos. Grimshaw occupy the rostrum for the balance of the week.

Marion Carpenter, Mr. Grumbine, Francis Edgar Mason and Lyman C. Howe are the speakers for the last week, making a strong array of talent from beginning to end.

There has been some failure on the part of some of the speakers engaged to meet their engagement, causing some disappointment, and some unjust criticism of the management, but in justice to all I will state that the board of directors have done all in their power to have the programme carried out as advertised and are no way blamable for unavoidable failures. There has been superior talent to draw from to fill vacancies, and none need complain.

MARY WEBB-BAKER.

LOVE MUST BE WON.

Love is not free to take, like sun and air,
Nor given away for naught to any one,
It is no common right for men to share
Like all things precious it is sought and won.

So if another is more loved than you,
Say not, "it is unjust," but say, "if she
Has earned more love than I, it is her due,
When I deserve more it will come to me."

But if your longing be for love indeed,
I'll teach you how to win it, a sure way;
Love and be lovely, that is all you need
And what you wish for will be yours some day.

Vicksburg Camp, Mich.

Before the days of camps Spiritualists took to the woods and held three-day grove meetings; those early out-door gatherings were well attended, they were free and harmonious, as social as a family gathering. The beautiful grove that surrounds us, reminds me of a grove meeting, the first that I ever attended, near Beloit, Wis. The Vicksburg camp grove responds quickly to every touch of improvement, and many substantial additions have been made this season, which give to the grounds and camp, character and permanency.

The seven days of extreme heat have passed, a shower has cooled and purified the breath of life, no extra sickness on account of the heat, the dust is laid for a time, and all the campers are thankful.

The speakers upon the camp program, Mrs. Carpenter and Mr. Tisdale, filled their appointments to the gratification and satisfaction of the campers, during the noted hot week. Because of the heat the arrivals upon Saturday and Sunday were cut short for the morning meeting, but the attendance was much increased in the afternoon, filling the large auditorium to overflowing; this was pleasant for Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, of New York, as it was her first appearance in her week's engagement at the Vicksburg camp.

In addition to the lectures, Children's Day and four regular health lessons, we have had public and private tests, music, dancing and the usual social harmonious gatherings that are the joy and life of this camp.

The N. S. A. was introduced as a subject of much importance and was discussed without fear or favor; there were no muzzles, no fear by those who took part that they would lose a job if they dared to freely express their opinions; the laity were quite unanimous in their expressions of opposition to the present management.

The home in Washington, D. C., the missionary work, and the ten thousand dollar annual meeting of the association is not wanted and will not be sustained by one in ten of the intelligent Spiritualists of America; not one in twenty at this writing, endorse the creed, or dogmas of the leaders. Spiritualists should see and recognize that we are in a crisis, the revolution is on, not coming on, action is demanded, morally, physically, and Spiritually. Something more than theories, speculation and selfishness is the demand at this date. Politics and religions of every brand and label are on trial—"where are we Spiritualists at?" Where do we stand? Does partisanship hold and control us? Are we free, or are we subjugated? These questions must be answered; Spiritualists ought to be free and clear-headed on these subjects.

DR. M. E. CONGER.

Lake Brady, O.

Woman's Day is now upon us with its beautiful decorations of yellow, its sunflowers nodding at us in the fresh morning breeze. Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley is the speaker and Mrs. E. W. Sprague presides, but all the bright women in camp have rallied around them and unanimously passed a resolution at their preliminary meeting, the first one offered, to invite the men to co-operate in making Woman's Day a success.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague are fair samples of this masculine and feminine co-operation. It is refreshing to witness their devotion to each other and their co-operation in bringing before the world through their lectures and tests, the grand truths of immortality. Our genial chairman, D. A. Herrick, filled the rostrum the other day, or rather, his body did as speaker, for his own personality was entirely absent, for he described scenes in the spirit world showing a knowledge of occult laws with which Brother Herrick in his every-day life has no dealing. In voice, gesture and form of expression, he was another individual.

The phenomena and philosophy at Lake Brady has thus far been about equally balanced through representatives of both, and in last interviews with people leaving the grounds who came here as investigating skeptics, they have expressed themselves as convinced of the truth of spirit return.

G. W. Renner and D. A. Herrick gave a joint trumpet seance at the Woman's building last evening, in which three trumpets were used. Voices frequently sounded from all three of them at the same time. Each trumpet would be placed so close to the individual receiving the message that it would not interfere with others doing the same.

MRS. M'CASLIN.

A Churchman's Errors.

One correspondent in your valuable paper asserts Christianity has raised woman from her condition of servitude, and placed her on an equality with man. How long since the Christian world made this move, please? When and where did they invite woman to sit in our legislative assemblies, help to make and execute the laws which were to govern the children she was deemed capable of ushering into this world. She is considered advanced enough to pay taxes on whatever property she chances to possess, but who ever saw a church member introduce a bill into Congress granting suffrage to woman? Why, my good friend, even your good Saint Paul would not approve of such an innovation.

Men who are clear-headed in all other directions seem to become suddenly supine when the subject of woman's freedom is agitated. Is it a pleasure to have your dear mother, wife, or sister "hedged in" by the narrow conditions which poor benighted Christianity has handed down to us from the ages remote? Does it increase your importance to have these beautiful children who come to bless your home, born of a slave mother? Self reliance should be one of the angels who sit by each fireside of our land, but she never will clasp hands with poor shrinking slavery.

One of the great railway systems of Chicago is busy weeding from the ranks of its employes, all women. What is the matter? Are they incompetent, or negligent? Oh, no, but the policy of this company is promotion for its employes, and the women considered of sufficient mental status for mothers of a nation, are deemed unfitted to make out a way bill or sell tickets, so she is to be relegated back to her original condition, if the example of this railway company is followed, and our world will be handicapped by another generation, who will be born so blinded that they are unable to see what a heritage they have entailed on posterity; unless woman rebels, and seeks a wider field of action, which she certainly will.

Yes, Christianity has certainly uplifted woman, but in a different way from what our brother conveys. She was crushed down till the better, nobler nature in her rebelled, and she dared open doors that had been shut in her face for centuries. Gentlemen, she will never go back to her old condition, and no efforts of yours can hamper the onward march of progress, nor deprive her of laurels which she has nobly won. The doors of one puny corporation may be closed to her, but a thousand shall spring open in their place, not at the dictate of Christianity, but at the earnest wish of angel hosts, and progressive minds on earth.

FRED L. HILDRETH.

ROBERT OWEN.

"The religions, so-called, of the world have divided nation from nation, and man from man, from the earliest known period of history to the present. True religion must, on the contrary, unite man to man, and nation to nation, until the human race shall become as one family, united in feeling and interest, equal in education and condition according to age, and governed solely by charity and love, based on a knowledge of the sciences of human nature and of society, as explained in the first and second parts of this book."

"It may be here stated, as the subject is so important to all who are interested in the permanent happiness of the human race, that hitherto, the subject of which man knows the least, and which remains beyond the comprehension of his faculties, has been made, through ignorance, the chief study and business of his existence. In consequence, he has ever been in the path of gross error, and has gone astray from the beginning, consuming his time in doing that which he ought not to have done for his health, wealth, peace, and a continued advance in knowledge and rational enjoyment. The religions of the world have confused the mind, destroyed the understanding, and given a false direction to the feelings of the human race. They have taught men to call good evil, and evil good; changed the natural healthy propensities of humanity into vile and ferocious passions, and misdirected all the faculties of man, making him an enemy to himself and to his race. Until the eyes of the world can be opened to enable men to see the errors, absurdities, and follies of all these religions, so-called, it will be vain to expect any rational conduct from any people or government, or that either of them can become wise, good and happy.

"When once the public mind of the world can be disabused on this subject, so as to enable it to reason calmly and justly respecting the past and the present, and to see facts as they exist in nature, and not distorted by the misdirected imaginations of any of the varied and opposing religions of the world; there will be no real difficulty in introducing truth, knowledge, charity, kindness, among all ranks and descriptions of men. These religions stand in the way of making one step toward truth, knowledge, superior conduct, and happiness. They guard the road to these virtues, armed with the weapons of ignorance and superstition, and threaten vengeance to all who attempt to enter upon it. In fact, they ever have been, now are, and while they shall be allowed to influence and direct human affairs, they ever will be, engines of power to make men fools or hypocrites, and will remain the bane and curse of humanity.

"But how are these hydras of mischief to be destroyed without a renewal of all the crimes and sufferings produced by the cruelties of one system of madness to oppose another; by which hosts of human beings have slaughtered each other and inflicted all the crimes and miseries of the most ferocious warfare, in order that the superstitions of the cross or the crescent might be victorious over all the rational faculties of humanity? And all this rancor of the most fiendish vengeance, created and maintained by myriads to the death, for the honor and glory of a Being said to be a God of love, of justice, of charity, and of mercy, and the essence of all wisdom, power, and goodness!!! And yet this Being, Power, Essence, or whatever name may be given to the cause of all that has been, is, or may be caused—remains to this day as incomprehensible to man as when the first man was murdered, with the impious imagination that the deed was done to support the honor and add to the glory of that Power which no man possessing the slightest approach to common sense will now say he can comprehend.

"While man shall have his faculties so destroyed as to be made conscientiously to believe that by anything he can do, he can honor or glorify a Power unknown and incomprehensible to him, or by leaving anything undone he can anger or in any manner affect such Power, it is proof to demonstration that he has not been made a rational creature, and that he has yet to acquire the rudiments of the knowledge of his own nature, before he can learn what manner of being he is, or what is the true character of all humanity."

N. B.—I may add, in passing, that when Robert Owen published his book (1845), his son, Hon. Robert Dale Owen, was representing a district in Congress, from Indiana, and had few superiors in breadth of intellect, as I remember. I notice now, in the dispatch to the associated press, of August 2, that the Democrats of the First Congressional District of Indiana have nominated Alfred Dale Owen for Congress, who is the present mayor of Mt. Vernon, Ind. It is altogether probable that he is the grandson, or great-grandson of the author of the "Book of the New Moral World." There is great need of broad-minded men in the national legislature now-a-days. C. H. MATHEWS.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
—OR—
DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the Formation of Circles and Cultivation of Mediumship

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

H. L. B.: Q. Four years ago I stepped out of the church and followed the light of Spiritualism, but it has gone on glimmering. Opportunities to communicate have been given to those who are supposed to exist on the other side, but not a whisper has ever come to me, and when those around you are skeptical and unsympathetic, is it not discouraging? I am tempted sometimes to believe death ends all.

A. The condition of this correspondent is like that of a multitude of others who are constantly writing to this department, asking for explanations or words of comfort. To leave the church and its assurance of certainty, and find the light guiding thence, wavering and uncertain, is indeed deplorable, and the weary minds, turn back to the old paths. It requires strength of character, and determined will to clear the way for feet already weary. So many discouragements are met, the heart grows faint and the repose of the old faith is more inviting.

There are reasons, for these failures of earnest souls to receive messages from the departed. In some cases, their psychic or bodily condition prevents by some subtle cause scarcely understandable. Thus a bar of iron may be magnetically inert, and again without the least visible change become a powerful magnet. There is a condition of personal organization, that is not only inert to spirit influence, but opposed to its manifestation in others. This condition may be, and often is, suddenly changed to a high degree of impressibility to these influences. This may occur, involuntarily, but more usually is the result of becoming a member of a circle.

Again, the desire of spirit friends has far more influence than is usually assigned to them. When there are those very dear, and recently departed, they have even stronger desire to communicate, than their friends have to receive, and they avail themselves of every opportunity to do so. If they fail, it is because they can not.

They may not know how to control the subtile forces with which they have to deal. They may fail in the attempt to express their thoughts, and be charged with falsehood. Fearing such failure they may shrink from making any attempt.

To all the great class of those who desire to believe and yet falter on the borders, we urge the plan which has been persistently advocated by The Progressive Thinker, of the home circle. Delightful messages may be obtained through public mediums, but such can only come on rare occasions, for such sources are not readily available. The home circle is like the old prayer meeting, and the spirit friends will come to the sacred altar of the table around which they once sat, the hearth never forgotten, and their influence is stronger there than anywhere else. There they may be constantly consulted and belief becomes an abiding knowledge that the home and our lives are overshadowed by their sacred presence.

Psyche, New York: Q. What do you consider the fundamental principle of spirit communion, and how can it be explained?

A. The stars as glowing suns, send off waves of light which break on coasts at inconceivable distances. The light of 61 Cygnet, one of the nearest, at the velocity of 192,000 miles in a second, is twelve years passing the distance from that star to the earth, and how much farther it reaches is beyond understanding. Its light is thrown out in every direction, so that in every part of that vast sphere it is visible. A luminous body is one which throws off light waves in the same manner a heated body throws off vibrations of different length and velocity, which are recognized heat. An electrically excited body, that is one thrown into intense vibrations, sends off waves known as electricity. These waves go out in every direction as radii from a centre to the circumference of its sphere, and when unimpeded in perfect spheres. The wire being a better conductor, more readily transmits these waves.

When such a vibrating body is elevated to some height in the air and charged, it throws off these waves and at all points in the sphere of its waves they can be received by a proper instrument. It is thus seen that wireless telegraphy does not differ from telegraph by wire in principle. This is, however, at once observed: As these waves go out the surface they cover rapidly increases and their intensity must decrease in the same ratio. This is found to be as the square of the distance. Thus if the energy of a light, heat, or electric vibrant body, at a certain distance be represented by a unit, at twice the distance, the energy will be four times less; at four times the distance sixteen times less. While this does not hold good on a conducting wire, it will be found to limit the distance to which wireless telegraphy can be employed.

With these physical facts clearly impressed on our minds, we are prepared for the reception of the grand principles on which the superstructure of the spiritual philosophy is founded. It is this:

As the radiant star is a centre of light, so the brain is a centre of radiant thought. The spirit using that brain as its instrument is the source and vortex of that energy, sending out vibrations in every direction. The parallel is made complete by the analogous ethers, for as there is an ether of extreme tenuity for the explanation of the phenomena of the physical forces of light, heat, and electricity, there is a still more refined ether which is the medium of psychic vibrations.

This principle, as simple and sublime as that of gravitation, was first announced in the "Philosophy of Spirit and the Spirit World, published in 1860. The spirit authors for the first time explicitly stated the theory of thought vibrations, with diagrams, as the fundamental explanation of all the marvelous class of phenomena now known as thought transference, telepathy, spirit communion, etc. It is to the spiritual what gravitation is to the physical world. The changes rung on the "vibratory theory," all have their beginning with this statement, and most of their exponents, with only superficial knowledge of the profound subject, have given rein to their fancy, and put forth their wild dreams for knowledge.

With this principle we have the key to the complex and interblended phenomena of spirit; the talismanic sesame which opens the door of its inner mysteries.

The application: These vibrations go out into the spirit ether, and wherever they meet a spirit, in harmony, they are received and transmuted into thoughts, the same as set them in motion, precisely as the receiver of a telephone changes the electric waves to waves of sound.

The letter remains vibrant with the thoughts of its author and the psychometrist reads therefrom.

The sensitive receives the waves, and recognizing their meaning is able to read the thought, or is a mind-reader. A medium receives impressions from spirits, in the same manner. Every manifestation and psychic phenomenon is explainable by this theory and the seemingly conflicting medley unitized.

J. H. McElroy: Q. Faraday as a spirit claims that the material universe existed before the spiritual. Other spirits have told me that the spiritual existed before the material. Which is true?

A. Matter without its spiritual essence—force or properties—could not exist—would be nothing. The spiritual forces could not be recognizable by human senses or understanding except through matter.

All knowledge starts with the fundamental proposition: Matter and force (spirit) are eternal. There is no creation—there is evolution. There is continuous change of form and condition, and ascension to higher planes, but ever and forever the spiritual and material are blended, as energy and its external expression.

MOST HORRIBLE!

A Horrible Religion and a Horrible Life.

RETURN TO THE WORLD OF A NUN FROM THE DARK, DREARY WALLS OF A CONVENT AFTER FORTY-FIVE LONG YEARS.

I was surprised to find that on one day the past week, after forty-five years spent as a cloistered nun in the Ursuline convent at Bedford Park, in the Bronx, New York, that Cecelia Lawrence, known in the sisterhood as Mother Cecelia, passed for the first time since she entered, beyond the convent walls, and for the first time in her life rode on a railroad train.

Mother Cecelia is a daughter of a prominent New Yorker, Bryan Lawrence, and at his death left $100,000 to the Ursuline convent and a like sum to his daughter. She assumed the white veil when she was a girl graduate, only seventeen years old.

On taking the final vows Miss Lawrence devoted her whole fortune to the convent, of which she has now been an inmate nearly half a century. Permission to leave the convent for a brief period was obtained by a special dispensation from Archbishop Corrigan, on account of Mother Cecelia's failing health, and she has now gone to Babylon, L. I., where she will be nursed by the sisters of the Convent of St. Joseph.

It is stated that it was with the utmost reluctance that the venerable nun was persuaded to leave her life-long retreat, but the question now is, will she after seeing the beauties of the outside world, want to return to those dreary walls, or will she not have some regrets?

I am told she was like a being suddenly translated from another world as she passed out of the convent doors the first time in forty-five years. She was stunned by the rush and roar of the trains, by the speed of the electric cars, by the noise and bustle of the big city, by the immensity of the crowds, the towering mass of the buildings. Throughout the long journey she sat outwardly impassive and almost silent, only opening her lips to murmur, "Wonderful. Wonderful!" She was like one in a dream. The trains she said frightened her at first, but she soon became reassured and positively enjoyed the rapid motion. The electric cars she thought even more wonderful. She said what impressed her more than anything else was the mighty tide of humanity flowing along the streets through which she passed. In the afternoon she was able to make a visit to Oak Island, and only think, there she had her first view of the ocean, and she said that it was the most glorious of all the sights she had seen. She will remain at Babylon until her health is restored.

An elderly lady friend of mine, informs me that she remembers the time that Miss Lawrence entered the convent and that it made considerable talk at that time, for Miss Lawrence only being seventeen years old and with such a fortune, and think what good she could have done with her money in the outside world among the sick and poor, instead of shutting herself up behind dark and dreary walls.

What a horrible religion this is to take these inmates in behind these walls away from these grand beauties that God has given us, such as the flowers, trees and all the beauties of nature. Do they think it a crime to look on these things?

I have asked the question many, times, and have never received an answer; that is, what is the fascination, what the transformation behind those dreary, dark stone walls, where so many young women give up all that is dear to them in this world—wealth, mother, all, to take that white veil and never to come out? This is surely one of the mysteries that is very hard to solve. J. OSBORNE LUNT.

Haslett Park Camp, Mich.

Tuesday morning, conference, which opened up with thoughts rather spicy, in which all took an active part. Our subject was: "Are we not two bodies, and cannot the inner spirit control the outer or earthly body?

Afternoon brought the friends together to listen to a discourse from Mrs. Cooley, on the different modes of worship. She gave a brief history of worship, from the tree down to the present time, which was very fine and interesting; it gave some new light and thoughts to the workings of Spiritualism.

Thursday morning conference still held to the same subject, which brought out diverse opinions with new thought for study.

In the afternoon she took some of the points to speak from; she also gave a brief sketch of her mediumship and speakership, and as to the dwelling of the spirit within and the going out at the time of separation.

On Friday afternoon she gave us a practical discourse on Spiritualism, and the mode of living thereby, after which she gave the friends a final good-bye, which all regretted, but she is to be with us the coming year.

Thursday evening we were greeted with the faces of Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Warne, of Chicago, who tarried over night with us and gave some beautiful thoughts on the forces of development. Mrs. Warne is one of our old campers, and received a hearty welcome from all old campers.

Saturday afternoon brought us together to listen to Mrs. Weatherford and daughter, who gave some of their improvised songs, while Mrs. W. gave a fine opening address on Spiritualism.

Sunday morning we were greeted with a fine shower which refreshed both soul and body, as the weather had been to extreme heat, but the people came in and the house was well filled with eager listeners when our speaker, Mrs. Weatherford, came to the front and opened her lecture on "The Truths of Nature, and How to Learn to Inventory Our Own Selves."

Afternoon, her subject was "Brotherhood of Humanity." She handled it with masterly care.

The mediums and speakers have done a good work since the camp opened, and many a heart has been made glad by hearing from their departed friends. Spiritualism is growing. The young will not be held down to the old creeds and dogmas.

We have got the best talent to come, and we are looking forward for a big camp. MRS. O. H. SOULE.

Ottawa Camp, Kansas.

The Ottawa camp-meeting opened on the 8th of August as advertised, continuing until the 13th. It was held in the beautiful grounds of Forrest Park, and a more perfect and lovely place for such a purpose can not well be imagined. It is the ideal place for holding meetings of this nature. Its beautiful grounds are interspersed with broad graveled avenues, lined with comfortable benches, shaded by grand old trees whose inviting shade is most sublime and refreshing. The green sward is broken here with a fountain, and there with a pond whose waters are alive with gold-fish and the surface covered with lovely pond lilies in full bloom. The Marais des Cygnes river threads its silvery course through its entire length. Many buildings of various sizes are scattered throughout the grounds, some of the rustic, others of the cottage style, and taken as a whole, it is a most enchanting spot and as "Blossom," (Mrs. Wagner's control) expressed it, "It looked somewhat like one of their parks in the spirit world.

Here the Spiritualists of this section of the state gathered and celebrated the fourth anniversary of this association, and all had a very happy and enjoyable time. The rostrum was occupied by Mr. Ben F. Hayden as an inspirational speaker, D. W. Hull, Mrs. L. Mabee and Mrs. A. L. Lull as speakers, and Mrs. Hayden, Mrs. Lull, Mrs. Hammond and Mrs. Inez Wagner as test mediums, all of whom acquitted themselves most excellently, and gave the best of satisfaction. Everybody seemed pleased and highly gratified, and departed with the full determination to come next season.

A matter of some interest occurred there that is worthy of mention. Three young preachers of different orthodox denominations had private sittings with one of the mediums, Mrs. Inez Wagner. They seemed to be perfectly honest investigators and got wonderful results from "Blossom," her control, who acquitted herself most nobly. They expressed themselves as perfectly dumfounded at the phenomena, and one of them was so impressed that he returned the very next day for another sitting, and told Mrs. Wagner, that on his return home after his first sitting, he saw things clairvoyantly, that he saw whom he thought was Jesus Christ.

Saturday evening's exercises closed with a literary entertainment, concluding with a dance at which all enjoyed themselves immensely.

SANSKRIT, AND OCCULT

Prof. Hopkins Criticised by Mary Weeks Burnett.

A recent editorial in the Inter Ocean refers to an article by Washburn Hopkins, professor of Sanskrit in Yale, published in a current magazine. The comments of the Inter Ocean upon the article are very interesting and seem worthy of notice. Leaving on one side for the moment the statement (quoted) that theosophy is the teaching of the masters of yoga, let us suggest that a professor of so pronounced and refined a language as Sanskrit (which is called the language of the Gods) should always endeavor to enlighten—not confuse—the public mind. He should make a very clear differentiation in his interpretation of single and root words.

Sanskrit is essentially a language which contains within itself its own roots, thus differing from any western-world language. Each letter of the Sanskrit alphabet has a definite meaning. Each root word is used generically and has many applications. Just as in English, the word man (which, by the way, is from a Sanskrit root) includes in the generic sense the professor of science and theology as well as the uneducated tramp and the savage, so in Sanskrit the word yogi includes those who through spiritual evolution have become Christs, as well as those who have devoted themselves wholly to the practice of physical torture in order to develop in themselves will power and an indifference to bodily demands.

Any one at all conversant with Sanskrit has abundant opportunity to find in the Sanskrit scriptures the two great divisions of yoga practice distinctly set forth. They are called Raja Yoga, which includes preliminary control (not suppression) of the mind, in order that supreme conscious spiritual union with the divine may be attained, and, Hatha Yoga, that which brings the physical body and the desire body under control of the will, and yet leaves the mind uncontrolled and the spiritual nature unevolved. The Raja Yoga leads to Christhood, the Hatha Yoga, if joined to any thought of selfishness, leads to black magic. Western-world scriptures make the same distinction between those who seek the purity and truth of life eternal and those who, professing to do the same, follow the outward practices and leave the mind "full of ravening and wickedness." These two methods of yoga are called in India the true and the false yoga.

Simply "releasing the soul from the body" does not constitute true yoga. Some forms of release are, however, brought about by the Hatha (false) Yoga practices, as any insane asylum will demonstrate. What is a more patent fact in many insane cases than that the soul has been released from the body? And the cure of such cases will depend upon the reuniting the souls with the bodies again. But the release by true yoga means an expansion of consciousness, which, while not losing possession of the physical, widens into greater possibilities for the uplifting of humanity.

It is true that the higher consciousness becomes active, as instanced by St. Paul, Plotinus, Thomas a' Kempis, and many others, but such results as those great souls attained are not secured by the long "fasts" and "painful postures" of the false yogi. The Sanskrit scriptures say that "yoga is not for him who eateth too much, nor who abstaineth to excess," but for him who has acquired "fearlessness, purity of heart, steadfastness in the yoga of wisdom, self-restraint, truth, absence of wrath, compassion to living beings, uncovetousness, forgiveness, absence of pride, sacrifice, and the study of the shastras." Note that the last qualification, that of study, refers to definite training of the mind.

The object of yoga is not to suppress and thus eventually destroy the mind. The student knows that "to think of absolutely nothing" would lead in time to the utter deformation of the intellectual principle, and that is not what he seeks, but his effort is to gradually bring the mind into subjection to the real I, who is to be its master. The mind has to be made an obedient servant, so that it shall think purely, clearly, one-pointedly, for so long a time as its master, the real I directs. This mastery of the mind, united with a highly evolved or unfolded spiritual nature, constitutes a "Mahatma, or a master soul."

Mahatma is also a word much used and little understood in this country. It is a Sanskrit root compound, which includes, according to its relation to other words, all grades of true and false, from simple student to master of all knowledge.

A true mahatma is one who has definitely, consciously, trained all his subliminal consciousness, all his subtle faculties of soul and of mind, and of sense, until he has become not only master of them all, but has made them responsive to every cry of pain and suffering in the world, and all his energies continually go forth for the teaching, the helping, and the uplifting of the minds and souls of men. He has become only a force for good in the world. Would that there were more of these. And as man evolves, unfolds his higher faculties, there will be more, for these great souls have become such through long evolution, and others will do the same.

In regard to the teachings of theosophy as given out to the world through these divine teachers, I cannot more clearly state what theosophy is and does than to quote Mrs. Besant's words in the June number, 1900, of the Theosophical Review (American edition) upon "The Nature of Theosophical Proofs:"

"Now, theosophy is an exposition of life, including in one vast sweep all its actualities and possibilities. It can only be grasped even to a very limited extent by prolonged and patient study. * * * Theosophy brings to light proofs of the existence of a primeval wisdom, proofs of spiritual realities, proofs of the One existence, and of the human spirit as issuing from the divine, proof of the evolution of the soul, and the law of sequence guiding evolution, proof of the existence of divine teachers who promulgated these ideas. * * * The proofs of separate facts contained in theosophical teachings are in some cases indirect and depending on study; in others direct and readily available."

Theosophy is, therefore, not exclusive," but it is inclusive, and meets the needs of the greatest minds as well as of those less evolved.

A List of His Noted Works.

For Sale at the Office of The Progressive Thinker.

Wayside Jottings.

Gathered from the Highways, By-ways and Hedges of Life. By MATTIE E. HULL. This is a marvelously neat book of selections from Mrs. Hulls best poems, sermons and essays, and contains a splendid portrait of the author, also a portrait of Moses Hull. Price, neatly bound in English cloth, $1.

The Spiritual Alps and How We Ascend Them.

Or a few thoughts on how to reach that altitude where spirit is supreme and all things are subject to it. With portrait. By MOSES HULL. Just the book to teach you that you are a spiritual being, and to show you how to educate your spiritual faculties. Price, bound in cloth, 40 cents; in paper cover, 25 cents.

New Thought.

Volume I. Nicely bound in cloth, 579 large, beautifully printed pages. Portraits of several of the best speakers and mediums. The matter all original and presenting in an attractive form the highest phase of the Spiritual Philosophy. Price, only $1.50.

New Thought.

Volume II. 884 pages, beautifully printed and nicely bound. Original matter. Six portraits. Cloth bound, 75 cents.

Joan, the Medium.

Or, the Inspired Heroine of Orleans. Spiritualism as a Leader of Armies. By MOSES HULL. This is at once the most truthful history of Joan of Arc, and one of the most convincing arguments on Spiritualism ever written. No novel was ever more thrillingly interesting; no history more true. Price in cloth, 40 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

The Real Issue.

By MOSES HULL. A compound of the two pamphlets, "The Irrepressible Conflict," and "Your Answer or Your Life," with important additions, making a book of 160 pages all for 25 cents. This book contains statistics, facts and documents, on the tendencies of the times, that every one should have.

All About Devils.

Or, an Inquiry as to whether Modern Spiritualism and other Great Reforms come from His Satanic Majesty and His Subordinates in the Kingdom of Darkness. 60 pages. By MOSES HULL. Price, 15 cents.

Jesus and the Mediums, or Christ and Mediumship.

Careful comparison of some of the Spiritualism and Mediumship of the Bible with that of to-day. By MOSES HULL. An invincible argument proving that Jesus was only a medium, subject to all the conditions of modern mediumship. It also shows that all the manifestations throughout the Old and New Testament were under the same conditions that mediums require to-day; and that the coming of Christ is the return of mediumship to the world. 48 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The Spiritual Birth, or Death and Its To-Morrow.

The Spiritual Idea of Death, Heaven and Hell. By MOSES HULL. This pamphlet besides giving the Spiritualistic interpretation of many things in the Bible—interpretations never before given, explains the heaven and hells believed in by Spiritualists. Price, 10 cents.

The Quarantine Raised.

Or the Twenty Years Battle Against a Worker Ended. Price 10 cents.

Spiritual Songster.

By MATTIE E. HULL. Thirty-eight of Mrs. Hull's sweetest songs, adapted to popular music, for the use of congregations, circles and families. Price, 10 cts. or $6 per hundred.

PSYCHOGRAPHY.

Marvelous Manifestations of Psychic Power Given Through the Mediumship of

FRED. P. EVANS.

"A book you ought to read. Absorbingly interesting, and should be in the hands of every thoughtful man and woman. No one can read its pages without being convinced of the existence of a future life. The book is of great value, not only to Spiritualists, but to those interested in the problem of man's future life, as well as to those interested in phenomenal research."—J. J. Owen.

World's Sixteen Saviors,

—OR—

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST.

BY KERSEY GRAVES.

New and startling revelations in religious history which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles precepts and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods. This wonderful and exhaustive volume will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which the author has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape, the student of free thought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, 380 pages. New edition, revised and corrected, with portrait of author.

Price $1.50. Postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

By HATTIE E. HULL. Thirty-eight of Mrs. Hull's sweetest songs, adapted to popular music, for the use of congregations, circles and families. Price 10 cents, or $7 per hundred. For sale at this office.

THE SPIRITUAL WREATH.

A collection of words and music for the choir, congregation and social circle. By S. W. Tucker. Comprises sixty or more gems of song. Price, 20c.

MAXHAM'S MELODIES.

Songs Sacred and Secular. By A. J. Maxham. Thirty-two pages of sweet songs and music. The author and compiler is well known as a Spiritual singer and composer. Price, 25c.

SPIRITUAL HARP.

A Collection of Vocal Music for the Choir, Congregation and Social Circles.

By J. M. Peebles and J. O. Barrett; R. H. Bailey, Musical Editor. New edition. Culled from a wide field of literature with the most critical care, free from all theological bias, throbbing with the soul of inspiration, embodying the principles and virtues of the spiritual philosophy, set to the most cheerful and popular music, (nearly all original), and adapted to all occasions, it is doubtless the most attractive work of the kind ever published. Its beautiful songs, duets and quartets, with piano, organ or melodeon accompaniment, adapted both to public meetings and the social circles. Cloth $1.25; postage 14 cents. For sale at this office.

COSMIAN HYMN BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF

Original and Selected Hymns

For Liberal and Ethical Societies, for Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

This volume meets a public want. It comprises 258 choice selections of poetry and music, embodying the highest moral sentiment, and free from all sectarianism. Price 50 cents. Sold at this office.

Longley's Beautiful Songs

For Public Meetings and the Home.

VOLUME ONE

Contains the following songs with music:

I'm thinking, dear mother, of you. We miss our boys at home. The land of the bye and bye. The good times yet to be. The land beyond the stars. They are waiting at the portal. When the dear ones gather at home. Resting under the daisies. The grand jubilee. My mother's tender eyes. Dear heart come home. Come in some beautiful dream. Where the roses never fade. In heaven we'll know our own.

VOLUME TWO

Contains 15 new and beautiful songs, suited to the home circle, seances, local meetings, mass-meetings, conventions, anniversaries and jubilees. They come prise an excellent variety of poems set to easy harmony and ought to sell readily. These books are 15cts. each; the two for 30cts. For sale at this office.

THE V

DR. G. E. WATKINS,
THE
NATURAL PHYSICIAN.

The Physician can only be the servant or handmaid of Nature in the cure of Disease.

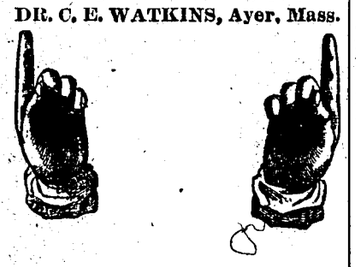
In reality we can do nothing; we can only remove the offending cause while

Nature



Performs the cure, and therefore we lay it down as a fundamental maxim in medicine that all a Physician can do is to act as a Servant to Nature.

If you believe that the above statement is true, and believe that this method is the right one, then write to-day to

CONSISTENCY.

Benefits of Elevated Ideals.

"Oh, Consistency! thou art a jewel rare indeed."

Did the human family realize the qualities of this rare gem; did many seek to know of its beauty, and make it one of their treasures, the conditions of the inhabitants of earth would be so much improved that life in this mundane sphere would be like unto a mid-summer dream in comparison to that of the present time.

The qualities of this gem were long ago fully delineated.

Why, then, all the inconsistencies that lie so thickly in the pathway of progress? Why do ye all fetter your own lives and that of others, by these weeds that choke out the good things that might bring you a bountiful harvest of that which would enrich your souls, for all time to come?

We of the higher realms do desire you to learn of all these inconsistencies, so that ye may weed them out of your lives, and in their stead, reap a harvest of the good that will surely come to you through the persistent effort for justice, consistency and truth.

So many go through life, hugging unto themselves their own idiosyncrasies and seeing not how persistently they crowd out consistency. They have never stopped to question themselves, that they might understand the pathway wherein they were straying.

Ah, friends, many of you think your feet are surely treading the broad and beautiful pathway unto the perfect day, illumined all the way by the light of Divine truth, as revealed unto you through God's messengers, namely, the loved ones gone before. Shall I tell you that many of you are mistaken?

Shall I tell you that many of you are wandering so far away, in the by-paths, that the main thoroughfare is long since gone by, and daily you are creating new stumbling-blocks, over which you must return, ere you gain the desired goal.

Oh, pshaw! is the thought of these self-satisfied ones, as they read these warning words.

But, friends, will you tell me how many of you stop to daily inquire of your soul, Am I in the right?

Am I doing my life work properly?

Am I fulfilling my duty unto the human family?

Am I giving of my knowledge unto others, that they, too, may profit by the instructions that have been given to me?

Have you lifted your spiritual being toward the fountain of light in true soul prayer?

These are pertinent questions, and still, very many more of like nature could be enumerated ere the half was told of all the things you should daily search your soul for understanding of.

Too many of you console yourselves by thinking that your guides, or spirit friends know of your needs, and will attend to them; and (in part)this may be true.

But if you do not reach out after a more exalted knowledge of life and its laws, if you do not ask for the blessings, if you do not make conditions right by throwing out your heart's desire, in soul thought, or prayer, how shall ye expect them to build the line, 'twixt them and you?

The little child may toddle by your feet, and you see and perhaps give it some attention, even though it pays no attention to you.

But if that child reaches out its little arms for your caress, and lisps its pleasure at your presence, how much more of your love and thought and care you lavish upon it. A lesson is here for you, though many, grown wise in their own estimation, may like it not, to be compared to a little child.

I must not pause until I speak to you of the inconsistencies that have arisen among those of you who should have been more wise concerning spiritual things.

The bickering and haggling, and abuse even, that has been thought, and many times written out, concerning the great spirit of the universe.

Friends, place your ideals higher than the utmost bounds of man's reason, and build with your life work the ladder thereto. And when that pinnacle shall have been reached, create with your ideals yet a greater and grander pinnacle to strive after. And, if perchance some other fail to climb side by side with you up the gleaming heights, reach down and help him up, putting beneath his feet whatever to him seems sure to hold him up, until he shall have learned to help himself.

But do not, I pray you, place stumbling-blocks in his way, nor knock from underneath him that which will help him on to a better life.

That which is food for him, may be as chaff to you, but if his food is suitable for him, and he can grow thereon, why seek to rob him of that which to him seemeth good? The time never will be when this work of showing the way to a faltering brother will not be needed.

Take with you the angel guides, and gird your brow with the gems of consistency, seeking ever to uplift, unfold, and bless the human family, and thy own life shall be illumined with heaven's own radiance.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

J. B. Wilson passed to spirit life, Aug. 3, aged 82 years. About twenty-five years ago he investigated Spiritualism, since which time he has been an ardent advocate, ever ready to express his views at favorable opportunities. We already have had a comforting message from him, in which he tells of the beauties of the other side. He received great pleasure in reading The Progressive Thinker and Light of Truth.

Joliet, Ill. RALPH WILSON.

Luther C. Keeler passed to spirit life, at his country home, near Winnetka, Ill., July 22, aged 68 years. Mr. Keeler was an active business man for many years in Chicago, and won and held the confidence and respect of all with whom he came in contact (socially or in business relations) by his honorable dealings with his fellow man. His kind and courteous manner towards the aged, the young and those beneath him (socially), ever marked him wherever he chanced to be, the true gentleman. He leaves the priceless legacy to his children of an unsullied name, and a life-record, pure and clean, and one whose memory will ever be cherished with esteem, respect and love, by all whose privilege it was to know him. His family have the sweet consolation of knowing, "there is no death, only transition."

OUR PREMIUMS.

There are many Spiritualists who know a good thing when they see it. There are others, however, who do not seem to realize what is going on around them, and therefore miss many chances to enrich their minds and enlarge their understanding. Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World is furnished to our subscribers at less than cost, and should be in every family in the United States, whether Spiritualists or not. Volumes 1, 2 and 3 constitute a wonderful magazine of thought on Death in its multifarious phases; in fact you can not find in all the libraries of the world as valuable information in regard to Death as you will have presented to you in these three volumes. They are nicely printed, neatly and substantially bound, and are an ornament to any library. Volume 3 is furnished at 25 cents, much less than the actual cost to us, and the three volumes, when ordered in connection with a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, only cost $1.10. The aggregate cost of the three books to the trade is $4.50. At this price, these three books ought to be in every Spiritualist family.

The Progressive Thinker is the first Spiritualist paper to inaugurate the Divine Plan—a portion of the profits of the office returning to subscribers in valuable books.

"Origin of Life, or Where Man Comes From." "The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter Through Organic Processes, or How the Spirit Body Grows." By Michael Faraday. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"Poems of Progress," By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

"Hellocentric Astrology or Essentials of Astronomy and Solar Mentality, with Tables of Ephemeris from 1830 to 1910." By Yarmo Vedra. For sale at this office. Price, $1.50.

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism, A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, lecturer upon physical, physiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the molecular or spiritual hypothesis of nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull For sale at this office. Price ten cents.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. For sale at this office. Price, 25 cents.

"Human Culture and Cure. Part First. The Philosophy of Cure. (Including Methods and Instruments)." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A very instructive and valuable work. It should have a wide circulation, as it well fulfills the promise of its title. For sale at this office. Price 75 cents.

"Harmonics of Evolution. The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science, as Taught by Modern Masters of the Law." By Florence Huntley. A work of deep thought, carrying the principles of evolution into new fields. Cloth, $2. For sale at this office.

"The Gospel of Buddha, According to Old Records." Told by Paul Carus. This book is heartily commended to students of the science of religions, and to all who would gain a fair conception of Buddhism in its spirit and living principles. Spiritualist or Christian can scarcely read it without spiritual profit. Price $1. For sale at this office.

The Commandments Analyzed, price 25 cents. Big Bible Stories, cloth 50 cents.

THOUSANDS CURED!

Marvelous Has Been the Success of This Well-Known Healer in Curing Chronic and Obstinate Cases.

J. M. PEEBLES, A. M., M. D., PH.D.

If Sick Read His Liberal Offer, Then Consult Him and Be Healed.

Half a century spent in successfully treating chronic diseases and the unsolicited testimonials from thousands of those whom he has cured, after the best local physicians had failed to give permanent relief, have gained for DR. J. M. PEEBLES a reputation that extends from ocean to ocean, as the most successful practitioner and healer in AMERICA.

This eminent man, whose life has been devoted to the relief of suffering humanity, is not only a graduate of the best medical colleges of this country, but he has counseled with the best medical men in every country on the globe, and his study and research after knowledge that would enable him to benefit those around him who are suffering from chronic diseases, has taken him three times around the world, and to-day his advice and counsel is sought after not only by chronic invalids who have learned his ability to cure these troubles, but also by many physicians as well.

This great and true Healer was one of the pioneers in the study and investigation of the Psychic Science, one of the greatest and most wonderful of all the sciences, and one which is destined to do more for the sick and suffering than any other agency ever discovered. He has made a study of this subject for over half a century, and is to-day considered by the advanced students of this grand science the greatest Psychic living. You should read his late essay on this subject, entitled, "The Psychic Science in the Art of Healing," which he will send you free of cost with the diagnosis if you desire it. Learn for yourself of this wonderful power which may be developed by all. The learned physician who fully understands the Psychic Science can read the human body like an open book. All Dr. Peebles' diagnosing is done by the aid of this occult science. All that is necessary for you to do to receive a complete and accurate diagnosis of your case is to write the Doctor a plain honest letter in your own handwriting. If you will do this, he will send you a diagnosis free of all cost and special advice concerning your case, also his essay spoken of above and other literature explaining fully his methods of treatment and testimonials showing some of the most remarkable cures ever performed.

Thousands of sufferers are treated by physicians who do not know positively where the seat of trouble lies. They experiment for weeks trying to hit upon the right point. The result is that instead of getting relief, the patient gradually grows worse and the case becomes, as they term it, "chronic," and at last the poor sufferer receives that awful sentence, "Your case is hopeless." With Dr. Peebles there are no hopeless cases. His life has been devoted to conquering disease, and the tens of thousands of lives he has saved, the thousands of so-called invalids he has made healthy men and women, and the countless number of homes in every part of the world his wonderful skill has brightened, are testimonies of his ability to treat all kinds of chronic diseases.

Remember that Dr. Peebles does not cure by Christian Science, Mesmerism, or any other "ism," but uses mild magnetized remedies in connection with his Psychic treatment. "These Psychic treatments," says one of his patients, "seem as if they would almost raise the dead." Every effect has its cause, and if the cause is seen and removed the effect will cease—health will ensue. What is your condition? It is within your power to know. If he can tell you the exact cause of your trouble, he can bring relief and without doubt a cure. This he can do, and it will cost you not one cent to test it. In order to inspire confidence in those who have been given up beyond hope, he will diagnose all cases free of charge. All that is required is for you to write the Doctor an honest letter, giving in your own writing your name, age, sex, and leading symptom. If you will do this, he will return your diagnosis at once and will also give you special advice concerning your case. A letter of advice from this great and true physician, whose life has been devoted to relieving the suffering of his fellow-men, drives back the cloud of despair and comes like a ray of sunshine into the chronic invalid's darkened sky.

Remember that it costs you nothing to write the Doctor and learn your true condition. Write to-day and learn your exact condition, and also ask for literature that will give you a full knowledge of this wonderful method of curing disease.

"Principles of Light and Color." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A truly great work of a master mind, and one whom Spiritualists should delight to honor. The result of years of deep thought and patient research into Nature's finer forces are here gathered and made amenable to the well-being of humanity. Medical men especially, and scientists, general readers and students of occult forces will find instruction of great value and interest. A large, four-pound book, strongly bound, and containing beautiful illustrative plates. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $5. It is a wonderful work and you will be delighted with it.

CLUBS!

CLUBS CLUBS

We want ten thousand clubs formed in every part of the United States, for which we present inducements never before offered by any Spiritualist paper. These clubs must consist of ten subscribers, and each one will get Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death; or if they would prefer it, they can have the Next World Interviewed. They can have their choice of the two. Each subscriber in order to avail himself of this offer must pay $1.15. The fifteen cents is to pay expense of postage and mailing, and the books sent out are practically a gift. They are not cheap affairs; they are nicely and substantially bound in cloth, neatly printed in clear type and are ornaments to any center table. The contents are indeed valuable, such as every Spiritualist family should have. The aggregate price of these two books to the trade is $2.75. To each of our club subscribers one of these books is a gift, and when they receive the one of their choice they will be delighted with it, and will wonder how we can afford to do so much for them. The one who gets up the club will be entitled to The Progressive Thinker for one year, and Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit Spirit World, and also the Next World Interviewed. He will not only get The Progressive Thinker for one year, but both books. He gets what is equivalent to $3.75 for his trouble. There should be no difficulty whatever in getting up hundreds of clubs.

Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World will not only interest Spiritualists, but church members will be attracted to it. The Rev. M. J. Savage, a leading liberal divine of New York, leads off with several of his masterly productions, treating Death from an advanced standpoint. He is followed by leading Spiritualists who treat of Death in a philosophical and fascinating manner.

The Next World Interviewed is also a very excellent work. The plates of this book were donated to the office of The Progressive Thinker by Henry J. Horn. It consists of communications from the spirit side of life from leading minds there. Fifty-five communications are given by prominent personages, among them Prince Albert, Harriet Martineau, Judge Edmonds, Horace Greeley, Lord Lytton, Fanny Fern, Dr. Livingstone and the Czar of Russia.

Now is the time to get up

RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.

BY S. WEIL.

Cloth, $1.25. Paper, 50 cents.

This is a work of great value, written by one of the keenest, most powerful and most truly religious minds of the day. It is particularly a work which should be put into the hands of those who have freed themselves from the dogmas of orthodoxy, and from the dogmas of materialistic science, for it will strengthen the conviction of the free mind that mind and senses are not the whole of life.

The chapters reveal a new method in psychic and spiritual research. They show vivid glimpses of a stupendous moral cosmos that will supercede moral confusion; that only verifiable tenets can survive, and the childhood period of faith and fancy will be superseded by knowledge and facts. For sale at this office.

TWO IN ONE.

A COMBINATION OF

"The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books combined at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 462 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

is a candid comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its moral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, and expressed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRAST

consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend Spiritualism, or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.

From the German of

DR. LUDWIG BÜCHNER,

Author of "Force and Matter," Essays on Nature and Science," "Physiological Pictures," "Six Lectures on Darwin," Etc.

"The great mystery of existence consists in perpetual and uninterrupted change. Everything is immortal and indestructible—the smallest worm as well as the most enormous of the celestial bodies,—the sand grain on the water drop as well as the highest being in creation, man and his thoughts. Only the forms in which being manifests itself are changing; but Being itself remains eternally the same and imperishable. When we die we do not lose ourselves, but only our personal consciousness. We live on in nature, in our race, in our children, in our deeds, in our thoughts—in short, in the sum of the material and physical contribution which, during our short personal existence, we have furnished to the subsistence of mankind and of nature in general."—Buechner.

A. Schopenhauer Essays.

Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75c.

CONTENTS.—The Wisdom of Life; Counsels and Maxims; Religion and other Essays; The Art of Literature; Studies in Pessimism.

"Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is; and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophical writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

COSMOCRATS

Of Darkness, and Spiritual Forces of Evil.

To the Editor:—Your issue of August 18 is full of good things. The lecture by the Hon. A. B. Richmond, gives valuable information concerning the founder of Methodism. The quotations from a sermon by the president of Allegheny College, especially the phrases "Cosmocrats of darkness" and "the spiritual forces of evil," together with the citing of Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus the Great and Augustus as Cosmocrats who ruled the nations and were themselves "centers of political life," are good, interesting, giving the reader a better understanding of those terms. To me they are significant, because they fill a prediction made to me by my spirit friends about thirty years ago. At that time they talked to me face to face and told me I had a work to do that would be difficult to accomplish, for the reason that I would encounter the forces of some of the spiritual "cosmocrats of darkness who wielded a strong power over and through mortals, especially selfish mortals, whom they use in many ways to carry out their will and work in a measure, etc., and that these would have to be conquered, which victory would then result in blessings for all humanity. They further stated, that when the time for their strongest action came to be realized on earth, I would then see a statement in print similar in words and meaning to what they were then telling me, to bear witness to the truth thereof, and that then I would better understand, because it would be realized by all world powers and people; that these cosmocrats of darkness wielding the so-called spiritual forces of evil, were exerting their full power in various conflicts upon and through the people, but that the higher Powers in unison with all good and true mortals would conquer after a time, and then peace and prosperity would reign upon earth.

Now, seeing this prediction fulfilled after so many years, pleases me greatly, and too, that some of the identical words are used and spoken by a Methodist divine. This, too, is significant, for it proves plainly that all receptive brains are infilled with the inspiration that is in these latter days poured out upon all flesh.

In connection with the above, permit me to relate a vision I experienced two years later. At that time I had some unpleasant experiences and being very clairvoyant then, I saw the joint maneuvering of such spirits of darkness and mortals of the same kind. I grieved over a wrong done to us and was thinking it over, when I sensed before I saw, spiritual presences. They came closer and said to me: "We will try to take you in spirit to meet the cosmocrat Cyrus on his own plane and place. He is the one who can give aid and rectify such wrongs, for there all is on record—causes and consequences and how accomplished." Immediately I was outside of my body going with my spirit guide over great space until we reached an immense plane. Far across it rose an imposing city. He pointed out a very large and prominent building and said: "Go to that building." You must go alone and will at this time find Cyrus himself there." I started—fairly flew through space and soon stood before the building which I entered. It was something on the plan of a large court-house, great halls with rooms on either side into which I looked and saw men working with books and figures. I knew exactly where he whom I came to see was to be found, and went to the door of a large room. It was full of men and women, too, all having grievances of their own to relate, for I stood and listened to make sure of it. At the large table sat a man—spirit, of course—but not in the least different from a mortal man.

He was very busy looking through great books. Presently he arose, came to me and said very courteously, "What can I do for you?" I stated why I came, and he went to a shelf, took down a large book, ran his finger over a few pages, then came to me and said, as he smiled sadly: "It is as you have stated; you have been wronged instead of wronging some one. 'Tis better for you, but I cannot give you any immediate help—these things all run their courses; I will give this matter my personal attention henceforth." I felt better then, and started to go, he going to the outer door with me and politely offering himself as escort to return me to my body. I thanked him, saying that I was safe alone. I knew my guide was not far away. This vision was repeated again to me after reading the statements referred to in Hon. A. B. Richmond's lecture. I can now understand better some things that had a hidden meaning to me.

I learned by this last visit and vision that this presiding spirit at this force centre is unhappy, and not filling this place from choice, but working out his own salvation and by diligent service earning a promotion to a less trying and laborious position. It further taught me that the imperfect thoughts and deeds of mortals are kept on record and that these so-called cosmocrats of darkness wielding the spiritual forces of evil, may be, yea, are, doing useful and necessary service, also that these things need study to learn them as they are.

The use of terms is ambiguous in this connection and needs qualification, for the reason that spiritual forces of evil are those in conflict for the separation of the pure from the dross, and the assimilations.

Those in charge of such works fill no easy places. MRS. M. KLEIN.

THE WAR IN CHINA.

It Illustrates Modern Christianity.

The news came from China early in August that the powers had seriously conisdered a proposition for peace, by which it was proposed to remove from China all the missionaries and foreigners and also withdraw the armies. The missionaries and churches became alarmed—almost dismayed, and kicked against it powerfully. This would upset their calculations and schemes of christianizing China by war, even though it takes years to accomplish it. They said China must be adequately punished; even if the military forces be withdrawn, they should, at least, destroy the city of Pekin as an object lesson. Their war spirit is fully aroused. But the question arises, why should they have any war spirit? Their claim to moral principle is base hypocrisy. The war spirit is a part of their religion.

I suppose the world at large outside of Christendom, would be glad to hear the cheering news of peace in China. But there will be no peace—the war will go on. The churches have something to say in this matter; they have a controlling influence over the Christian nations who "are as clay in the hands of the potter." It is like a bold, bad, big boy who gets control of a small boy and teaches him mischievous tricks and foul language. The nations are easily led in the ways of war—they have the soldiers with nothing for them to do but to go in and devastate China; conquer that weak nation; christianize them; and make them take our mixed religion. And, oh!—just to think of it—after the war is over what great glory and honor the surviving generals will get for themselves! They will travel triumphantly over the world on free passes and be feasted, praised, honored, worshiped, and receive presents and donations in cash capital, like Dewey and Grant. Won't that be glorious! Who, then, will dare say war is wrong?

The war now has a clear demonstration of the true inwardness of popular religion, and we can freely express the opinion that the world can get along fairly well without it.

"If you take away religion, what have you to put in its place?"

Nothing. The religion of the churches is worse than nothing. No emancipated man feels the need of aught to replace it. The world will find great relief when it is gone. The grounds of true morality remain wholly unaffected.

As long as the church holds control of the nations, wars will continue. Is it any better than it was a hundred years ago? If so, how much? For many years we have maintained that christianity is responsible for a large share of evil in the world and has been a dreadful curse to humanity, as is abundantly proven from the pages of history. Any fair-minded reader and thinker can be convinced of this by observing how the churches figure in the war in China.

We do not see how a preacher can reasonably preach peace, love and fraternity and at the same time express his approval of war; nor how any intelligent church member can approve of and argue for war with its devastation and destruction of life, and at the same time lay claim to moral principle or sentiments of "love, peace and good-will to men." This is entirely incompatible with reason, justice and logic. Yet it is the legitimate fruits of their religion. The attributes of goodness, morality and ethics, per se, are all right and true, but they hold no rightful claim to these. The war in China may serve one good purpose if it shows to the modern world the deformity, hypocrisy and hollow mockery of modern christianity. These things bring religion more and more into contempt and dishonor and make the world know what a dreadful thing it is to be christianized and for Christians to rule mankind.

A PARALLEL—POSSIBLY.

And he went up from thence unto Bethel; and as he was going up by the way, there came forth little children out of the city, and mocked him, and said unto him, Go up, thou bald-head, go up, thou bald-head.

And he turned back, and looked on them, and cursed them in the name of the Lord, and there came forth two she-bears out of the wood, and tare forty and two children of them.—II. Kings, 2:23-24.

A man of God, with high commission armed,
To save a world by Satan led astray,
Went forth in strength, by holy impulse charmed,
To turn and lead it in the godly way;
Along that line lay his imperial sway,
With yearning for the Children of the Sun—
So meekly quiet they would but obey,
Yet mutinied ere plans were well begun.
Take hence your naked pate! acclaimed they all as one.

In northern wood resides a monstrous bear
That has been summoned by this man of God,
These graceless children with his fangs to tear,
Till taught to tremble at his every nod—
Plainly they need a more than gentle prod
To make them sense their base, perfidious wrong—
And bears may prove no mean avenging rod,
To make one's guilt remembered well, and long—
E'en now is heard his growl, four hundred thousand strong. *

THE RELIGION OF CHINA AT ITS BEST.

Sermon by Rev. G. R. Dodson, at the Unitarian Church, Alameda, Cal.

RELIGIONS COMPARED—CHINESE FAITHS AND THOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN WORLD—GOOD POINTS IN ALL WHEN THEY ARE TAKEN AT THEIR BEST.

The attention of the civilized world is now directed toward the Chinese—that people so strange to us in language, dress, social costumes, political organization and religion. They seem to us queer, conceited and superstitious. Yet one of the most interesting and profitable things we can do is to try to understand them. It is always better to endeavor to know people than to condemn, abuse or even try to convert them. It is the testimony of those who know the Chinese well that their prejudice against us is no greater than is our prejudice against them. Our mutual ignorance of each other is colossal.

It is better to promote travel and international intercourse and acquaintance than to preach the gospel, for nothing so imperils the peace of the world as racial and national contempt due to fantastic misconceptions which are the inevitable result of ignorance. The traveler learns that people may differ from him in language, dress, customs and religion and yet be worthy of respect. To the provincial mind of many Christians the Chinese are heathen, their religion is false and they have everything to learn from us, while we can of course learn nothing from them. Missionaries are therefore sent to give them light, while the recent establishment of a Buddhist mission in San Francisco is considered a piece of presumption.

I wish to speak to you about one of the religions of China. There is not time to speak of Taoism, a lofty philosophy as given by its founder but now a degenerate superstition; nor of Buddhism, which is as far from being the religion of Gautama as modern Christianity is from being the personal religion of Jesus of Nazareth. Confucianism is, as all scholars agree, an ethical system rather than a religion. This is not to its discredit, for the only part of Christianity which the modern world cares for is its ethical principles and spirit.

I have entitled my sermon "The Religion of China at Its Best," because the ethics of Confucius may be as sharply distinguished from Chinese superstitions as the ethical elements of Judaism and Christianity from the supernaturalism of the Bible. The study of other religions helps to the understanding of our own. Confucius said: "My teaching is simple and easy to understand. It consists in having the heart right and in loving one's neighbor as one's self. The good man loves all men. All within the four seas are his brothers." It is easy to see that such teaching is the pure gold of the religion, while the beliefs in the Feng Shui, or spirits, in the magical powers of the priests to give protection against them, are the dross.

Now, if we have a clearer vision of the good-life than the Chinese we may be justified in seeking to teach them by our life the better way. But if our aim is to have them exchange their superstitions for ours, it would be better to keep our missionaries at home. A belief in a dragon is about as respectable as a belief in a devil. It is very important that we should recognize that our religion, like that of China, is composed of two parts—a theory of the world and of history, and an ethical system. The latter constituent is exalted in character while the former is being discredited by the growing knowledge and intelligence of the time. The point of view of the Bible is supernaturalism. The universe was made only a few thousand years ago and finished in six days. The human race descended from a single pair. The new enterprise was wrecked at the beginning by the devil, and human history is simply an extension of a sentence of death. A few shall be saved, but the many go down the broad way to their eternal prison house. He that believeth not shall be damned. The book is full of stories of angels and devils, of miracles and of pretended revelations from the infinite God to nomad chiefs and barbaric warriors of the ancient time. Now, this part of the Bible stands as to credibility and value in the same class with "Arabian Nights" and "Grimm's Fairy Tales."

Happily for us we can distinguish between these elements of our sacred books and the moral earnestness and lofty ethical ideals of the Jewish prophets and teachers of righteousness. Upon this, if we would take our religion at its best, we must concentrate our attention, and with it may fairly compared that which is best in Chinese religion, namely, the ethics of Confucius.

This philosopher did not aim to establish a religion, and professed to know little or nothing of the higher powers and so omitted the subject altogether. He disliked to talk on religious subjects. He was not an innovator, but taught in a clear and simple way as had never been done before the theory of government and morals which forms the basis of Chinese life. Having collected and edited the books which have ever since been the study of the ruling classes in China he came naturally to be regarded as the author and finisher of their faith. A Chinaman of Chinamen, the type of all that is best in his people, his teachings fit their cast of mind and fixed modes of thought. To him the universe was an order both in nature and man, and man's supreme duty was to be virtuous—that is, to be a good relative, neighbor, citizen and friend.

He was averse to all mysticism and taught that the duty of man was to his fellow man, not to unknown spirits. To the suggestion that prayers be offered for his recovery from sickness he replied, "My prayer is constant." Did this mean that he regarded a life of devotion to virtue as a prayer, and that man should not presume to advise the gods? Toward the close of his life he declared that he had not prayed for many years. There is no supernaturalism in his teaching. To be his disciple is to trust for this life and the unknown future; not to forms and ceremonies, sacrifices and beliefs, but to truth and righteousness. Some of his maxims were: "Be rigid to yourself and gentle to others." "Do not to others what you do not wish done to yourself." "I love life and I love justice, but if I cannot have both I would give up life." The Chinese are great believers in luck and in omens. His counsel in this regard was eminently sensible. "The wise man does not fear omens; to abstain from wrong-doing and to live virtuously are the best omens for prince and people."

Confucius was a great ethical teacher, singularly free from superstition and illusions and of exalted character. Like Gautama and Jesus, he has become a god in spite of himself. The personal religion of Gautama was atheism combined with noble ethical principles; that of Jesus was faith in God and love for man, while that of Confucius was agnosticism combined with devotion to the ideally noble life. Jesus, who thought that the world would come to an end in his day, never dreamed of later ages which would reverence him as a god. Growing reverence in all three cases ended in deification. Within three centuries after the death of Confucius honor grew into worship. Temples have been erected to him in every city of the empire; he is worshiped by students, literary graduates and officials, and venerated by all classes. His word is law. However queer the Chinese may be, the reverence they pay to one of the greatest moral teachers in history, though excessive, is to their credit. To their credit also is the fact that while the lines of nobility in Christendom generally run back to some great slaughterer, or killer of his fellow men, the only hereditary nobility in China is the posterity of this great teacher of men. They number many thousands, and it has been truly said that theirs is "the oldest and most honorable title to nobility on the globe."

Were there time I should like to speak of the teaching of Laotze, which is so sadly travestied and distorted by his professed disciples. Some idea of his mental and moral elevation may be obtained from a few precepts. He said: "Resent it not when ye are reviled. He who overcomes others is strong; he who overcomes himself is mighty. When punishment is overdone, malefactors increase." He taught that "Injury should be recompensed with kindness." Confucius, being asked about this, did not agree, but said, "Recompense kindness with kindness, and injury with justice." One of Laotze's followers said: "Wherever one's treasures are, thither will the heart of man follow it," and likened a sanguine man who jumps at conclusions to one who expects to hear an egg crow at daybreak or thinks he can shoot a bird by looking at a crossbow.

"But," it may be said, "this is admitted to be all very fine, but it has not prevented the Chinese from being cruel. They are far from being saints." In this respect, alas, they are like us. For centuries we have worshiped our teacher, and have tortured and killed millions for differences of opinion about his religion, all the while ignoring his principles in our political, commercial and international life. Indeed, in 1900 years we have made so little headway that, according to reports, the head of one of the foremost Christian nations, himself a worshiper of the teacher who commanded his disciples to resist not evil and to bless their persecutors, ordered his departing troops to spare not and take no prisoners. And since men of university training, acquainted with science and art as well as the Christian religion, are so little prone to forgiveness, it is no objection to the teaching and influence of Confucius that the ignorant and superstitious multitudes of his countrymen are led to excess in their not entirely unnatural effort to resist the alienation of their territory and the exploitation of their people. Unfortunately it is easy to reverence ethical principles, but difficult to put them into practice. Were it otherwise the human race would long ago have become a happy family, for all great religions teach righteousness.

It is obviously unfair to compare what is worst in the religions of other people with what is best in our own. If we are fair we must say that the Chinese religion, taken at its best, compares very favorably with our own, the ethics of Confucius with those of Jesus. It does not matter much if the Chinese philosophers did anticipate Jesus in the giving of the golden rule. The really important thing is, not who said it first but that we practice it and that both white men and yellow act in a brotherly way. So far as they taught truth both Christ and Confucius taught the same thing and the teaching of both is far ahead of our practice. If we send missionaries to the Chinese, let them go to encourage them to live by the principles of Confucius in the name of Confucius. And happy would we be if we could be induced to accept, either in the name of Christ or Confucius (it matters not, so we live by them) the following principles from one of their sacred books: "There is nothing that will enable you to pursue your course in greater peace than the patient bearing of insult. There is no deeper source of joy than the love of goodness; nothing will give you profounder insight into the hidden things than perfect sincerity in word and in deeds, but nothing is more certain to bring ruin upon you than partiality or injustice."

A Great Prayer.

One of the evidences of the narrowness and uncharitableness prevalent among a certain class of sectarians is their disregard of that courtesy which characterizes well-bred persons. In almost every instance where a minister of the traditionalist order makes a prayer he appeals to a certain Jewish prophet to aid —"through him." If such appeals were confined to audiences of that particular sect it would not be so objectionable, but when an audience is composed of Jews, Quakers, Unitarians, Spiritualists, and others who take the Nazarene at his own estimate and regard him as a prophet, the case is different; it is not only an instance of ignorance but discourtesy. As an instance of a true and inspiring appeal to the Great Spirit, the great prayer of Theodore Parker is an instance from which we make a few extracts:

"Our Father, we thank thee for this world thou hast placed us in. We bless thee for the heavens over our heads, burning all night with such varied fire, and all day pouring down their glad effulgence on the ground. We thank thee for the scarf of green beauty with which thou mantlest the shoulders of the temperate world, and for all the hopes that are in this foodful earth, and for the rich promise of the season on every side of us.

"We are conscious of our follies, our transgressions, our stumblings by the wayside, and wanderings from the paths of pleasantness and peace. We know how often our hands have wrought iniquity, and we have been mean and cowardly at heart, not daring to do the right which our own souls told us of; and we pray thee that we may suffer from these things, until, greatly ashamed thereof, we turn from them and lead glorious and noble lives.

"Then when our work on earth is finished, and the clods of the valley are sweet to our weary frames, may we spend eternity in the progressive welfare of thy children. And here on earth may the gleams of that future glory come upon us in our mortal life, clearing up the difficult paths, and strengthening our hearts. So may thy will be done, on earth and in heaven."

There is no insult to Deity in this appeal and the true sons of Nature will commend this prayer. QUAKER.

CONSOLATION.

Two Sons Send Loving Messages.

To the Editor:—Our only two sons, aged 32 and 36, passed to spirit life in January and July, 1900. Last April, 1900, we received the enclosed communications from them through Mrs. Smallwood, of Lansing, Mich. They were unsolicited and unexpected. We, the parents, are 70 years of age, and what a comfort to us to feel that we are not alone. Before our affliction came upon us we read such communications with great interest. If you can use these to be a comfort to others in like affliction, you can do so.

Griffin, Ga. A. LOWER.

MESSAGE FROM CHARLIE.

Dear Mamma and Papa:—This is a great treat and privilege to be able to communicate to you in this manner, I come on the current of sympathy that seems to exist between you and Mrs. Smallwood, and I begged the privilege to write to you. I am Charlie, but Ernest is with me. Dear mamma, I often come to you and stay about you, and at night in the twilight I love to come while you sit and think of your two boys, and wonder why we were taken and you left; but, mamma, I was a total wreck. While I was not infirm with age, I never saw a well moment. I am glad it is over. I can come to you free from aches and pains, and that short breathing that was so hard to bear. I come to you with stronger love and tenderness than ever before.

I am in a skilled work-shop studying "mental telegraphy," and if I cannot make you see me, I can impress you with my presence. Tell Mrs. S. (Old Miss) I will come to her and teach her how it is done, and tell her also her guide is going to take her out of her own body, and she will travel through space and see the astral world. She must not be afraid, but to think of it, and make that desire so strong that she can take the flight. It will strengthen her in every way and change the whole current of her life. When she has learned to do that a few times she will get so she can go alone, for she is just as much a spirit now as she ever will be, and she can demand anything that comes within the law, and it will come to her. I feel very grateful to her for what she has done for me and mamma. And mamma, dear, brother and I will try and surround you with our great love and make life's journey as good as possible.

And, papa, when alone in your workshop, we come there and bring you good thoughts and try to make you feel as I do a great many times.

I will now make way for brother. Hoping this message of our great love will comfort you. Your boy,

CHARLIE.

MESSAGE FROM ERNEST.

Dear Mamma:—How glad I am to say to you and dear papa that I still live and can come to see you, love you and care for you. I am all right now, and in a work-shop, trying to help earth mortals on the right road and instruct as well as being instructed. I have met Franklin, Faraday and Hame, all on the same plane of action, and what a grand study.

I hope to tell you more when I have learned more. I have seen Myrtie and her baby. There is a move on in the spirit world to bring a more positive element to the mediums, to make them more positive and self-reliant, better able to cope with the rude elements that go to weaken and undermine. You know a medium is a magnet for all classes, the same as a depot. The test mediums seem to go down under the influence of so many spirits, while the speakers that have their guides that inspire them, grow strong in their work.

I used to criticise the mediums, but I have learned to pity them instead. I mean to try to bring all the electrical force to bear on them that is possible. The electrical waves bring the thought waves.

Papa, did you ever stop to think what a difference there has been ever since the crude oil was utilized as a process of light; the vibrations were so much greater than the tallow dip. Then came the gas, then electricity. Do you know it quickened the vibrations a million fold and brought forth a spiritual wave that has penetrated the whole globe, and yet it is only in its infancy. There are still greater discoveries to be made, and then you will see a greater blending of the two worlds. Spirit and Mortal will travel on this vibratory wave that brings all things in quicker action.

When the world was in a stage of darkness it was a hard matter for an advanced spirit to penetrate it sufficiently to give evidence and advice. It was like the fish in dark pools being born blind; had no need of eyes, but when the search light is turned on, earth's children all see—no need to walk in darkness now. I have written you a long letter through the kindness of this lady, and let me say the same current I have spoken of travels between her home and yours; no need of any wires.

Now I will say good-bye, not farewell.

Your dear boy that loves you,

ERNEST LOWER.

THE DIVINE PLAN has been carried out successfully by The Progressive Thinker; one continual current of the profits returning to our subscribers. Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World only costs our subscribers 25 cents—far less than its actual cost to us. Its regular price to the trade is $1.50. This work should be in every family in the United States. It is elegantly and substantially bound, neatly printed and is an ornament to any library One million copies of this work should be distributed throughout the country. The Progressive Thinker one year and this book will be sent for $1.25.

IMMORTALITY.

Has It Absolute Evidence In Nature.

The importance of the subject is my justification for this article. First, I wish to notice a few of the assertions made by Geo. M. Ramsey, in No. 557 of The Progressive Thinker. He dogmatizes too much. He says: "Hope of immortality is not a conception of race infancy." In making this statement, and more in a similar vein he assumes what he does not know. It seems to me that such assumptions are more strictly in their place among the literary prodigies of orthodoxy.

There are three kinds of evidence: Imaginary, approximate and absolute. Some of the evidence that our friend has adduced is imaginary, a very little may be approximate, but none of it is absolute.

Mr. Ramsey says: "Now, in viewing animates collectively we fail to find in man one trait not possessed by others." Imaginary evidence! With all the elaborate researches of science no man has yet been able to discover the slightest sign among the movements of the lower animals that they contemplated any future state of existence that reaches beyond the "peaceful shades of oblivion." The attempt to substitute reason for instinct is another failure. Pope's couplet is pertinent here:

"And reason raise o'er instinct as you can,
In this 'tis God directs, in that 'tis man."

The instinct of the animal will adapt itself to the climate.

Our friend says: "We have seen that immortality is wholly a suggestion of apparitions." This also is imaginary evidence. We have not seen that immortality is wholly a suggestion of apparitions. Apparitions, indeed, (or spirit communion) may establish the postulate of life's continuity, but no more. The clairvoyance of the lower animals is an undoubted help in establishing the fact of spirit life. He says: "It is safe to assume that if any are immortal, all are." It seems to me that an unbiased investigation would convince our friend that the difference between man and any other species of animal is not little. It is so vast that in the very highest order of the lower animals we cannot find any absolute evidence of immortality, while in man we can find such evidence if we will seek it without the aid of colored glasses, and in a spirit of candor.

The axiom that what has a beginning must have an ending has a degree of plausibility; but it is so far from being a foregone conclusion that it is not an axiom. It is one of the speculative questions, with which our fatalistic and pessimistic friends are persistently stimulating the spirit of investigation, while exhaling a mist of doubt over the struggling hopes of a progressive humanity. I have formulated an absolute demonstration of immortality in a document that is not at present offered for publication; but a hint of its tenor may be given here. It may be called an elucidation of the principle of design in the law of adaptation. I will quote briefly from "Fowler on Religion," page 47, printed nearly fifty years ago:

"Throughout all nature, whenever and wherever anything exists, and is adapted to a second, the existence of the second is sure, else nature would be at fault. An anomaly like the existence of any one thing in nature adapted to that which never existed can nowhere be found." Before the fishes existed there was water to swim in; before the birds there was air to fly in; before man there was air to breathe, water to drink, food to eat and land for a dwelling-place. The fledgling bird does not spread its newly gotten wings to the ambient air unwarrantably. It was made to soar aloft with impunity. Its wings are a palpable proof of the existence of the ethereal pathway that awaits its flight. As considered from our standpoint man has gifts of inexpressibly greater value than wings, in the innate hope which gives him a foretaste of the future here, and a definite clew to the endless vista of immortality; in the inherent faith, which gives not only an intuitive perception of spiritual truth, but trusts the infinitude of the Supreme wisdom and goodness and power; and in the faculty of veneration, which renders homage to the Acme of Perfection. These principles are too well established as organic principles in the human constitution to be set aside by the sniffs and sneers of people whose self-confidence transcends the value of honest investigation. We all believe that Nature is consistent with herself and makes no mistakes; and that what really ought to be true must be true; that the truth is, and ought to be, paramount. If atheism is true, and this life is all; then of course there may be no adequate reason why such truths should not be disseminated. But what would be the advantage? Our atheistic brethren will harp on the value of honesty, and all the virtues. But if I could hold the extreme and unhappy view that there is no God and no immortality, it seems to me that the winsome charms of this beautiful and progressive life would be hopelessly dissipated, and one might adopt the words of a pessimist of old that "All is vanity and vexation of spirit," and "Man hath no preeminence above the beast."

The remark of a friend that "If Spiritualism is not true, there is not anything true," is as good as an axiom to me. And I am persuaded that there is beauty enough and truth enough in this life to assure the doubting and comfort the sorrowing; and that the man who will not, with honest eye and faithful heart, look for the truth and beauty and do what he can to cheer the despondent, lift up the fallen, and throw the light of heavenly reason and hope on the pathway of his fellow-men, is not a friend of his kind.

THE SECOND MOSES.

Rise of Judaism and of Christianity.

Moses Maimonides is regarded by the Jews as the second Moses. He was born in Spain and died in Egypt about the year 1205. Speaking of him, Prof. Edwin Johnson says:

"It was only in his time and that of the Emperor Frederick II. (1194-1250) that the learned world became distinctly conscious of three rival traditions, the Mohammedan, the Jewish and the Christian."

It was Frederick I. (1121-1190) likewise contemporary with Moses Maimonides, who said: "Three prestidigitators, Moses, Christus and Mahomet," as recorded in "Anatomy of Melancholy."

Continuing, Prof. Johnson says:

"The Moslems conquered Spain, which they call Andalus, early in the eighth century. Our historian is here Al Makkari, who is believed to have written in the eleventh century. He makes one or two references to the people called Yahud, which can no more be understood of the congregations governed by the Rabbins than the similar references in the Koran or the Chronicle of Tabari can be. He knows nothing of Christians and their churches, although he has some quaint allusions to the worship of a virgin, which probably relates to some old Roman goddess. He says that Karmattah (Granada) was handed over to Yahud to keep. He has an obscure reference to a Jewish poet, who was thought to be an Islamite at heart. The indications are extremely faint and dubious; nor is there a word in this writer, amidst all his descriptions of the splendors of Cordova and the other cities, which would lead us to infer that he knew of flourishing synagogues belonging to a rival sect. The evidence is blankly negative, equally with that of the chronicles of the Spanish Rabbins.

"We must assume, then, that in the most palmy time of the Western caliphate a little later than Al Makkari, the people called Jehud began to establish themselves as a distinct community, ruled over by men who wielded the imaginary sceptre of Judah, and who persuaded themselves that they were in the line of descent from the famous King David, or Daoud, honored alike by them and by their Moslem masters.

"Of peculiar interest is the Jewry of Toledo. The older synagogue shows horse-shoe arches springing from bastard Gothic capitals. The decoration is Moorish. The date of its erection has not been discovered. In 1405 it was converted into a church under the persecuting San Vicente de Ferrer. Its ceiling is said to have been made from beams of Lebanon cedars. The other synagogue, built in the fourteenth century shows a mixture of Moorish and Gothic with Hebrew. It passed to the order of Calatrava in 1494."

Prof. Johnson adduces cogent evidence that the Hebrew Bible did not exist prior to the year 1000 and that its contents, so far as they run parallel to the great Arabian tradition, are based upon the same, or upon some tradition common to both the Arabians and the Jews. The evidence of the existence of Jews in Asia prior to the first crusade, 1096, or for quite a long time thereafter is extremely faint and dubious. Distinct references appear in the Old Testament to countries in Europe. In Obadiah, Sepharad and Zarephath are mentioned, which, in the holy language of Judaism, as used by the Rabbins, means Spain and France. The pathetic strains of the Hebrew prophet fitly describe the terrible sufferings of the Jews during the Crusades.

In regard to Jerusalem, Prof. Johnson says: "The evidence plainly teaches that no such city ought to appear on any historical map until the twelfth century." In the middle of that century it was still the holy place of the Moslems. Who from ancient times called it Ailia. And to the Romans it was Aelia Capitolina.

The place called Salem, mentioned in Gen. xiv:18 and Heb. vii: 1,2, has never been satisfactorily located. Jewish commentators affirm that Salem was Jerusalem. But St. Jerome, living near the holy city in the fourth century, tells us it was not, and he locates Salem eight Roman miles from Scythopolis. But Jerome is himself as much a myth as Melchizedek, king of Salem. Nor is a Jewish commentator any wiser than a Christian one, like Dr. Wolff, who affirms that Salem was a title and not a place. So also was Jerusalem, even as used by the Rabbins of Spain. One further quotation from Prof. Johnson's "Rise of Christendom":

"In the eleventh century ignorance of Hebrew reigned in the East, while in the West the knowledge of it was beginning. It is only in Spain and during the eleventh century that we move out of the legendary mist into historic daylight, and can pass in review a long line of scholars whose work is crowned by the great Rabbin, the true Moses of the synagogue, who fixed its creed and its law, Maimonides."

Not until the Bible of the Jews was completed could the New Testament have been begun. The Moslems had their Scriptures containing a history of the world from Adam. They traced their ancestry from Ibrahim, chiefly through his first-born son Ismael, whose mother Hagar was an Egyptian princess. After Ibrahim their next great prophet was Isa, the son of Mariam begotten by Gabriel. Mother and son fled to Egypt escorted by her young cousin Yussuf. After thirty years Isa and his mother returned to their native country, where he began to work miracles, restoring sight to the blind, curing leprosy, and even raising the dead. The first of his disciples was Yahya, son of Zachariah the priest, who had been executed by King Herod for alleged adultery with his niece Mariam. After a ministry of two or three years at Ailia and in the adjacent country Isa was attacked by a mob who sought his life. King Herod (Archelaus) gave them to orders to slay him. He had tried to hide himself but one of his disciples, not named, betrayed him for thirty dihrems. The mob dragged him to a place where they had made ready a stake on which to bind and hang him. But Allah removed Isa from their sight and gave the form and aspect of him to Isoua, the leader of the mob. Thereupon they killed and bound Isoua to the stake, as it is written in the Koran: "They have not slain and have not hanged him, but some one who resembled him."

Isoua remained on the stake seven days. Each night came his mother to the foot thereof and wept until morning. On the eighth day Isa came down from heaven to assure her he was not dead. The same night he met at his mother's house seven or eight of his twelve disciples. The one who had betrayed him had slain himself, and Simeon, who had denied his Master, was also absent.

Isa sent forth his disciples to preach. To Greece and Rome he sent Paul and Peter. (This was not Simeon or Simon, called Peter, who had denied him. And if Paul wrote the epistle to the Galatians he could not have been present at that or any other meeting of Isa and his disciples.) To Babylon Isa sent Thomas, to Kairouan Philip, to Ephesus John, and to the Hedja Bartholomew, James and Yahya were to remain at Ailia. (But according to our Gospel John the Baptist, who answers to Yahya, was killed during the ministry of Jesus). Then Isa prayed Allah to raise him to heaven.

King Herod treated James and Yahya kindly. The mother of Isa died six months after his ascension. Yahya was at last beheaded by the King to please his mistress Herodias.

Isa was called "the Masich," meaning healer by the laying on of hands. From this Arabian word evidently comes the Hebrew "mashiach" and the Syriac "meshiha." Hebrew letters cannot be traced back of the year 1000. The Greek word "christos," the equivalent of "mashiach," is not found on ancient monuments, in the catacombs or elsewhere. "Christus" is not a Latin word; it is monkish or modern.

W. H. BURR.

Island Lake Camp, Mich.

We were trebly blest last Sunday by listening to the eloquence of Mrs. Dr. Warne, D. P. Dewey, and Dr. A. B. Spinney. Only those who have heard these three can appreciate what I write. I will not attempt to try to pen what was said; it was simply grand and beautiful.

This is indeed a splendid camp, and well managed, and the patronage has been beyond all expectations. The hotel is good and well kept.

The newly elected board of officers for 1900 and 1901 are as follows: President James H. White, Port Huron; A. B. Smith, Northville; J. Kelley, Brighton; Wm. Murry, Salem; A. G. Brown, Detroit; Mrs. M. A. Root, Bay City, P. O. Hudson, Bay City. And right here let me mention the excellent music which is furnished this camp under the proficient leadership of Prof. Hudson; and we wish to speak especially of the members of the orchestra and choir. We could not find in a year's search one who is so eminently qualified as pianist and contralto as Miss Daisy Dargis, of Bay City, who is not only an elegant musician, but one who comes in contact with her is thoroughly impressed of her high personality and amiable disposition and character. She has endeared herself to the entire camp.

Next I wish to especially mention the genial T. A. Davenport, of Bay City, the round, full-voiced baritone, also clairlionettist. His music is all of the best up-to-date composers. And regarding Mr. Hudson, he is too well known to need compliments. His own compositions carry with them the excellence of the writer, their purity of tone, and uplifting character.

The mediums on the ground have done well. Mrs. St. Omer Briggs is the life inspiring influence of the Ladies' Aid Society, which has done much for this camp.

Several new cottages have gone up this summer, and "still there's more to follow." The Progressive Thinker's interests are well looked after by Dr. Briggs.

Next week will be the closing and we look forward to it as the banner week. The services will be conducted by Mr. Kates and wife and Carrie E. S. Twing. Closing Sunday, September 2.

A CAMPER.

Maple Dell Camp, O.

The National Spiritual and Religious Camp Association was fortunate in having Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown, Spiritualist speaker at Fort Worth, Texas, to occupy the rostrum on Sunday, Aug. 19. She is accompanied by Miss Lucy Ault, a young violinist of rare talent, who opened the meetings with violin solos, to the delight of the large audience.

The subject for the discourse handed Mrs. Brown was "The Bible." There were so many Bibles in the world, she said, that she did not know what Bible was intended by the writer of the question. The Catholics have the Douay, and the Protestants have the St. James. The Moslems have the Koran; the Parsees have the Zend Avesta and the Hindoos have the Vedas.

In the Protestant Bible many conflicting sects find ample proof to sustain their doctrines. The Spiritualist finds in it abundant evidence of spirit communion. At the same time the materialist finds in it the assertions that the "dead know not anything" and therefore cannot communicate.

She spoke of meeting a Mormon who overwhelmed and silenced her with Bible proof of polygamy, while the monogamist finds proof that only one wife is allowed, and the Catholic finds texts in defense of celibacy for all ministers of Christ.

But there is one Bible, she said, which was written by the hand of God and which is harmonious and perfect. It is the Bible of the ages. Its pages are open before our eyes every day. Its words are infallible. Its demands are God's commands. All the other Bibles piled mountain high are insufficient if this Bible of Nature is left out. We must go to it with reverent tread and study it as a divine record.

Mrs. Brown will speak every afternoon, also next Sunday, both forenoon and afternoon.

Lessons in the school department are given every morning at 10 o'clock.

Grove Meetings, Fame, Kan.

Grove meetings were held at the farm of Dr. Richardson, near Fame, Kansas, on Sundays, August 5 and 12. Everybody had a good time, and many freely partook of the generous hospitality of the Doctor's well-spread feast of eatables. The lectures were well received by an attentive if not an appreciative audience. The clairvoyant and psychometric tests that were given by Mr. and Mrs. McEvoy were eye-openers to the orthodox skeptics, and many were present. Their minister has since warned them against attending our meetings, but alas! his warnings will be useless, for the Adam and Eve of mortal man reasons that he should test the knowledge of all forbidden things, and prove their good or evil. 'Tis worse than folly for the preachers to try to hold their flock in their old barren fields of orthodoxy, for they are bound by the law of evolution to seek green fields of knowledge. The preachers are advocating the immortality of man, yet they can not prove their assertions without the communication of immortality, hence they must become Spiritualists to prove their preaching. They say that spirit communication is of the Devil. If it is, and God has caused man to be immortal, then it takes the Devil to prove the work of God. In that case we say, let the Devil go on proving God's work, since God has not given us any other way of proving the immortality of man, except through the communications of the spirits. The orthodox God has ever been inconsistent, incompetent, and ever finding work for the Devil. The good that we Spiritualists find in life, that tends to bring us into heaven, they say 'tis of the Devil. When all is summed up, I believe I like our Devil better than I do their God. He is at least serving the demand of man better, for man demands the proof of the continuity of life.

LOVE, OR WISDOM?

Which Is the True Savior of Men?

It is somewhat singular that not a few Spiritualists have forsaken the basic teachings of early Spiritualism, and adopted fully the false doctrines of the old church. It is very difficult to take up a Spiritualist paper without being surfeited with eulogies of love as the great savior of men. And we are reproved for lack of love, and exhorted to love each other, and assured that all that is wanting to make this world a heaven, is love. This is simply a repetition of what Christianity has been uttering for nineteen centuries, declaring that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." But preaching love, arguing for love does not create, or induce it. You can no more argue or exhort love into a man than you can love logic or mathematics into his comprehension. Attempting to argue or persuade people to love you only repels them farther from you.

Love is not a savior. It is blind. It is impulsive. But it is said, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor." That is a falsehood. Love works the most stupendous ills to the neighbor. Even the love of parents for children is continually working out sorrow and ruin instead of good. Love is blind. It can't see the true course to be followed. It is like the steam in the boiler, which if properly directed, will run the engine, and propel a vast amount of productive machinery, but left to itself will produce wide-spread disaster.

Christianity is the Love Dispensation, and it has had about two thousand years for experiment, with the result that only as mankind become skeptical to its teachings do we see any marked improvement in the race. Love and hate go together. The good lover is always a strong hater, and the Love Dispensation has developed more intense hatred than any other system of religion. It is an aggressive hatred. It invades other systems and seeks to destroy them.

Spiritualism, at the very outset, repudiated the Love Dispensation and inaugurated that of Wisdom as the only savior. It assumed that man had love enough but lacked the wisdom for its proper use. It declared that ignorance was the great fountain and cause of evil, and consequently that true knowledge was indispensable to human progress. A. J. Davis, the inspired and intuitive thinker of the first decade of the movement, made those points so clear that farther elaboration seemed superfluous work. But the incomparable works of Davis seem to be almost forgotten by spiritualists, and the twaddle of those whose eyes are but half open, only enough to stare at crude or fraud phenomena is proclaimed from platform and press as the doctrine of Spiritualism.

All careful students of history know that a short time before the advent of Christianity the Greek civilization had made most rapid progress in scientific discoveries. It is only necessary to repeat the names of Euclid, Ptolemy, Hipparchus, Hero, Eratosthenes, Archimedes and others to show the mighty development of human thought in the line of scientific progress. And when we join to them the intellectual and ethical thinkers like Socrates, Plato, Zeno, Seneca, Aristotle, etc., we have before us one of the most marked eras in history. The progress of Roman conquest had interferred to some extent with this progress, but had by no means destroyed it. In this age the Love Dispensation had its advent, and at once it began a remorseless warfare against all scientific advancement. Ignorance triumphed. Science was crushed. The club, in the hands of the reader in St. Cyril's church, not only beat out the life of the beautiful and philosophical Hypatia, within the precincts of "God's House," but it beat out the life of science in the Christian movement for a thousand years or more. There is a remarkable fitness in the murder of Hypatia in the church where Archbishop Cyril preached the Gospel of Love, for in the larger church —the Holy Catholic church—Pope Gregory the Great, not long after, set up the fitting standard of Christianity: "Ignorance is the mother of devotion."

The maddened zealots of the Love Dispensation, when they had plunged the blazing torch of science and philosophy in the gushing blood of the murdered Hypatia, exulted in the thought that they had quenched it forever. But, strange to say, another bigoted religion caught up the smoking brand, waved it in the air till it blazed again, and in the course of centuries forced divided and reluctant Christianity to again give it place. Only the deadly strife between Catholicism and Protestantism has rendered scientific education possible.

The Spiritualist movement, born in the midst of the Love Dispensation, is liable to take on more or less of its imperfections and crudities. The love-saving notion is one of them. The companion one is ignorance. Practically our movement has been to discount intelligence and eulogise ignorance. In principle there is not one whit difference between the early Christian period and the Spiritualist. The ignorant Galilean fisherman was directed to go forth and preach. He was to take no thought, make no preparation for speaking. Why? Because it should be given him in that very hour. And they spake "as the spirit gave them utterance." They did not speak of themselves.

Well, taking the meagre stories of the New Testament as examples of their speeches, what did they amount to any way? Simply this, and nothing more, they repeated over the common everyday notions of Judaism asserting that the faith and hope of Israel was met in Christ.

What do the mediums do, through and by whom the spirits (not the spirit) speak to-day? As a general rule, they repeat the common notions current among the general run of Spiritists, and assert that the Bible is the great repository of Spiritualism. The early church reasoned in this way: if the Lord, by his spirit speaks through the ministers, what is the use of education? It will destroy spirituality. It will create and foster pride, for "knowledge puffeth up" but "love edifieth." So they preferred to listen to the rant of "unknown tongues" and pretended interpretations, and to all the attendant disorder of "prophesying, hymns (poems)", etc., to the preaching of educated persons. Precisely the same conditions and notions obtain amongst the great mass of spiritists at the present time.

Why don't you have schools and educate your speakers? is often asked. What is the answer? Oh! the spirits will educate them if they need it. They are only "instruments" used by the spirits to teach us the truth. Medium speakers often boast that they don't read books. And they are cautioned by older speakers of the same class not to read, as that might mix the thoughts of the author with those coming from the spirits.

Such an investigation as the Psychic Research Society is making would never have been undertaken by the great Spiritistic body. They were opposed to it at the outset. And if ever Spiritualism becomes the embodiment of scientific knowledge of the great principles embodied therein, it will be largely the result of the force exerted by outside scientists who have forced such an investigation as that of the Psychic Research Society. And this is along the lines of demonstrated knowledge. The long-continued and careful experiments of Hodgson, Myers, Crookes, Hyslop and others, are pushed from an ardent desire for knowledge. It is neither love of God, of Jesus, or of spirits which animates such men. It is love of Wisdom.

A very cursory knowledge of history will show us that human progress has not resulted from any manifestation of love, but purely as a result of intellectual growth and consequently increase of knowledge. Love is supposed to prompt to the performance of ethical duties. To live, as it is commonly said, a moral life. Now, so far as moral precept is concerned there has been no improvement for thousands of years. They are older than history and as wide-spread as humanity. But how to apply these precepts to personal and social life has been the problem which religionists, philosophers and statesmen have been striving to solve practically through all the centuries of recorded time. But confessedly only an approximation to the undying ideal of humanity has been reached. And yet we have had the love of a dying God, of a living spirit and a militant church for two thousand years working for man's progress and salvation. It has been a failure. There has been the prevalence of ignorance. Neither the Father, nor the Son, nor the Holy Ghost, nor their church has had sufficient knowledge to uplift humanity onto that plane of life where all possess equal opportunities for life and happiness. If each person stood alone, with no vital relations to any one else, possibly the method of the Holy Trinity, as mapped out in the Testaments, might answer. But we are compelled to regard man as a potent factor of the social unity which we call the state. Here are multifarious relations, which involve the settlement of the questions of rights, duties and institutions. The great subjects of Political Economy, Finance, Education, etc., demand something more than a loving nature to expound and apply by successful methods. Something more than a lover is needed to manage the finances of a great nation. And the ignorant convert to religion, abounding in love to God and love to man, would cut a sorry figure if placed at the head of our state university. And, in spite of all the denunciatory criticism of Mr. McKinley, we are safe in saying that he is an infinitely better President than one of the most pious, loving ignoramuses to be found. It was long ago conceded that an intellectual, bad man was safer as a ruler than an ignorant good one.

Humanity has always had plenty of love—has all that is needed at present. The manifestation of that love for weal or woe has been determined by the development of his intellectual faculties. The great work of the Spiritualist should be incessant effort for a higher, a more integral education. And he need have no fear of selfishness if he can acquire knowledge of himself. Love and selfishness are nearer related than cousins, but when wielded by wisdom they become potent factors of progress. So you are not to seek for love but for wisdom, or knowledge how to direct the love you have. "Get wisdom and with all thy getting get understanding."

Some Corrections.

To the Editor:—While I dislike a controversy, especially with a woman, I cannot allow a communication in your paper of August 18 to pass without reply. I made my report of our camp as brief as possible, and only mentioned the mediums who did public work on the platform.

It now appears that my report did not suit Mrs. Hooker McEvoy, and she has rushed into print and makes a demand that Justice be done.

Neither Mrs. Steward nor Mrs. Aber received any pay from the association. Mrs. Steward was an entire stranger at the camp and only had her expenses paid. She did good work, nearly every test given being recognized. Mrs. Aber on one occasion gave tests from the platform, which in every instance were recognized.

As to Mrs. Lovett, she appeared to be much of a lady and a good medium, but as she and several other mediums confined their work to their tents, I did not mention them in my report.

Father Eastman, as usual, was the life of the camp and needs no eulogy from me. Hoping this will meet the ends of justice, I am, yours, for the truth,

MAN AND THE CHURCH.

When preachers preached hell fire
The men would stay away,
For they had no desire
To wriggle and perspire
All through the holy day—
They didn't care to know
Of horrors down below—
Such preaching left them so
Unstrung, they used to say.

The doctrine of damnation
Is seldom preached to-day;
A higher revelation
Has brought obliteration
To the devil, so they say—
Yet the men decline to go;
What's the use, they want to know,
Since the fires down below
Have been smothered, anyway?

A Card from Mrs. F. A. Logan.

Dear friends and readers of The Progressive Thinker (the best paper in the world), I want to thank all who have by your kindly feelings and wishes, accompanied by the needful, aided me during my enfeebled condition and straightened circumstances; the sequence of which is that my health of mind and body is so much improved, that the opening heavens and beckoning angels are stimulating me to active service in reaching sorrowing hearts and enquiring minds, in private, in public meetings, and in Circles of Harmony, as well as healing the afflicted of whatever malady, as in days and years agone. Psychometric readings will also be given in poetry when desired. I cannot go amiss of those who need, yet it will facilitate useful effort by receiving letters from those who enclose with full name and whatever they please to give.

HARMONY.

An Appeal for Brotherly Love.

The world is full of unsolved problems, and as it always has been so, it will presumably continue so until the end of time.

The greatest problem to me is, why should Spiritualists not be harmonious? Our philosophy teaches harmony, our devotees advocate harmony, and yet, there seems so little of this commodity that we are almost ashamed to further proclaim to the world that we have a philosophy so much better than the world has ever before known. While this is true to the letter, there is something wrong. Are we too individualized to care for and to put forth an effort to build up a condition of harmony and good will, one to another, that the world may see our claims manifested in our actions? We as a religious body must give an expression of harmony to the world or else be silent on the question until mankind has a better knowledge of self.

If each individual Spiritualist would constitute himself or herself a committee of one to see that the teachings of our beautiful philosophy were carried out in the lines of those who claim to be Spiritualists, the trouble would be eliminated from our ranks.

One of the most touching pledges of fraternal brotherly love I ever witnessed, was at the late convention held in the city of Columbus, O., when two editors rose on the rostrum and stepping forward, each with an extended hand, and as they stood there with clasped hand before that audience they pledged themselves forever a unit in brotherly love and affection. If there ever had been any differences between them, by this act the differences were forever set aside. This public act was a lesson we should all profit by.

While our religion is the best the world has ever known, human nature seems the same. What the race needs is to see themselves as others see them. We want a religious mirror that will reflect us just so we are, or in other words, we want to know ourselves better. In the hurry and rush of human life a study of self has been left out of the question so that few persons know themselves. The farmer knows more about his cattle, hogs, and grain than he does about himself. The merchant knows more about the market price of fine fabrics, and the manufacture of foreign goods than he does of himself. The man who daily attends the Board of Trade is not expected to know anything about himself, and even if he did, each succeeding day is liable to work such changes upon him, that Mr. Smith of to-day might be Mr. Jones of tomorrow, and so it is the human race knows more about everybody and everything else than they do of themselves. Ignorance is not blameless, for in our humble opinion ignorance is the parent of much, if not all of the troubles inflicted upon mortals.

Until Spiritualists become one in a purpose to build a harmonious whole, we will drift into unprofitable channels. The fields are ripe for the sickle of harmony, truth and love, but the laborers are few.

FOR a moment stop and consider. The Progressive Thinker is the one original dollar Spiritualist paper. It introduced a new era in the ranks of Spiritualism. Its success financially has been all that could be desired. Notwithstanding the rise in the price of print paper, it has still maintained its status as the only one dollar Spiritualist paper. Not only that, but it introduced the Divine Plan in its business with its subscribers—a portion of the profits of the office returning to them. Just think of the Seven Premium Books being sent out to our subscribers for $2.35. After paying the postage of these seven books, and the expense of mailing them, all that we have left is $1.50. You can readily see that we are furnishing them for less, by far, than the actual cost to us. We do this work in accordance with The Divine Plan, in order to assist in forming the nucleus of a library in every Spiritualist home. Read carefully our premium list, and you will certainly want to become a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker, if not so already, and obtain the books we announce.

"The Heresy Trial of Rev. B. F. Austin, M. A., D. D. Giving a sketch of Dr. Austin's life, story of the heresy trial, copy of the charges, the heresy sermon, the scene at conference, and Dr. Austin's full address defending his views on Spiritualism at the London Annual Conference at Windsor, Can.," etc. Price 15 cents. For sale at this office.

The Occult Life of Jesus (including the Hull-Covert Debate). Price	$ 2.00
Total price to the trade	$10.75
Total price to our subscribers	$ 2.35
The Progressive Thinker one year and the seven premium books	$ 3.35

These seven books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art will be furnished to our subscribers alone for $2.35. But bear in mind that in order to secure these SEVEN valuable premium books for $2.35, the order must be accompanied with a year's subscription for The Progressive Thinker. The paper one year, $1.00; the seven books, $2.35. Total, $3.35.

The aggregate price of these seven books to the trade is $10.75. In order to assist in forming a Spiritual and Occult Library in every Spiritualist's home, these seven valuable books are furnished to our subscribers for $2.35, which is less by far than their actual cost. The authors make no charge for the vast amount of labor bestowed on these works, and which extended over many years. The publisher receives not a single cent for the great expense he was to, hundreds of dollars being paid out in putting them in type, and electrotyping the pages, and making them ready for the printer. That is why you are getting these intensely interesting books for almost nothing. We are only carrying out the Divine Plan, inaugurated only by The Progressive Thinker. There are thousands of Spiritualists who take no Spiritualist paper, and this inducement is offered, in order that they may commence forming at once a Spiritual and Occult Library, and thus keep in line with the advancing procession. The postage on the above books and expense of mailing is about 85 cents, hence you are almost receiving them as an absolute gift.

By taking 85 cents from $2.35, you will find that all we have left us for those seven books is only $1.50.

Postmasters.

We have been swindled out of a large amount of money by postmasters, who knowing a person desires The Progressive Thinker, sends his money, deducting a large commission. The Progressive Thinker is one dollar per year. The great rise in print paper renders it utterly impossible for us to give any commission to news agents or postmasters.

Bear in mind when making a remittance, that only one book, the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3, is furnished for 25 cents. You must not substitute any other of the premium books for that one.

SCIENTISTS BELIEVE SHE HAS VISITED MARS.

SHE IS SAID TO HAVE LEARNED THE MARTIAN LANGUAGE AND HER SUPPORTERS SAY SHE HAS LIVED THROUGH TWO PREVIOUS INCARNATIONS—IN ONE BEING MARIE ANTOINETTE.

What marvels does not the science of the future reserve for our successors, and who would dare to say that Martian humanity and terrestrial humanity will not some day enter into communication with each other?—Camille Flammarion.

We are so far from knowing all the agents of nature and their divers modes of action that it would not be philosophical to deny phenomena solely because they are inexplainable in the actual state of our knowledge.—LaPlace.

Here for the first time is told by Prof. Flournoy of the University of Vienna, the astounding story of Mlle Helene Smith, of Geneva, Switzerland, whose trance feats have agitated the scientists and Spiritualists of Europe.

Mlle Smith has visited the planet Mars and brought communications from its inhabitants—so she and her thousands of adherents believe.

Still more remarkable, she has learned the Martian language. It has been transcribed and analyzed by experts, and she has drawn pictures of Martian peoples and things.

In visions she lives again through two previous incarnations. In the fifteenth century she was a Hindoo princess who perished on her husband's funeral pyre. In the eighteenth century she was Marie Antoinette.

While impersonating the former character she writes and speaks a species of Sanscrit—a language of which her proper person is ignorant.

As Marie Antoinette her handwriting resembles that of the ill-fated consort of Louis XVI., and her girlish personality takes on a regal dignity and grace.

Mlle. Smith makes nothing out of her trances. She is more wonderful than Mrs. Piper, but is not paid for her services as a medium.

She is a beautiful, modest girl, of irreproachable family and character and fills a responsible position in a commercial house.

Even scientists acknowledge that her sincerity is beyond question.

M. Flournoy is professor of psychology at the university of Vienna and a scientist of first repute. He made the acquaintance of Mlle Smith through Prof. August Lemaitre of the College of Geneva.

These were his first impressions:

"Having gladly accepted the invitation of my worthy colleague I found the medium in question, Mlle Helene Smith, to be a beautiful woman, about 30 years of age, tall, vigorous, of a fresh, healthy complexion, with hair and eyes almost black, of an open and intelligent countenance, which at once invoked sympathy.

"She evinced nothing of the emaciated or tragic aspect which one habitually ascribes to the sibyls of tradition, but wore an air of health, of physical and mental vigor very pleasant to behold, and which, by the way, is not often encountered in those who are good mediums."

Prof. Flournoy watched the development of Mlle. Smith's extraordinary powers at Spiritistic seances and collected a mass of evidence which he is about to present in book form under the title "From India to the Planet Mars."

Through the courtesy of Harper Brothers the Sunday Post-Dispatch has been supplied with advance sheets of this important work, and is thus first to lay before the American public the real story of Mlle Smith's journey to Mars and her previous incarnations as Simandini and Marie Antoinette.

Throughout her trances Mlle Smith is visited by a spirit named Leopold, of whom Prof. Flournoy says:

"The personality of Leopold maintains very complex relations with the preceding creations. On the one hand, it is very closely connected with the royal cycle, owing to the fact that the name of Leopold is only a pseudonym under which is concealed the illustrious Cagliostro, who, it appears, was madly infatuated with Queen Marie Antoinette, and who now, discarnate and floating in space, has constituted himself the guardian angel in some respects of Mlle Smith, in whom after a long search he has again found the august object of his unhappy passion of a century ago."

"We dare to hope," says M. Camille Flammarion at the beginning of his work on the planet Mars, that the day will come when scientific methods yet unknown to us will give us direct evidences of the existence of the inhabitants of the other worlds, and at the same time also will put us in communication with our brothers in space."

Prof. Flournoy believes that Mlle. Smith's wonderfully complex mind was first directed to Mars by a suggestion resembling that of Flammarion—although she is not believed to have read any astronomical work.

This is how the Martian series of voyages began:

At a seance at M. Lemaitre's house, Helene met a widow, Mme. Mirbel, who had been terribly afflicted by the loss of her only son, Alexis, 17 years old.

Helene had the vision first of a young man in the very detailed description of whom there was no difficulty in recognizing the deceased Alexis Mirbel; then of an old man whom the table called Raspail, brought by the young man that he might treat his mother's eyes.

Nothing in that seance recalled in any way the planet Mars, and it could not be foreseen from anything that occurred there that Alexis Mirbel, discarnated, would return later under the name of Esenale as official interpreter of the Martian language.

It was altogether different a month later at the second reunion at M. Lemaitre's, at which Mme Mirbel was again present. On this occasion the astronomical dream appeared at once and dominated the entire seance.

From the beginning, says the report of the seance, Mlle. Smith perceived in the distance and at a great height a bright light. Then she felt a tremor which almost caused her heart to cease beating, after which it seemed to her as though her head were empty and as if she were no longer in the body.

Mlle. Smith, who had been ill at ease, finds herself feeling better; she distinguishes three enormous globes, one of them very beautiful.

"On what am I walking?" she asks. And the table replies:

"On a world—Mars"

Helene then began a description of all the strange things which presented themselves to her view and caused her as much surprise as amusement. Carriages without horses or wheels, emitting sparks as they glided by; houses with fountains on the roof; a cradle having for curtains an angel made of iron, with outstretched wings, etc.

What seemed less strange were people exactly like the inhabitants of our earth save that both sexes wore the same costume, formed of trousers very ample, and a long blouse drawn tight about the waist and decorated with various designs. The child in the cradle was exactly like our children, according to the sketch which Helene made from memory after the seance.

Finally she saw upon Mars a sort of vast assembly hall, in which was Prof. Raspail, having in the first row of his hearers the young Alexis Mirbel, who, by a typological dictation, reproached his mother for not having followed the medical prescription which he gave her a month previously.

At the following seance the Martian language made its first appearance to the delighted spiritists and the perplexed scientists. This is Prof. Flournoy's description of what happened:

"Presently Helene begins to recite with increasing volubility an incomprehensible pargon the beginning of which is as follows (according to notes taken by M. Lemaitre at the time as accurately as possible):

"'Mitchma mitchmon mimini tchoualnem mimatchineg masichinof mezavi patelki abresinad navette naven navette mitchichenid naken chinoutoufiche.'

"After a few minutes Helene interrupts herself, crying out: 'Oh, I have had enough of it; you say such words to me and I will never be able to repeat them.' Then, with some reluctance, she consents to follow her interlocutrix into the car which was to carry her to Mars.

"Arrived upon Mars she descends from the car and performs a complicated pantomime expressing the manners of Martian politeness; uncouth gestures with the hands and fingers, slapping of the hands, taps of the fingers upon the nose, the lips, the chin, etc., twisted courtesies, glidings and rotation on the floor, etc. It seems that is the way people approach and salute each other up there.

"I command her to speak French to me; seems to understand and replies in Martian, with an irritated and imperious tone. I ask her to tell me her name; she replied 'Vasimini Meteche.'

"With the idea that perhaps she 'is incarnating' the young Alexis, of whom she has spoken so much in the preceding phase, I urge Mme Mirbel to approach her, and thereupon begins a scene of incarnation really very affecting. Mme Mirbel is on her knees, sobbing bitterly, in the presence of her recovered son, who shows her marks of the most profound affection and caresses her hands 'exactly as he was accustomed to do during his last illness,' all the time carrying on a discourse in Martian, which the poor mother cannot understand, but to which an accent of extreme sweetness and a tender intonation impart an evident meaning of words of consolation and filial tenderness. This pathetic duet lasted about ten minutes, and was brought to an end by a return to lethargic sleep, from which Helene awakened at the end of a quarter of an hour, pronouncing a short Martian word, after which she instantly recovered the use of her French and her normal waking state.

"Questioned as to what had passed, Helene, while drinking tea, narrates the dream which he has had. She has a sufficiently clear memory of her journey and of what she has seen on Mars, with the exception of the young man of whom she has retained only a recollection of the scene of incarnation."

That was only the beginning. With the aid of the spirit of Alexis Mirbel, whose Martian name was Ensenale, the language was systematically developed and translated into French—Mlle Smith's mother tongue. Meanwhile the medium made many sketches of Martian houses, flowers, animals and people.

Most important of all Martian characters was the "great man Astane," reincarnation on Mars of the Hindoo fakir Kanga, who was a devoted companion and friend of Simandini. He has preserved in his new existence the special character of savant or of sorcerer, which he formerly possessed in India, and he has equally retained all his affection for his princess of old, who has been restored to him in Mlle. Smith; he frequently utilizes his magic powers to evoke her—that is to say, to re-enter into spiritual communication with her, notwithstanding the distance between their actual places of habitation.

The following are some details concerning a vision, which occupied the greater part of a seance:

"Helene in a vast, red, initial light, sees a Martian street appear, lighted neither by lamps nor electricity, but by lights shining through small windows in the walls of the houses. The interior of one of these houses becomes visible to her; a superb square hall, lighted at each angle by a kind of lamp formed of four superposed globes—two blue and two white—not of glass; under each lamp a small basin, over which was a kind of cornucopia pouring forth water.

"There were many ornamental plants. In the middle of the hall a grove, around which are placed a number of small tables with a polished surface like nickel.

"There are young people in Martian robes; young girls with long hair hanging down their backs, and wearing at the back of the head a head-dress of roses; colored blue or green butterflies attached to the neck."

Prof. Flournoy subjects the Martian language to a careful analysis. He says:

"It is necessary at the start to render this justice to the Martian (I continue to designate it by that name for the sake of convenience), namely, that it is indeed a language and not a simple jargon or gibberish of vocal noises produced at the hazard of the moment without any stability.

"I will add that in speaking fluently and somewhat quickly, as Helene sometimes does in somnambulism, it has an acoustic quality altogether its own, due to the predominance of certain sounds, and has a peculiar intonation difficult to describe. Just as one distinguishes by ear foreign languages which one does not understand, the whole dialect possessing a peculiar accent which causes it to be recognized, so in this case one perceives from the first syllables uttered, whether Helene is speaking Hindoo or Martian, according to the musical consonants and vowels belonging to each of the two idioms."

But while he admits that Mlle. Smith did not consciously invent the language, Prof. Flournoy comes to the conclusion that it is a product—and a very remarkable product—of her latent consciousness. He points out in detail its similarity in many respects to French, the only earthly language she knows.

Nevertheless thousands of educated persons firmly believe that Helene Smith has been in Mars and learned the language of that planet.

Not less remarkable is the Hindoo romance in which she figures during her trances. This is the plot:

"Helene Smith was, at the end of the fourteenth century of our era, the daughter of an Arab sheikh, possibly named Pirux, which she gave up in order to become, under the name of Simandini, the eleventh wife of Prince Sivrouka Nayaka.

"This Sivrouka, who reigned over Kanara and built there in 1461 the fortress of Tchandraguiri, does not seem to have been a very accommodating person. Although not bad at heart and quite attached to his favorite wife, he had a wild humor and very uncouth manners. More could not be expected of an Asiatic potentate of that epoch. Simandini, nevertheless, passionately loved him, and at his death she was burned alive on his grave after the fashion of Malabar."

Many were the Hindoo visions with which Mlle Smith awed and delighted her fellow-spiritists. She imagined that Prof. Flournoy himself was Prince Sivrouka, her husband. The most dramatic feature of these trances was the enactment of the last scene of the tragedy. Here is the professor's description of her actions:

"She goes slowly around the room, as if resisting and carried away in spite of herself, by turns supplicating and struggling fiercely with these fictitious men who are bearing her to her death.

"All at once, standing on tiptoe, she seems to ascend the pile, hides, with affright, her face in her hands, recoils in terror, then advances anew as though pushed from behind. Finally she falls on her knees before a soft couch, in which she buries her face covered by her clasped hands. She sobs violently.

"It is the moment at which she again passes through her agony on the funeral pile; her cries cease little by little; her respiration becomes more and more panting, then suddenly stops and remains suspended during some seconds, which seem interminable.

"It is the end! Her pulse is fortunately strong, though a little irregular. While I am feeling it, her breathing is re-established by means of a deep inspiration. After repeated sobs she becomes calm and slowly rises and seats herself on a neighboring sofa. This scene of fatal denouement lasted eight minutes.

"She finally awakens, remembering to have seen in a dream the dead body of a man stretched on a funeral pile and a woman whom some men were forcing to ascend the pile against her will."

The most amazing part of the story is that Prof. Flournoy believed for a long time that Sivrouka and his wife were imaginary characters, because he could find no traces of them in Hindoo history. But at length he ran across a very rare work by De Marles, telling in brief form the romance that Mlle Smith lived through in her trances.

Goven, the skeptical professor, admits that it is almost impossible for Mlle Smith to have read DeMarle's book.

The fact that she has no conscious recollection of it proves nothing against such a supposition to any one who is familiar with the play of our faculties.

There is much more in Prof. Flournoy's book that will astound the reader, told as it is in a precise, unemotional way.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Haslett Park Camp, Mich.

Tuesday morning the friends combined forces and conference opened with these three topics: Love, Wisdom, and What Are We Here For?

In the afternoon, our speaker, Mrs. Weatherford, took up the words, The Unseen Forces of the Universe, and gave a very interesting discourse.

Wednesday was a dreary day, as the rain came falling down and a heavy atmosphere seemed to surround us all, yet we had a good meeting. Evening was the dance, and in spite of the weather there was a large crowd and pleasant time. The Ladies' Auxiliary served ice cream and cake at our dining-hall, which netted us a round sum, which we are to present to the managers of the camp, to help defray the expenses of building the new gate and office combined, which is one of the grandeurs of the grounds. It has a covering in case of rain, and our office is a blessing to all.

Thursday morning, sunshine, so that all came out refreshed and our conference took on the form of an experience day, each and every one giving the facts as to why they became Spiritualists.

Thursday afternoon Mrs. Weatherford took up the subject, The Parentage of Humanity. She gave a good lesson to grow on for the next year to come.

Friday brought to speaker and friends her final address. The address was a blessing to us all, as the friends had formed an attachment to her never to be forgotten. Her improvised singing, with subjects taken from the audience, such as the Checker Board of Life, Love One Another, and other subjects, was a masterly piece of work. Mrs. Weatherford is a grand speaker, deep and full of bright teachings, and the campers parted with her with the hopes of meeting her again the coming year.

Saturday afternoon brought to us Mr. and Mrs. Kates. After congratulations, Brother Kates opened the meeting, saying he came to us as a brother, friend, and co-worker with the rest of us, and we had all got to work during his stay.

In the evening we all assembled in the hall for a social time, with singing, recitation, and a happy union of voices.

Sunday morning was bright with the sunshine, but rather warm. People gathered in full force, and the meeting opened up with a full house eager to hear from their loved ones gone. Brother Kates gave us a lecture on the surprises after death.

Mrs. Kates filled us in the afternoon, with the words, What is Life, and did all know the principle of life and their paths of duty. Take the lily for instance with its pure whiteness for our teachings and from that we would learn the true nature of living. She also said that death was the highest experience of life, but life was never more potent than when it is so-called death.

MRS. O. H. SOULE.

YOU, as a progressive mind, should know something of the phenomena of that magnificent change called Death. On that subject you will find valuable information in the three volumes of The Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World Those three volumes contain more valuable information on that subject than all the libraries of the world. They are furnished to the subscribers of The Progressive Thinker at a nominal cost. Read carefully our premium list.

MRS. PIPER'S SEANCES

Lilian Whiting's Second Chapter on Psychic Research.

POWER OF THOUGHT—DIRECT COMMUNICATION WITH THE SPIRIT OF KATE FIELD—MESSAGES THAT INTERESTED DR. HODGSON, THE PSYCHICAL RESEARCH EXPERT, IN MRS. PIPER'S WORK.

Prof. Dolbeare, of Tufts college, the great authority upon the properties of the ether, says that in it there is no friction, and a body will move at a velocity exceeding that of light, which itself is more than 182,000 miles a second, says the Chicago Inter Ocean. Does not this explain the movement of those who have gone on into the unseen world? The manner in which they approach us with the swiftness of thought? Of the properties of the ether Professor Dolbeare says:

"The ether is a storehouse of unlimited energy of many kinds. So, if every particle of matter were instantly annihilated, there would still be a universe filled with energy, though it might not be serviceable, because lacking the conditions for transformation into useful forms. This may be said to be one of the functions of matter—the transformation of the energy it gets from the ether.

* * * * * * * * * * *

"If the ether fills all space, is not atomic in its structure, presents no friction to bodies moving through it, and is not subject to the law of gravitation, it does not seem proper to call it matter.

* * * * * * * * * * *

"Every physical phenomenon runs at last into an inexplicable, into an ether question."

These scientific discoveries regarding the ether show that this more subtle and rarified air holds within it potencies of whose nature we are only beginning to comprehend. It is the storage of a tremendous energy; it is magnetic with intelligence; it has the power of recording and holding impressions; it has the properties through which and by means of which these can be communicated and distributed. This etheric atmosphere seems undoubtedly to correspond to the needs of an etheric world, or a world whose inhabitants are in the next state of being above our own; and this plane is apparently the normal one; the life whose significance and reality are far greater than in the condition here.

Evidently a definite change leads from the ethereal to the spiritual realm, and from the spiritual to the celestial, as the change of death leads from the physical to the ethereal, or the next immediate state of man. The great sorrow that has surrounded death, the consciousness of loss with which it has been invested, will all be changed with the general diffusion of knowledge as to its real character. It is simply the withdrawal of the etheric double from the denser body. The etheric double is a fac-simile of the physical body, and is the vehicle, so to speak, or the sheath of the soul, with all its organs and powers, just as the physical body has been. This etheric double withdraws each night during sleep. The phenomenon of sleep is very similar to that of death, save that the connection is retained between the etheric and the physical form. When this connection is severed, then it becomes death, and it is then that man enters on his more significant life. Kant notes that while the death of the body may be the end of the sensational use of the brain, it is only the beginning of the intellectual use. "The body would thus be, not the cause of our thinking, but merely a condition restrictive thereof, and although essential to a sensuous and animal consciousness, it may be regarded as an impeder of our pure spiritual life," he adds.

THE POWER OF THOUGHT.

One of the modern advertising methods is to flash words on the air, as if written in letters of fire, by means of electricity. It may be that thought, as the very highest and most intense potency known, writes itself in the ether every time we speak, and that those in the ethereal world whose minds are in sympathetic communion with our own thus read the words that we speak.

Professor Benjamin Peirce, the great astronomer, defined man as a machine for converting material into spiritual force, and a truer comprehension of the spiritual man will reveal more and more clearly that the denser body is a delicate and wonderful mechanism for the transmission of intelligence, which is but another name for the spiritual power that acts with creative energy on the world of matter.

The average conception of spiritualism, at present, is that it consists of a belief in mediumship; and that the line of differentiation between those who are and who are not Spiritualists consists solely in those who seek the phenomena of mediumship and those who do not. Nothing could be more rudimentary than this conception. The philosophy of Spiritualism is the philosophy of the nature and destiny of the soul. It is the philosophy of eternal life. It must be sought within. There are people who will assert that they have spent large amounts of both time and money "going to mediums," over a long period of years, but they "have never gotten anything satisfactory." Most certainly not. As well might those who are ignorant of the rudiments of mathematics consult the calculations of an astronomer. The elementary necessity is to learn something of the nature and the powers of the spiritual and the psychic nature—the spiritual being the higher principle and the psychic nature being its manifestation. The theory of communication between those in the seen and in the unseen worlds so profoundly interested Mr. Gladstone that in a conversation with Mr. Myers in 1885, the great statesman and premier of England said:

"It is the most important work which is being done in the world, by far the most important," he repeated, with a grave emphasis.

MRS. PIPER AS A MEDIUM.

The problem of psychic research is so intimately connected with the name of Mrs. Piper that a word regarding the phenomena of her mediumship may contribute to the elucidation of the phenomena produced through her organism. She becomes entranced; a little table is drawn up at her left side, with cushions on it, on which her head is supported. In this perfectly unconscious state her right hand is stretched out where a table with writing pad and pencils is placed, and her own hand writes the messages. The theory is that her hand is used as the instrument by the unseen person present, and this theory is one supported by so authoritative an array of testimony that no attempt to reproduce it will be made here. The records of the Society for Psychical Research offer such overwhelming evidence from representative names all over the world that he who runs may read. Those who have experimented with Mrs. Piper's mediumship are not seekers—nor finders—of any psychical phenomena. Her organism is apparently a species of telephonic transmitter, and the communication resolves itself into a conversation of mingled speaking and writing—oral on the part of the sitter; written through the hand of Mrs. Piper on the part of those in the unseen.

One very marked thing in the series of communications given by Miss Field through Mrs. Piper's hand was her own evident and constant anxiety to give tests of her individuality. This was facilitated greatly by the circumstances of the time. Dr. Hodgson gave every morning to a seance with Mrs. Piper, and she fell in the way of coming to him frequently. This enabled him to offer almost innumerable proofs that she—or some supernormal intelligence bearing her characteristics—saw and heard much that went on pertaining to my own life—conversations in my room, my reading, and inner experiences that were not recorded in any outward manner of writing or conversation. It chanced that some months before her death she had been intensely interested in the establishment of cable communication between the United States and Hawaii, and she had urged me, as a press writer, to endeavor to assist in stirring up the matter; and, as a matter of veritable record, I incorporated her earnest appeal into a letter to the New Orleans Times-Democrat some time in the December or January of 1895 or 1896. Some time after her death she was writing to Dr. Hodgson through Mrs. Piper's hand—no one else being present—and evidently by way of giving him a striking test of her identity she wrote:

"Ask —— if she recalls the fact of my wishing her to stir up the cable question in the newspapers before I came here" (the "here" referring to the ethereal world). "I am sure she must recall this expression —'stir up.'"

MESSAGES FROM KATE FIELD.

When Dr. Hodgson gave to me the communication in which she assured him that I would recall the expression, "Stir up," I replied by placing the original letter from her in his hands, in which occurred this paragraph:

"If the people here do not get cable communication with the United States they will eat each other up. Do stir up the newspapers on this matter."

An exceedingly characteristic expression, as all who know her would agree, was the following, written (through Mrs. Piper's hand) to Dr. Hodgson, in reply to some remark of his:

"I tell you, my friend, I am wide awake, and if there is any spirit in our world who really knows what is going on in yours, I wo."

Many years before her death, in her "Planchette's Diary," Miss Field had written:

"It seems to me natural, judging by my own feelings of what I should be impelled to do, that spirits should desire to communicate with their friends on earth."

Apparently this desire continued, and a certain little vein of tenacity regarding her own work, which characterized her in this world, persisted, as revealed in this sentence, written to Dr. Hodgson, in reference to some test of her own:

"For my sake, all of my tests I wish kept separately. This is a new field of work for me, and I am anxious to keep it as clear as possible, and do as much as I can for you."

On that occasion she assured Dr. Hodgson that she could impress me to do a certain thing, which, for some reason or other, I actually did accomplish before knowing that any such assertion on her part had been made; and later, in reference to it, she wrote to Dr. Hodgson:

"I am not taking too much credit upon myself in saying she has carried out the expressed wish, as I told you previously. The test is mine, and I claim it."

The passion for accuracy that distinguished her in this world was recalled by her reply to a remark of Dr. Hodgson's to the effect that he thought she was only guessing at a certain thing, when, in response, she wrote:

"You do not seem to understand me very well, do you? I was a great traveler, and while I knew perfectly well where my possessions were when I was in the body, it is not to be wondered at that after this change I should be unable to recall everything all at once. I think of different things and different matters."

Again, to Dr. Hodgson, in evident and very characteristic comprehension of his work in psychic investigation, she wrote:

"I do not wish to be selfish and take up any one's time, but I like so much to come and speak with you, and you know I will always watch for any little test and come in and give it to you whenever the opportunity presents itself."

"You are first rate at this," Dr. Hodgson replied.

"I was not fishing—"

"Nor was I flattering," he rejoined.

"Yet," she continued, "I was only trying to make you understand that if I were able I would.

"You are happy in your present life?" he asked.

"Indeed, I should think I ought to be; I never knew what life was at all until I came here. It was like climbing up some rocky precipice; and when I extricated myself from the partially decayed house in which I dwelt I realized such hapiness as no one in the mortal life has ever known."

"And it keeps on increasing?" he questioned.

"Yes, indeed, I assure you no one knows better than I do the delights of this world, and I am only too glad to have you come so soon. Now tell—— all this for me. Give her my warmest love and most tender sympathy. Tell her I have never known her as I do now."

Dr. Hodgson found a little difficulty in deciphering the last line or two, and mentioning this, she rejoined:

"Yes, it will do very well. I intended saying that I understood her love and devotion as I never could have done in the body.

DEVELOPMENT OF PSYCHIC FACULTY.

The next phase of communication will be the development of man's psychic faculties, enabling each individual to enter directly, without benefit of medium, into communication with those in the unseen by means of the development of his own spiritual nature. If, indeed, it be true that death is only "an entrancing thing," as Dr. Drummond phrases it, and is not that unspeakable grief that it has been regarded; if it be true that we may transfer all our love and our reality of recognition from the physical form that we do not see; if we may comprehend that the reason we are unable to see it lies in the scientific fact that this subtle body is in a state of higher vibration than the physical eye can command, but that we may know its reality as we know the reality of electricity, although unable to see it—if all this be true, it is of such overwhelming importance as to compel every one to share whatever experience might be calculated to contribute any light on the problem. Death has been the one irreparable loss. Are we about to enter on a period in which this sorrow is to be transfigured to a new joy? Are the spiritual faculties of man so to transcend this change of form as to bridge the gulf of separation and find, instead, a closer and more satisfying companionship than is possible to the life on earth? Is the world to enter on a period of receiving larger knowledge from the plane just beyond in a manner that shall be consciously and intelligently recognized? The trend of actual experiences—of experiences which are becoming almost universal—points to this conclusion.

The present life must be recognized as merely one of the phases in the evolutionary progress of the immortal being, and as offering a vantage ground from which we can study the conditions of the future, which is the inevitable and the invariable effect of such causes as we ourselves set in motion, producing them by the series, of choices that we make, each one of which creates its own conditions. Intelligence and morality are thus closely conjoined, and the more clearly man realizes his own nature and his relations to the Divine universe, the more nobly may he live and the more swiftly may he advance to the higher conditions of freedom and of happiness, in which he shall realize the life of the spirit, which is joy and peace. The first requisite to this happier condition is in self-control, in its larger sense of control of thought, of deed—of all that goes to make the quality of life. LILIAN WHITING.

HYPNOTIC CONTROL.

I have just prepared a Mail Course of five complete lessons on this subject, and have them bound in booklet form. The complete Mail Course will be sent to any one for only 10c silver. This course of instructions contains my latest discoveries and methods with which you can hypnotize any subject, no matter how hard. I have written them for the benefit of professional hypnotists, and all who wish to greatly increase their percentage of success. No matter, student, whose instructions you have, and no matter what your degree of success, if you send me 10c I will send you this complete course, which will enable you to fasten on to any incomplete instructions and succeed right from the start. No matter whether you have ever studied hypnotism before or not, you will find yourself succeeding at first trial. You can hypnotize anyone that complies with these original methods. I repeat, that you are just as sure to hypnotize the first person that complies with these methods as you are sure that the sun rises and sets.

These complete instructions, mind you, will be sent for only 10c, actually enabling you to thoroughly master all herein described, without further charge. This book also contains methods for Self-Healing that will not fail. I absolutely guarantee that when complied with they cannot fail to cure diseases that medicine cannot touch at all. Any one can be a practical operator in the Occult Arts who reads this Mail Course. This book contains my very latest discoveries, which enable all to induce the hypnotic sleep in themselves almost instantly, at will, awake at any desired time, and thereby cure all known diseases and bad habits. Anyone can induce this sleep in himself at first trial, control his dreams, read the minds of his friends and enemies, see absent friends, communicate with disembodied spirits, visit any part of the earth, solve hard questions and problems in this sleep, and remember all when awake. This so-called Mental Vision Lesson and four others—one in Self-Hypnotic Healing, Control of the Sub-Conscious Mind in the waking state, and several strong healing methods are all contained in this little book, which will be sent to any one for 10c silver, enabling you to be as good an operator as any one living. Mind you, this can be successfully accomplished by the study of this little book, without further charge.

I am so absolutely confident that you will be successful, right from the start, with these instructions that I will even send them SUBJECT TO EXAMINATION, if so desired, just to prove to the most skeptical that they form the best course ever sold for 10c, and to all who send the dime, if they should be dissatisfied, money will be cheerfully refunded. But this Mail Course is just as described, for I would not dare to use the mails for any fraudulent purpose. This bargain offer is limited, so send at once to

Or "Le Bon Sens,"

By JEAN MESLIER,

A Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastoral service of thirty years in France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and asked God's pardon for having taught the Christian religion. He left this volume as his last will and testament to his parishioners and to the world. Translated from the French original by Miss Anna Knoop.

Post 8vo., 339 pages, with portrait. Cloth, $1.00; postage, 14 cents.

"The work of the honest pastor is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind that the last century produced. . . . Paine and Voltaire had reserves, but Jean Meslier had none. He keeps nothing back; and yet, after all, the wonder is not that there should have been one priest who left that testimony at his death, but that all priests do not."—James Parton.

The To-Morrow of Death.

---OR THE---

Future Life According to Science.

BY LOUIS FIGUIER.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY S. R. CROCKER.

A VERY FASCINATING WORK.

This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author is not a Spiritualist—he even mentions Spiritualists as "devotees of a new superstition," etc., etc., in which he manifests the usual animus of the "scientific class," yet he says again: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of Earth;" and he goes on to relate instances of fact in evidence. There is, to a Spiritualist, a manifest discrepancy in the author's ideas, but the well-read mind will readily select and arrange the pros and cons, and out of the whole will find not only good mental culture, but much valuable information. The author holds the theory of reincarnation. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

J. R. FRANCIS, Editor and Publisher.

Entered at Chicago Postoffice as second-class matter.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice, at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One year $1.00
Six months 50c
Thirteen weeks ..... 25 cts
Single copy ..... 5 cts

REMITTANCES.

Remit by Postoffice Money Order, Registered Letter, or draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so don't send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Direct all letters to J. R. Francis No. 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

CLUBS! IMPORTANT SUGGESTION!

As there are thousands who will at first venture only twenty-five cents for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER thirteen weeks, we would suggest to those who receive a sample copy, to solicit several others to make with them, and thus be able to remit from $1 to $10, or even more than the latter sum. A large number of little amounts will make a large sum total, and thus extend the field of our labor and usefulness. The same suggestion will apply in all cases of renewal of subscriptions—solicit others to aid in the good work. You will experience no difficulty whatever in inducing Spiritualists to subscribe for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, for not one of them can afford to be without the valuable information imparted therein each week, and at the price of only about two cents per week.

A Bountiful Harvest for 25 Cents.

Do you want a more bountiful harvest than we can give you for 25 cents? Just pause and think for a moment what an intellectual feast that small investment will furnish you. The subscription price of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER thirteen weeks is only twenty-five cents! For that amount you obtain one hundred and four pages of solid, substantial, soul-elevating and mind-refreshing reading matter, equivalent to a medium-sized book!

TAKE NOTICE!

☞ At expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly, write to us, and errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it is then sent, or the change cannot be made.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The Progressive Thinker is furnished in the United States at $1.00 per year, the postage thereon being but nominal, but when it is sent to foreign countries we are compelled to charge 50 cents extra, making the yearly subscription $1.50. Please bear that in mind.

Leave China to the Chinese.

The best advice we have seen from China comes from Sir Robert Hart, at Pekin, to his home government:

"The sooner we can be got out of this the better, for it is inconvenient for the Chinese government and unsafe for ourselves."

While the "we" doubtless referred to the foreign legations cooped up in the capital of a country, against which all the civilized world seems warring, it is equally applicable to the Christian missionaries who are at the bottom of all the trouble. Their meddlesome interference with the established religion has aroused hatred no government can successfully oppose.

Only a few years ago this whole country was threatened with disruption, beginning with a labor strike in this city, which required the strong arm of the federal government to suppress. A religious war has always been more bitter and cruel than those growing out of secular affairs, and far more difficult to control. The people of China are as devoted to their faith as are the Christians to theirs, and have as good a right to be let alone, and enjoy their belief unmolested as have Christians. Then why not withdraw those intruding disturbers of public tranquility from the Celestial empire, and hereafter instruct them to stay at home and mind their own business, and let the Chinese people mind theirs. This done and no wars and no bloodshed will follow. Bible societies may still continue to flood the country with bibles if they will, and the people may send them back to us in retaliation, in the form of fire-crackers to disturb our repose, put out children's eyes, and burn our cities, as they have been doing for years.

They All Agree.

All sources of information agree in holding Christian missionaries responsible for the trouble in China, end as those troubles may. President David Starr Jordan, of Leland Stanford University, in a recent letter written from Japan, grasps the whole question, and tells his conclusions in a few words:

"The first source of trouble, and perhaps the least, is found in the work of Christian missionaries. Wisely or unwisely, some of these put themselves in direct opposition to time honored but doubtless very objectionable, Chinese customs. To overthrow these is, in the minds of the country folk, to destroy the worship of ancestors, to sap the foundations of Chinese morality and generally to wreck both church and state.

"More potent toward immediate trouble has been the invasion of railway and mining engineers, who wander about the country, often reckless of native customs or prejudices, asking nobody's leave and heeding nobody's objections. The Chinese do not want railroads. Still less will they consent to have them run through their grandfathers' graves, and almost every foot of land is somebody's graveyard. They do not like mines, least of all those conducted by 'foreign devils' in sacred hills, and they are incensed when samples of ore are knocked off from their tombs or their temples."

The Priest with His Book.

There has been of late a growing habit among the dear sisters attending church service, to doff their head gear, while listening to pious instructions from the pulpit. The idea is a most excellent one lately introduced into theaters, and should be adopted everywhere in public assemblies; but a preacher whose only ambition is to perpetuate old customs, originated by monks in days of universal ignorance, has found a "thus saith the Lord," which settles the question and ends discussion with all who surrender reason and common sense to the dictates of a silly monk who has assumed the name of Paul:

"Every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head, for that is even all one as if she were shaven. For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn; but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered."—I. Cor., 11: 5-6.

We laugh at Mohammedan women concealing their faces from the gaze of men when they go upon the street with uncovered heads; but is not the hideous bonnet, adorned with the stuffed skins and plumage of slaughtered birds, many times more repulsive to a cultured mind?

Sam Jones "Slams" the Churches.

The Chautauqua Assembly is supposed to be ultra religious and dignified, and the programmes of its conventions are usually most attractive. With some religion, in prayers and sermons, there is a great deal of instruction in lessons and lectures. At a recent assembly held at Galesburg, Ill., Sam Jones was the chief attraction. This reverend mountebank has one characteristic—he hits out in all directions like an army mule, and is even more dangerous to his friends than his enemies. If the assembly engaged him in the service of the church, they made a mistake they afterwards regretted, for his blows were principally aimed at what passes for religion. As the "discourse" was reported in the dailies and published without comment by religious journals, we presume our readers will pardon the appearance of a few passages in the The Progressive Thinker, although we admit them with misgiving and a reservation as to their brutal coarseness. Our excuse must be, to let our readers see the stuff which a gathering of 3,000 representative church-members "laugh over until satisfied," and give unmeasured applause. In reading these passages the query arises whether Sam Jones is not really doing the work of an Ingersoll, disguised as a preacher! Is he in earnest, for the church, or in opposition?

"The biggest fool in Illinois is the fellow who will argue against facts. Here is a fellow who argues against a fact and if you fill my head with saw-dust, I would know more than that man. There are two theories about baptism. Some put a little water on the kid's head and some wait till he is grown up and then they souze him clear under. Both are good theories, but the baptism does not make the man.

"Society is rotten at the top and at the bottom, and the only sound streak is in the middle. You town girls cut off the top of your dress for the ball, and the bottom for the bicycle, and I really begin to fear for you. It looks like a return to Eden's state.

"Look at the society woman. No life and no warmth in her. God blessed the man who has a wife and ten children, but He didn't bless the man who has a little dried-up society woman for a wife, with a poodle dog. I tell you that when my wife and I can't run our children, we are going out of the kid business. Many a kid has been born an orphan, has no mammie nor daddie. I believe in licking them. You young bucks who marry a girl who sasses her mother and she will finally do you up. The only way to raise a boy is to raise him often.

"Here is a man who has never been 500 miles from Galesburg and he says there is no God and he has never read 500 pages of solid literature and he says there is no hell, but he will not be in hell one second until he will cringe and say: 'My God! what a mistake I made'

"To-day the Methodist and Baptist churches are the greatest exponents of God, and in the last four years they have lost numerically. You old sisters, you are all right, but you have no sense. Don't worry, for if you should get into water over your head, you would float for your head wouldn't sink.

"Come here once a year and get something in your noggen. You old dogs can't expect to learn much, but come and bring the pups, they will learn. Methodists and Presbyterians are about the same thing, for the Methodist thinks he has religion, but is afraid he will lose it, and the Presbyterian is safe, but he doesn't know he has it.

"You old hypocritical devils, pray to God to save our boys and our land from rum and then go down and vote the Republican or Democratic ticket with the lousy devils who want rum licensed. Well, if you don't go to hell, it will be because hell has been burned out before you get there."

Giving Up the Past.

Advices from Constantinople of August 8, through the London Daily News, in regard to late discoveries by the University of Pennsylvania Expedition to Nippur, are of the most interesting character. The party discovered the library of the Great Temple, with over 17,000 tablets dealing with historical and literary matters, not one of them of later date than 2280 B. C.

"The unexplored remains of the library," says the correspondent, "will require five years for excavation. If those parts prove as rich in results as the portion already found there will be no example in the world's history, not even in Egypt, of so complete a recovery of the records of ancient civilization."

Wondrous, is it not, that these productions of such a remote past should lie buried in the sands of the desert, concealed alike from the hand of the Vandal and of Avarice, until this glorious age of real knowledge, when the worth of the discoveries are fully appreciated, and the language in which they were written is capable of decipherment?

Five long and laborious years are still required to exhume these records that carry us back to within 1716 years of creation, according to Bible chronology, and within 60 years of the mythical great deluge.

It is well for the history of the race that priestcraft has so waned it has not power to destroy the discoveries of the archaeologist, as in former centuries, else every vestige of those "finds" would quickly disappear, and a false rendering would be given their revealments.

Let Up on the Babies.

The committee appointed by the late Presbyterian General Assembly to revise their Confession of Faith are now, as we write, in session at Saratoga. By terms of the instructions adopted at St. Louis they are "To consider the whole matter of a restatement of the doctrines most surely believed among us, and which substantially are embodied in our Confession of Faith.

"That this committee be enjoined diligently to pursue the inquiries, seeking light and knowledge from every available source, and to report to the next Assembly what specific action, if any, should be taken by the church."

It is sincerely hoped they will eliminate infant damnation from their cruel creed, even if they do retain a blazing hell for the parents; for it is a saddening sight to see Rev. Hillis "shaking his fist in the face of the Eternal" because of his abuse of the babies.

"Arcana of Spiritualism: A Manual of Spiritual Science and Philosophy." By Hudson Tuttle. A spiritual text-book of rich and inspired thought. An excellent work. Finely bound in scarlet and gold. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

The Divine Plan.

From the first, the costliness of spiritual literature has been a serious matter in the propaganda of the cause. There has been good cause for this, for unlike the over-endowed publishing houses of the churches, and the large donations made for the free distribution of their publications, everything has depended on individual effort. The demand has been limited, and even at the high prices writers and publishers have been poorly paid, or sank the capital invested.

The Progressive Thinker came to the front in an attempt to remedy this state of affairs to a certain extent. It came to the conclusion that there was awaiting a vast clientage, who would support an honest, earnest effort to supply a literature cheap as the cheapest and that too without appeal to donations or the advantage of an endowment fund. It has cost a great sacrifice, but it has triumphed. It has achieved a circulation and commanding position never before attained by any journal in the cause of liberal and spiritual thought, and placed a whole library of spiritual books at scarcely more than the cost of the postage.

We are glad to see its example followed by its honored English contemporary, the Two Worlds. It has from the beginning placed the price of one penny on its valuable paper, and now launches into the equally charitable publication of books at low price. Its initiative volume is well chosen for the venture, being The Arcana of Spiritualism, which represents the fruitage of nearly thirty years of inspiration by Hudson Tuttle.

The American reader cannot fully reap the advantages of the publishers' offer to their English subscribers, as the duties and other charges enhance the cost, but with all these it is offered at a comparatively low price.

The purpose of the Two Worlds is set forth fully in an editorial in its latest issue. We congratulate the publishers in thus joining efforts to give the spiritual public a cheap literature, and the best, and this is the more notable because it is brought about entirely by new methods. It is not an old literature forced on the people by its cheapness, but a fresh inspiration, made available because demanded. The Two Worlds says:

The costly character of Spiritualistic literature has been frequently remarked by many who have come fresh to the subject, especially those who have not been in the habit of reading specialistic literature.

To the general student it is not at all surprising that works pertaining to this movement should be somewhat expensive, for he recognizes at once many things which tend to make them so.

We are at present dealing mainly with books rather than with the periodical literature, for there are few who will begrudge their twopence for Light, or their modest penny for the Two Worlds.

It is, however, when they desire to purchase some standard work upon the subject they wish to investigate that they are somewhat struck with the price asked for, say "Nineteenth Century Miracles" as compared with that which they were accustomed to pay for Bibles and such literature of a more orthodox stamp.

Now the first reason which presents itself to the student for the apparently high rate is that the circulation of a book on clairvoyance, appealing as it does to a limited audience, must necessarily have a limited sale, and therefore must be produced at a much higher cost prorata than a work which claims the attention of a larger constituency. Thus, while hundreds of thousands of copies of a popular work are called for, it is very difficult indeed to sell an edition of two thousand of a special work on Spiritualism.

Spiritualistic works of any pretensions are, therefore, on this side the Atlantic at least, generally published by subscription, for there are few among us who are able to risk a heavy loss by publishing a book on their account, for books, like some other things, "are kittle cattle," and it is never possible to prophesy the extent of the demand which will be made for it.

We do not recognize, of course, that the books of this movement are really expensive, when it is remembered the mass of information which is frequently given upon a little known and generally misunderstood subject.

No book can be called dear which gives real knowledge, even though a heavy price be charged for it, for the acquisition of knowledge cannot be estimated in mere gold.

Nevertheless, there may be some who are really not able to afford a great price, notwithstanding the fact that they are prepared to make a sacrifice, thus it is the aim of many Spiritualists, and it is also the aim of the Two Worlds Publishing Co., Ltd., to meet the demands for good literature which shall be, as far as price is concerned, within reach of all.

A great step in this direction has been made by the recent publication from the office of this journal of one of the finest general works on Spiritualism it has ever been our lot to read, and one, we venture to say, which will stand the test of competition against all other works of the sort.

Hudson Tuttle is a man whose name is so well known among Spiritualists as to be a guarantee for any work which may come from his pen, but when we speak of "The Arcana of Spiritualism," we speak of one of the finest, if not the best work which even this versatile and prolific writer has placed before his many readers.

The new edition of this, which he does not hesitate to claim as his finest work, is the result of years of careful thought, not only upon his part, but also upon the part of his spirit guides, who have constantly assisted him in his literary labors, having, in fact, brought to him all the powers he has in this direction.

The revised edition contains much new matter, and is really a new book.

Much of the old has been deleted, and much new material has been inserted. Portions of trance addresses which he has delivered, siftings from the very best of his penned articles to the American press, all go to make this volume a precious storehouse of thought for the student and for the investigator.

He says in his preface:

"Mine has been the task of an amanuensis, writing that which has been given me. I claim no honor, except honestly and faithfully attempting to perform my part of the task. I have written in hours of pleasure and of pain, when life was a joy and when it was a weariness; but I have ever been cheered and sustained by the consciousness of the presence of the inspired writers, and though apparently alone, have never been companionless."

Thus was "The Arcana" written, and those who have read it have come to the conclusion that it is indeed worthy of the inspirers who dictated to their distinguished "amanuensis."

Now this work has been published at a price which indeed places it within the reach of all, and it should become to Spiritualists what the Bible is to the orthodox, viz., a necessity which shall be found in every home.

Its publication marks a new era in Spiritualistic publication, and it depends largely upon the demand made for this work as to whether more of the important labors of Spiritualist authors shall be published at "popular prices."

Spiritualists who wish to put a good book upon the subject into the hands of enquirers can do no better than purchase a copy of "The Arcana," and make a present of it to those investigating.

Every society should have at least one copy, which should be used for the purpose of lending to strangers, and those who are new to the subject.

Apart from the interest of the work, it is of extreme value, for it deals with the subject from every standpoint, and contains so many facts, and so many wonderful experiences which are fully verified that it makes an excellent text book for all earnest students, and should be of great service to golden groups in lyceums.

The Legations Are Safe.

Though hundreds of brave men have fallen to gain the result, the foreign legations to China, so often represented as slaughtered, are now, with their families and attendants, released, and under the immediate protection of their respective governments. Only the German minister lost his life.

The missionary massacre is not so general as reported, but bad enough in all conscience. Each mail brings accounts of hair-breadth escapes from death. There is a general lamentation that if peace was at once restored it would require two years at least to re-establish the missions.

Would not the world be the gainer if a decaying system of religion, whose end is as certain as are the advances of Time, was never restored in China? It is a contest with fate, the attempt to perpetuate an error.

VERY REMARKABLE EVIDENCE OF SPIRIT POWER.

To the Editor:—Some few weeks ago, while visiting a friend, I read an article in The Progressive Thinker about Mr. Ernest Orvis, of Asheville, N. C., and I wrote him for a reading. I never was more delighted in my life than I was with the results obtained. It is seldom one comes across or hears of mediums that can do all they claim.

A number of years ago my father owned a farm not far from Conesus, N. Y., a little town with about two hundred inhabitants. My father was a queer sort of a man, always regarded as miserly, and some thought him to be quite wealthy; but when he died, which was rather suddenly, we could find no trace of any money nor any papers of any kind showing that he possessed any means. It soon leaked out that his spirit was "haunting" our place, and several declared they had seen my father's ghost in the old orchard back of the house. We searched in vain for the money we almost knew was there, but found nothing. Knocks or rappings could be heard all over the house; lights, etc., flitted about from place to place; but one night when my sister screamed and came running into my room declaring she saw not only our father but our mother as well, I came to the conclusion I would sell the farm and go West. I did so, and was not molested. My sister died in Missouri, and I came to New York to reside.

Now comes the queer part of my tale. I sent this Mr. Orvis one dollar in the envelope besides three two-cent stamps. In about five days an answer came. The first part was given to a description of my father, also his name in full. Then he described my mother. My father told him what to write, and what do you think it was about? A perfect description was given of the old home and the orchard in the rear. I was told where the money could be found. He described accurately an old pound apple tree that was dead on one side. He said there was a mark down close to the ground, and that it was in the shape of an X; also that it was covered around about with apple shoots or small trees that grew around the trunks of apple trees; that was where the money was buried, he declared, and that I was to go at once and get it. He also told me where I could find a ring that I had lost, besides many other things appertaining to my life, etc., all very accurate. But now here is the strangest part: I started for Conesus as soon as possible, and had no difficulty in finding things as I was told, even to the "hidden treasure." It was not a large sum; in fact only four hundred and fifty dollars. The next day I went to find my ring, and did so. I then became interested and had him trace a son of mine who left home some few years ago in anger. To-day I received word from my son. Last night I saw my father and my mother as they were in life and they told me that they were at rest, and disappeared. Why should I see my departed friends after so many years and did not see them while living on the farm nor at any other time?

I am going to Asheville, N. C., to see this man, and interview him. Heretofore I was a confirmed skeptic, but I am now convinced that there must be something in Spiritualism. I had a very, very satisfactory sitting with Maggie Gaule last winter, and consider her a wonderful woman, and I have her to thank for many things. I would like to know her present address. God, or the angel world rather, be thanked for this glorious truth. May it enlighten the minds of the millions of the civilized nations who are in the darkness—spiritual darkness.

MRS. THERESA MARKHAM.

New York City.

ELDER H. W. B. MYRICK'S VIEWS ON PRESENTIMENTS.

That is what the devoutly orthodox call them. Other people speak of them mysteriously as warnings. And yet another class of persons judicially, and with an air of scientific precision, call them premonitions. What are they really?

I refer to the incidents which happen occasionally in the lives of some people, unexpected tokens or impressions made on the mind, which seem to warn them of danger or impending evil, and often actually saving such people from trouble or disaster. That such things occur requires no labored effort to prove. The experience of thousands of pious Christians furnishes multitudes of examples of "special providences," while the testimony of other thousands who are not Christians is equally conclusive as to the happening of "premonitions and warnings." These experiences may come in the form of dreams or of some mysterious and indefinable impressions, but no matter how the warning is conveyed the facts are beyond cavil which establish this form of human experience. Troubles have been averted, calamities prevented, lives preserved by reason of these weird impressions and warnings.

One cloudless Sunday I was to hold two services in Gentry county, Missouri. I preached to a large audience at 11 o'clock and was to address them again at 4 p. m. But when I came to make the announcement of the evening service I found myself unable to do it. An overwhelming feeling—I cannot describe it—suddenly took possession of me, and I felt myself compelled to withdraw the afternoon appointment. The sun was shining brightly, my health and condition was good, the people expected the 4 o'clock sermon and were manifestly disappointed by my action, but I arbitrarily left for my home at once. I was to have dined that day with our State Senator, who lived near by, but after briefly stating to him my feeling I listened to his good-natured laugh and then turned homeward. At exactly 4 o'clock that evening, the very hour when the meeting would have called the people together, a swift, sudden storm swept by; the dread cyclone demolished the church house, literally reducing it to kindling wood. How was I warned?

Again: I was in a protracted meeting, having a fine interest, baptizing people by the dozens. At last it was to close the next night. But that weird feeling came over me, overpowering, irresistible. Stop to-night! Stop to-night! Not in words you understand, but I seemed to feel it somehow, absolutely forbidding my going on with the meeting. I told Bro. Carson I would stop that night instead of waiting till the next, and in spite of his protests I closed. The next morning I took the Burlington train at dawn of day and sped for home, arbitrarily closing my meeting one day sooner than it was intended. Of course you guess the rest? Yes; the next morning the early train upon which I would have left had I continued the meeting, left the track west of town. There was a hideous wreck, broken bones, loss of life, weeping and death. And I escaped through that mysterious warning. How explain it?

I might extend this list of warnings or presentiments, but to what purpose? These occurrences have become a kind of matter-of-fact with me, and simply to relate them does not afford an explanation. While I was a firm believer in orthodox Christianity I flattered myself that it was a "special providence," God showing a peculiar care in thus preserving my life. I even spoke of it in my sermons sometimes and some of my good brethren congratulated me on the evident "favor of God."

But if God—a good God—warned me, what about the other poor fellows on the wrecked train? I am modest enough to think they were just as good as I am, just as worthy of God's care. Why did he not warn them? Why indeed? The fact is, if there is a personal God standing or sitting around anywhere in this universe, I am not going to attribute the thing to him. A father who would be guilty of a "special providence" is an unnatural father. To warn one child and let the others go serenely to death! No: thank you! I have no need of a God who has a reputation for indulging in a "special providence" now and then.

But somehow I was warned. How? Why? It is most singular. I mention one other affair: I was standing in a large building that was being constructed. Suddenly that warning, mysterious impression came to me hurrying me from the spot almost as surely as if a physical power had been exerted upon me. A moment later and a great beam, escaping from the workman above, crashed down on the spot where I had stood. I was saved by that strange warning. But I had a friend, a good boy, a splendid young man, the pride of his mother's heart. He stood in the timber, near a dead tree. No warning voice, no weird intuition, no providence interposed. Swiftly fell the body of the old tree and in a moment the life went out of the crushed form of my dear friend, George Sharp, Jr. I do not understand it. Why these discriminations? Jesus said: "Two shall be grinding: one shall be taken, the other left." And it is so. I do not rebel—I only wonder. And I wish I knew what gives us those warning impressions.

Spontaneous Spirit Manifestations.

The Journal, of Lacon, Ill., sets forth that for over a week most of the people have talked of little else but the strange story related by Miss Grace Defenbaugh. Just now it is the prevailing nine days' wonder that periodically agitates the small town.

Miss Defenbaugh is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Defenbaugh, who have resided in the north ward for several years and who possess the respect and confidence of all their neighbors. She is 17 years old, bright, intelligent and pretty, enjoys good health, and her parents say she has never been subject to fits of hysteria or nightmare. This makes the tales she tells all the more impossible to understand by those who do not believe in the supernatural.

On the night of Saturday, July 28, Miss Defenbaugh declares that she was suddenly aroused from a sound sleep to see a figure, clad in garments of flowing white, standing at the foot of her bed. Naturally her first impulse was to scream but in an instant the "spirit" glided to her side and seized her by the wrist. This so frightened her that she could not move or utter a sound. Although there was no light in the room, the girl says she could distinguish the features of the visitor as plainly as if in midday. The face was that of a beautiful woman, as pale as death, but the white robed form and the strong, harsh tone of the voice were those of a man. It spoke to her, telling her not to be alarmed. Then it related a number of incidents of her young life and promised great joy to her if she placed her faith in its reality and honesty of purpose. For over a year the young lady has worn a plain band gold ring that fitted her finger so tightly that she had to use soap and water to remove it; yet the wraith slipped it off as though it were a rubber band, replacing it with another, a set ring that sparkled in the dim light like a diamond. Soon he took this ring also after promising to return the girl her jewelry at their second meeting, which he said would occur just a month from the date of the first one. Then upon leaving he again seized the girl's wrist, traced a letter on it with his finger, leaned over a chair, seeming to mark it and then vanished like a shadow. Miss Defenbaugh claims to have been perfectly conscious and in full possession of her senses during all this time but after her visitor had gone she was too frightened to raise an alarm. In the morning she found that sure enough her ring had disappear, there was the letter "D" on her wrist and a Roman cross was discovered on the side of the chair that the spectre had tampered with. The letter on her skin seemed to be scratched into the skin as if with a pin. It was a dull red color and remained for several days. We were shown the cross that the "spirit" is said to have marked on the chair.

Notwithstanding that his spookship had made a date a month later, he appeared again the following night. He returned the girl her ring and among other things told her that he would cause four more initials to appear upon her arm in the course of time. They did appear the next day, the young lady claims, but were visible only a few seconds, not even long enough for her to show them to her mother. These initials were J. C. and J. R.

The Sultan's Defence.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat awhile ago gave an account of an interview an American held with Abdul Hamid in the Turkish capital, which is probably illustrative of the real condition in all countries where church and state are centered under one head. Said the Sultan:

"I don't think you Americans appreciate the position in which I am placed, in relation to the missionaries. In your country church and state are entirely apart. A missionary from my country might go to the United States and preach the Mohammedan doctrine, and it would be all right. Your government would not be concerned. Here I am the head of the church. I am to my people the shadow of God.

"The Mohammedan religion is loyal to me. I am the head of the church, as well as the head of the state, and the two cannot be disassociated. When your missionaries come here and preach against Mohammedanism, they teach disloyalty to the Turkish government. They encourage sedition. That is what makes it so hard. If the Mohammedan missionary should go to the United States and urge the overthrow of the government he would get into trouble, provided he was taken seriously. He would be arrested and sent out of the country for seditious acts, or, if he gained sufficient strength, he might be hanged for treason. And yet he would be doing no more, in effect, than the American missionaries are doing here. We are trying to avoid trouble, but you can see that the situation is bound to be aggravated when our religion and politics mean the same thing."

Good Words for the Chinese.

It can't be helped. No two persons ever looked at the same subject exactly alike. Education and environment shape our thoughts and our actions, while prejudice does the rest.

It is a pleasure to get the honest views of an educated and thoughtful churchman, a high functionary of the Episcopal Methodists, at a time like this on Chinese matters. It is universally conceded all these recent troubles with that great empire had root in the missionary movement, it being an attempt to destroy a system of religion which has been in force in China for more than two thousand five hundred years, and which made that nation what it is, the oldest, greatest, and most populous on the globe; a nation whose inventive genius has given Western civilization many of the arts which have been stepping-stones and largely instrumental in producing our own greatness and grandeur, of which the mariner's compass is a worthy example.

Rev. Wm. Xavier Ninde, a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is a learned and venerable gentleman, said to be of great personal worth. He visited China in 1894 on church business, spending four months in the empire, looking after the various missions, and making himself familiar with their workings.

If an intelligent and truthful idea of the present condition of things can be gained from any person we may trust Bishop Ninde, if all accounts of his integrity and moral worth gained in church circles can be believed. The Bishop has just published in the Northwestern Christian Advocate, over his own signature, an account of his journeyings in China six years ago, while the country was in a very disturbed condition growing out of the war with Japan. He was carried by natives in a Sedan chair into the interior, and saw the people in their homes while engaged in their daily avocations. He visited the coast cities, and frequently traveled at late hours, with no illumination other than the street lamps. He experienced no trouble—no ribaldry greeted his ears, neither did he see a threatening look. He says he "prowled about the streets at very late hours, guided only by the light of a lantern to help out the dim street lamps." In company with Rev. Dr. Lowry he walked on the top of the city wall of Peking, where soldiers were engaged in military duties. In all his rambles he met with no rudeness. In the course of his article the Bishop says:

I believe the hatred of the Chinese people toward foreigners, taken as a whole, has been greatly overdrawn. * * I never observed any symptoms on the streets that indicated unkind feelings toward foreigners."

And again:

"Of course if foreign ladies were in the company they would attract curious attention, but never annoyance or disrespect."

Quoting the Bishop accurately:

"Except in the time of a racial upheaval like the present, the lives and property of foreigners are remarkably safe in China. I believe, as a rule, the magistrates, high and low, honestly try to protect foreigners in their treaty rights. Their duties are often very trying and difficult. In seeking to protect us they are sometimes treated with indignity by the rude class. In portions of the country where seditious secret societies are numerous, a mandarin's life is often endangered who is disposed to be rigorously just."

Let us not be false to the Chinese, even if we do think we have a higher civilization. Read again:

"The country is infested with outlaws who are the enemies alike of native and foreigner, and yet the fact remains, to the everlasting credit of the Chinese race and their loosely jointed government, that large numbers of missionaries are scattered all over this vast empire, in great cities and small villages, traveling in Sedan chairs, even lone and defenseless women, through the open country and often after nightfall, their only attendants the four men—perhaps heathen Chinamen—who carry them in their chair over many a weary mile, and yet without conscious danger except from the possible attacks of professional highwaymen."

Said a correspondent in one of our city dailies, commenting on Bishop Ninde's article, which we commend:

"In a country whose history is disgraced by the Astor Place riots and the many outrages which have been perpetrated against Italians, such an article as Bishop Ninde's ought to make wholesome reading. A suggestive statement along these lines is made in an article on the American embassy at Rome, which appeared in the last Harpers' Weekly. There it was said that about the only business of importance that our ambassadors to Italy was called upon to transact was the squaring up of assaults perpetrated upon Italian emigrants by American citizens and the convincing of the Italian government that such cases were not governmental outrages, but instances of isolated and personal lawlessness."

Idol Worship.

A white cross 12 meters in height—nearly 40 feet—has just been erected on the summit of Mt. Vesuvius. Why not a gallows and other instruments of punishment and torture to keep it company? It is an insult to modern intelligence to say a God died on a cross; but that is what they who adore crosses mean when they erect them.

The gibbet on which an honest man dies is as worthy of veneration as is a cross on which it is alleged a good man died years ago.

Drifting.

The Interior, Presbyterian, of Chicago, says:

"There is no use trying to deny the fact that all denominations are drifting away from their theories of divine right and drifting toward the common results of practical experience. And as a necessary corollary they are coming closer together."

That is as it should be, so they drift away from their errors and towards the truth.

WE are trying our best to establish libraries in every Spiritualist family of the United States, hence we are offering Seven valuable books as a premium. Those seven books have been sold for $10.75. A single one has sold as high as $25. The first edition of Art Magic sold for $5 per copy. As high as $15 has been paid for a single copy of Ghost Land; yet we furnish these seven books to our subscribers for $2.35, when ordered in connection with a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker. Read our premium announcement carefully.

Some Reflections on the Thought Problem.

"It will be seen from the letter of Lyman C. Howe, on our sixth page, that our esteemed friend and co-worker, W. H. Bach, the wide-awake editor of The Sunflower, is seriously ill at his home in Lily Dale, N. Y. Mr. Bach has been an indefatigable worker for Spiritualism ever since the knowledge of spirit communion was vouchsafed to him. Whenever the call came he was ready to respond; wind and rain could not stop him, and he never failed to appear at the post of duty according to promise. He has ever been keenly alive to the needs of our beloved cause, and has freely given of his best to make Spiritualism represent the best and truest thought of the age. He has worked with might and main to sustain the idea of practical co-operation, and has verily turned night into day to accomplish the purposes for which he labored. As a natural result, he has overworked, and is now suffering from the consequences of the same. He seemed a tireless worker, but nature has at last rebelled, and demanded a respite. W. H. Bach cannot be spared at the present time; his services to the cause, and his worth as a man, are too valuable to be dispensed with now. He must get well; therefore, we second Brother Howe's suggestion that that the thoughts freighted with the balm of healing be wafted to him on his sick bed, coupled with the invigorating mental suggestion that he must at once begin to get well. Brother Bach, the best wishes of thousands are with you in your hour of suffering, as well as their sincere sympathy. All say with us, 'You must get well!'"—Banner of Light, Boston.

The spirit which actuated the writing of the above is certainly commendable; but if a little genuine philosophy had been brought into requisition the trend of the sentiment expressed would have been entirely different. The idea entertained that thoughts are things, in a sense that they can soar forth like an eagle, and by impinging upon a physical organization impart a certain degree of vitality thereto that will relieve it from weakness or pain, is manifestly absurd. If thoughts are, from an earthly standpoint, things, they must partake somewhat of the physical nature of the individual who sends them forth. Brother Lyman C. Howe, a giant intellectually, is not strong physically, hence his healing thoughts might possibly be an absolute detriment to the well being of Mr. Bach. Prof. Barrett, one of the ablest among our speakers and writers, is troubled seriously with heart disease, hence his healing thought might actually give Mr. Bach a serious set back. In fact by the time the healing thoughts of the weakling, the stupid, the dyspeptic, the consumptive, the rheumatic, the gouty, those weak in limbs and chronically disabled, had commenced roosting on Mr. Bach, endeavoring to get in upon him their health-giving properties, he certainly would have received a terrible set back, and found himself deteriorating, and probably would have sounded his death knell.

The idea that thoughts are things is intrinsically beautiful, but the idea entertained that they can go forth like a bird and roost in the physical organization of a person miles away, and therein dispense medicinal properties that will rejuvenate him, is certainly very questionable.

When you see a beautiful horse, you should bear in mind that no material part of the animal was transmitted to your retina to form an image thereon. The image is immaterial in all respects, yet the sensation reaches the brain center of vision which lies in the occipital lobes, both on their exterior and mesial surfaces, and it sometimes extends as far up as the end of the fissure of Sylvius. The moment the vibrations reach this center of the brain, caused by an image of a horse on the retina, then the consciousness of the existence of the animal is aroused. But that consciousness or thought of the existence of the horse is in no sense a thing material enough to fly off and impart its individuality on some poor mortal whom you may specially select. It is ethereal as the image on the retina of the eye which caused it; and is in no sense a thing as taught by that amiable philosopher, Prentice Mulford.

Human consciousness, closely allied to thought, if not thought itself, can not in any sense be considered material; it can not be reduced to what may be designated as a thing; in fact it belongs to the region of the unknowable, and can not take wings and fly to a sick person, like a carrier dove with a message of love. In telepathy there has been no thought transmission in the sense that one person's thought took wings and flew to some person's mind and impressed its individuality thereon. There has been undoubtedly an impartation of a like degree of consciousness in the two individuals simultaneously by some mysterious process not yet fully understood.

The shadow that you see on the wall or on the roadway itself as you pass under trees and shrubbery on a moonlight night, are in no sense of the word either spiritual or material, and when they make an impression on the retina the forms they produce are equally as mysterious, undefinable and unknowable. Now we will stop the image, as it were, on the retina, having cut the nerve that leads to the brain center of sight, which is located in the occipital lobes of the brain. There is the image on the retina, but it cannot be translated into consciousness; that is what the learned physiologist would term sensorial blindness. Now we will unite the severed nerve and the image on the retina, as it were, is passed along, and when it reaches the proper place in the occipital lobes it is translated by the vibrations imparted into consciousness. In no sense of the word is that consciousness a thing or a substance, etherealized or otherwise, nor is it polarized magnets of force, as suggested by Dr. Peebles. There is not only sensorial blindness, but psychic blindness also. Psychic blindness is lack of recognition of an object that is actually seen.

Halleck says: "In psychic blindness objects are seen but not recognized. A Scotchman met with an accident that brought on psychic blindness. He saw physically as well as ever, but he could not interpret what he saw. He would look at the most familiar objects, and be utterly unable to recognize them. He would gaze at his New Testament without knowing what the object was until he ran his hand over the smooth cover, when he immediately recognized it. When a piece of detached bone, pressing on the center of vision in his in his brain, was removed, he recovered the power of mentally interpreting what he saw."

The trouble was the center for sight in the occipital lobes was partially paralyzed, and could not translate the image into consciousness.

Mr. Bach can congratulate himself that the suggestion that healing thoughts be concentrated on him while lying helpless in bed, could never be realized, for those thoughts, if possible to transmit to him, would have been more or less diseased, and would probably have proved fatal to him—death caused by his own friends.

There is an immense amount of humbuggery being practiced under the cloak of thought transferrence. Prentice Mulford wrote at the time when the world was totally ignorant of the wonderful action of the various brain centers, wherein sensations are translated into consciousness, bringing each one in touch with the physical universe. The position assumed by the Auto Club of this city, published in a late number of The Progressive Thinker is exceedingly beautiful, yet has little basic foundation in the statement that thoughts are things. Its members should study carefully the structure of the brain, and learn the nature of the different centers that translate sensations into consciousness, and which is in its multitudinous action in no sense a thing as defined by Prentice Mulford. Yet we can see great good that can arise from the Auto Club, and we sincerely hope it will increase in numbers, as it verily will.

As we have said before there can undoubtedly be an impartation of a like degree of consciousness in two individuals simultaneously when the respective brains are perfectly synchronous in their vibrations; but very few brains indeed are of that character. The following from the New York Herald illustrates very forcibly our position:

Veridical hallucinations and telepathy are the explanations offered by scientists to account for the strange case of "Mikey-Jim" and "Jimmy-Mike." To Michael James Higgins and to James Michael Higgins, and to their humble neighbors and their fellow-workers in the Cooper-Hewitt iron mills, at Trenton, however, it is a clear case of "spooks, and spooks of the weirdest and uncanniest breed at that."

"Mikey-Jim" and "Jimmy-Mike," as they are known to every resident of the New Jersey capital, are the twin sons of the "Widow" Annie Higgins, of No. 19 Clark street.

Never was there twins that looked so much alike when they were babies as did her little "Mikey-Jim" and "Jimmy-Mike," declares Mrs. Higgins. "Shure, an' until they were old enough to talk and answer back to their names, didn't I have to tie 'Mikey-Jim's' arrum with blue ribbon and 'Jimmy-Mike's' with pink, so's to tell which from t'other, and I've me doubts yet whether I mightn't have got them mixed after Father Riley christened them."

It was to provide against just such a contingency that the twins were named Michael James and James Michael, respectively, so in case their identities have in the meantime become confused the only question to be settled is which one of the brothers is entitled to write the Michael portion of his name first.

But James and Michael Higgins were twins mentally and spiritually as well as physically. As they grew to boyhood the brothers were inseparable. They cared for no other society except that of each other. When you saw one you were sure to see both.

"Mikey-Jim" and "Jimmy-Mike" Higgins were far and away the most popular youths in the whole parish. They were handsome boys and they were good boys, and Father Riley, of the Church of the Sacred Heart, had no more dutiful parishioners.

But as they grew to manhood a great crisis came into their lives. "Mikey-Jim" fell in love with pretty Mary Dunning, of South Trenton, who was also a faithful devotee at Father Riley's church.

With the falling in love and marriage of "Mikey-Jim" the bond that had existed between the brothers has broken, and not a week after the wedding "Jimmy-Mike" became an inyeterate drinker.

It was then discovered that "Jimmy-Mike" had an uncontrollable telepathic influence over "Mikey-Jim."

With his pretty bride the young husband set up housekeeping in a cosy little house not far from the old home in Clark street. Nothing likely to bring unhappiness could be descried in all the bright horizon of their young lives. They loved each other with a passion that was sacrificial in its intensity. The bridegroom's family, and this included "Jimmy-Mike," were enthusiastic in their praise and admiration for "Mikey-Jim's" wife. Times were good and the entire Higgins family was prospering.

But after he had won the girl of his choice and should have been ready to settle down to the placid enjoyment of the dainty and well-ordered home presided over by Mary Dunning, "Mikey-Jim" confessed to himself and to his family that he was unhappy separated from "Jimmy-Mike." In just one year a son was born—a little man the very counterpart of his father and uncle.

The young wife, who by intuition had gradually learned the secret of her husband's all too apparent unhappiness, now thought and hoped that the tiny Michael James would fill the void in her husband's heart. But idolizing his child as he did, the baby Michael James was not the brother James Michael, and after a long and desperate attempt at trying to be happy under another roof than that which sheltered the being who had come into the world with him, "Mikey-Jim" and his wife went to live in the now very much crowded old home.

"I can never be happy far away from 'Jimmy-Mike,'" said "Mikey-Jim," in explanation.

"And I never can be good so long as I am very far away from 'Mikey-Jim,'" declared "Jimmy-Mike," hopefully.

"And knowing that I and my child have come between the happiness of my husband and his brother, I have no happiness to hope for in this world," sighed the heart-broken young wife.

But the removal to the old home and the attempt to take up the broken threads of the old life did not bring peace of mind to "Mikey-Jim," nor did it reform "Jimmy-Mike," who went from bad to worse, his wild conduct all the while exerting a strange telepathic influence on his twin brother, and causing him to be subject to protracted periods of mental depression.

"'Mikey-Jim' should never have married anybody," said the neighbors, and their gossip reached the ears of "Mikey-Jim," and, terrible as the truth was, it was the truth, and he could not deny it.

To make the unhappy husband and father still more unhappy, if that were possible, little James Michael died. The once beautiful Mary Dunning, now sad-eyed and faded, bore four other children, and these were taken one by one—all except one baby girl. Last summer Mary Dunning died, with a prayer on her lips that the lives she had been the innocent cause of dividing might be again reunited.

Nor was the young wife's body cold in her grave before both brothers experienced a return of the same old time telepathic relationship. Despite the genuine sorrow of both the husband and brother-in-law, they were in a happier frame of mind than either had known since "Mikey-Jim's" marriage, eight long, long years before. The old relationship was renewed, and the brothers became inseparable companions, as in boyhood days.

In order to help him to conquer his drink habit, "Jimmy-Mike" left the iron works where he had been employed for years and went to work for an ice dealer, W. L. Phillips. He was the most popular man on the route, his handsome face and winning manners making him a universal favorite among the Trenton housewives.

"Mikey-Jim" kept on with his work at the Cooper-Hewitt Mills until they closed down some four weeks ago, when he obtained work in the New York Steel Company works at Astoria, Long Island.

When "Mikey-Jim" went away to take charge of his new duties, it was the first time in all his life that he had been more than five miles away from "Jimmy-Mike," and he had not reached his destination before his absence began to have a terrible effect on the brother left behind. For the first time since his sister-in-law's death, more than a year ago, "Jimmy-Mike" started out on a drunken spree of several days duration, and on the third day he embezzled the receipts from the ice wagon and was that night thrown into the Second precinct lockup.

Sixty miles away, up in Astoria, "Mikey-Jim," working on the night shift, stopped for a moment and leaned on his tongs, waiting his turn at the red hot bars to be carried from one annealing pot to another.

As he leaned and waited in the lurid glare of the furnace "Mikey-Jim" saw weird visions, and from out of the roaring and clanging of the great mill came to his ears the sound of strange voices borne from some incalculable distance. The shouting of the busy workmen about him became indistinct, the glaring furnace became dim, and out of the shadowy recesses of the great hot inferno came apparitions of the night's events in Trenton.

Within an hour after the cell door had closed on "Jimmy-Mike," and before his mother and sister had been notified of this, the worst disgrace that ever happened a Higgins, a blue-coated messenger boy brought them a yellow envelope. The telegram read:

"What is wrong with 'Jimmy-Mike?'

"MIKEY-JIM.'"

"Nothing is wrong. Don't worry," was the reply.

But "Mikey-Jim" knew better. In the glare of the furnace he had seen Policeman Hartigan lay a heavy hand on "Jimmy-Mike's" shoulder. So he wired again:

"Is 'Jimmy-Mike' arrested? What is his trouble?"

And then the white-haired mother of the telepathic twins started out to see what new calamity had befallen one of her unlucky pair. She had not far to go before she heard the news, for she met a policeman on Hamilton avenue who took her to the station house.

When Mrs. Higgins returned home she found another telegram from "Mikey-Jim" saying he knew his brother was in jail and that he would come home at once and get him out.

The next day "Mikey-Jim" did come home, but it was not the gentle, quiet "Mikey-Jim" they had known ever since he was a baby. His hair was unkempt, and a strange, unnatural fire slumbered in the depths of his once mild blue eyes. "Mikey-Jim" had gone mad.

Dr. Lyman Leavitt, who had prescribed for the twins ever since they were in swaddling clothes, was now called in by the terror-stricken little family.

"Your son will be all right, Mrs. Higgins, just as soon as 'Jimmy-Mike' is out of his difficulty," whispered the old practitioner to the mother after he had prescribed a soothing potion to induce sleep.

"In order for 'Mikey-Jim to be all right in body as well as in mind it is absolutely necessary that his twin brother be never far away, and in order that 'Jimmy-Mike' shall behave himself 'Mikey-Jim' must not go away from him to any great distance," continued the doctor. "They have twin souls as well as twin bodies, and there is a close psychical relation between them."

As Dr. Leavitt predicted, "Mikey-Jim's" mind was fully restored just as soon as "Jimmy-Mike's" difficulties were adjusted and he was liberated on July 19.

There is no happier family in all New Jersey now than that of the widow Higgins, on Clark street. "Mikey-Jim," strong in body and clear in mind, is back to work in the Cooper-Hewitt iron mills, which have just opened up again. "Jimmy-Mike," the wayward brother, under the influence of "Mikey-Jim," the gentle, is back again on the ice wagon, sober and industrious.

"There's no use trying to think anything else but that "Jimmy-Mike" and I are bewitched," said Mikey-Jim" in concluding a conversation I had with him between turns at the mill last Monday night. "Some people call it hallucinations and others say it's telepathy, but," (and here a twinkle crept into Mikey-Jim's blue eyes), "Jimmy-Mike' and I think it's nothing but spooks. Anyways, it's something that is very strange and mysterious, and we have agreed never to part again so long as we live, and I somehow have a feeling that we will both die on the same day, because I am sure one cannot live without the other."

In reference to this remarkable case, the learned Dr. Cyrus Edson says:

The case of "Mikey-Jim" and "Jimmy-Mike," the telepathic twins, as they have been picturesquely named, is most interesting from a psychical standpoint. The word telepathy is derived from the Greek, and means literally "far-feeling." We use it to mean thought transference. That means that the thoughts and consciousness of one person are communicated to the consciousness of another without making use of the senses of sight, touch, hearing, taste or smell, writing or speaking, or of any code of signals of any character whatever.

Nearly all of the scientific articles that have been written on this subject consider it as sub-judiciary, and, while most observers admit that there is very strong presumptive evidence that it does exist, they do not accept it as a proven scientific fact.

This seems to me rather remarkable, for no one can weigh the evidence in favor of thought transference without at least admitting to himself that the proof of its existence is well established. Men hesitate to admit a belief in a subject of the character of this for fear of being classed among the fakirs and charlatans who have so long made use of its phenomena.

While evidence of its existence is so interwound with the threads of clairvoyancy, falsehood, fallacy or deceit, it is difficult to unravel and follow the true strand of thought transference.

This line of investigation was first suggested by the well known parlor game called "Willing Game." The principle of this game is that one or more persons "will" that another person shall find some hidden object, take something from one place and put it in another place, or designate by touch something in the room. The game may be played with or without direct contact by the players. While they are in contact it is well known that voluntary or involuntary pushing on the part of the "willers" may be and usually is an important part of the performance, but many remarkable results have been obtained when there has been no contact whatever. Investigations undertaken do throw out all possible sources of fallacy, and these are many and ingenious; how ingenious only those who have seen remarkable exhibitions of Hermann and Kellar and other magicians, who have performed marvelous feats with equally marvelous codes of signals, can appreciate.

In its published proceedings, the Society of Psychical Research calls the "willer" the "agent," and the person "willed" the percipient. It found that different agents differ widely in their power to transfer their ideas and that the different percipients also vary very greatly in their power to perceive them. The ideas conveyed were various, but simple in their character, such as names of fictitious persons, names of places and diagrams and drawings. Experiments can be made with this same kind of game at any social gathering, and will afford considerable amusement as well as instruction. Every precaution should be taken to prevent fraud. Not a word should be spoken except such as may be absolutely necessary for the conduct of the game. The percipient should be set with his back to the agent or agents and at a little distance. Every precaution should be taken to shut off communication by means of codes. These may be so subtle as to almost elude detection. Coughing, sneezing, deep breathing have all been used for this purpose, and one very ingenious code was found to consist in the percipient so crossing his knees that a slight pulsation was given to his foot by the beating of the artery in his leg. The agent watched the percipient's foot and taking a faintly audible breath, counted the pulsations.

At the end of the given number he gave another faint breathing signal. The percipient of course counted the beats between the two signals, and was thus enabled to give a number which had previously been chosen as a test.

The society obtained a vast number of results, in which the successes were so numerous as to absolutely preclude the chance of their being the result of coincident guessing. Diagrams were reproduced, pictures described and objects of a vast diversity of character were described by different percipients.

In all these experiments it has been thought necessary to concentrate the mind by a strong mental effort upon some particular object. In studying the phenomena of thought transferrence, such as that actually manifested and with which we are all more or less familiar, it would seem as though this forced mental effort might inhibit the reception of the transferred thought. It would seem as if it would be best to have the mind in a state or rest and quietude, unhampered by intense effort of any character, in order that it should be receptive.

Comparatively recently the Society for Psychical Research has investigated the still more interesting phase of the subject to which it has given the name of "veridical hallucinations."

Veridical hallucinations are applied to the apparitions of a person at a distance, as in the case of the Trenton twins. It would seem in such cases that persons passing through some grave crisis are for some unknown reason endowed with peculiar powers to act as agents. They seem to be able to project an impression that strikes the brain of the percipient with such force as to produce a hallucination.

This seems incredible, and yet the evidence of its occurrence is practically vouched for by the Society for Psychical Research, of which the greatest scientists living are members. The society investigated a large number of instances of this phenomena and discovered that they occurred some four hundred odd times oftener than could be accounted for by coincidence or chance.

Suggestion has been made to a subject in hypnotic trance that a certain time after his awaking he shall see some particular person. After he has awakened from the trance he will actually have a vision of the designated person at the time and in the manner suggested by the agent.

Now, if this be true, and the evidence seems as firmly established by science as anything that science is capable of establishing, it has a most important effect in shedding light upon the subject of veridical hallucinations. It would seem that in the case of the Trenton twins we have two persons whose nervous systems and whose mentalities are in the closest possible accord. It would seem that the percipient brother is only a percipient in relation to one particular agent, his twin brother. This has been found to be usually the case. Veridical apparitions, so far as I am ware, rarely occur to one person more than once.

The phenomena of thought transferrence in any and all of its phases are uncommon and rare, so much so that the great mass of humanity can have no personal observation of it at all, and receiving all its information second hand must necessarily treat it with incredulity.

Veridical hallucinations occurring coincidentally with the death of the person who appears are very naturally ascribed to supernatural causes, and are most naturally accepted by the percipient as a proof of Spiritualistic doctrines. The most common of all phenomena of thought transferrence, and one which I am well aware has been accounted for by coincident reasoning along parallel lines, is the synchronous occurrence in the minds of two persons who are in close daily communication, such as husband and wife, of a common idea or thought, or even a train of thought. It is an almost daily occurrence in my own life that my wife, my children or my intimate friend suddenly broaches a subject concerning which my own mind is occupied. I am inclined to believe that this is often a phenomenon of true thought transferrence. Sometimes in going back, however, I have discovered the starting point from which my mind and that of another started on a logical train of thought which led to the expression which showed we both traveled mentally over the same path and reached a common landmark together. Again, I have been absolutely unable to trace this logical sequence. The thoughts have occurred synchronously, and the only possible accounting for them has been on the theory of telepathy.

A long intimacy of any kind between two mentalities tends of course to bring these mentalities closer and to make them approach each other in character, similarity of thought, etc.

Presupposing the existence of thought transferrence, it is most natural to believe that the nearer the blood relationship the closer will be the connection between two mentalities. In the case of the Trenton twins we have the closest possible relationship that can exist on earth, and it is not unreasonable to believe that between such mentalities as they possess and exhibit, such phenomena as telepathy and veridical hallucinations would exist if they exist anywhere between any individuals of the human race.

There is much that is worthy of careful consideration in the above by Dr. Edson, and the extract from the New York Herald. There should, however, be a readjustment of views in reference to what is designated as thought, and thought transference. A proper study of the brain and its functions and the various brain centers will throw much light on the subject, and explode many existing theories.

LUCRETIUS.

APPLE BLOOMS.

The blushing blooms on the apple tree,
Are singing their sweetest songs to me,
And bending boughs, with their freightage fair,
Keep perfect time to the summer air.

O, beauteous blooms, with your pink and white,
That thrill the soul, with a sweet delight,
Canst tell from whence you have come to view,
To clothe the tree in its garments new?

A few weeks since, and the branches bare,
Knew naught of leafage, or flowerage fair,
Now rhythmic whorls of a polished green,
With central souls of the blooms are seen,
Whose circled petals of grace fulfill,
A wondrous power, and a wondrous skill.

On vintage rare, from thy dainty cups,
The wild bee feasts, as he gaily sups,
And turns to honey, thy sweet perfume,
Distilled from heart, of the sunlit noon.

The bells of silence then rang their chime,
In mystic tones of a chord divine—
I heard the answer that came to me,
From flowery hosts of the apple-tree.

"We come," they said, "from life's inner source,
From whence all nature must run its course,
To reach at last, to life's outer rim,
We come," they said, "through the will of Him,
Whose thought, creative, and strong, and true,
Did give us shape, and did bring to view,
The tree, and leaf, and the blossom fair,
He feeds us full, on the sun and air,
And gives us drink of the dew and rain,
Till he shall summon us back again."

O unseen world, and, O world of cause,
We praise thy name and thy wondrous laws—
The apple-blooms on the apple-tree,
Have brought a message to us from thee.

BLINDNESS

PREVENTED AND CURED.

THE BLIND SEE...  THE DEAF HEAR.

BY THE GREAT EYE RESTORER AND ONLY CATARRH CURE

ACTINA is a marvel of the nineteenth century, for by its use the Blind See, the Deaf Hear and Catarrh is impossible. Actina is an absolute certainty in the cure of Cataracts, Pterygiums, Granulated Lids, Glaucoma, Amaurosis, Myopia, Presbyopia, Common Sore Eyes or Weakened Vision from any cause. No animal except man wears spectacles. There need not be a spectacle used on the streets of the world and rarely to read with. Street glasses abandoned. Actina also cures Neuralgia, Headache, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis and Weak Lungs. Actina is not a snuff or lotion, but a Perfect Electric Pocket Battery, usable at all times and in all places by young or old. The one instrument will cure a whole family of any of the above forms of disease.

PROF. WILSON'S MAGNETO-CONSERVATIVE .....APPLIANCES.....

Cure Paralysis, Rheumatism and all Chronic Forms of Disease. These appliances are as puzzling to the physicians as is the wonder working Actina.

A Valuable Book Free on application. Contains treatise on the human system, its diseases and cure and hundreds of references and testimonials.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

The Progressive Thinker goes to press early Monday morning of each week. Camp-meeting reports should always reach the office on the previous Friday or Saturday at the very latest. Bear that in mind.

Rev. J. O. M. Hewitt, quite widely known as a Unitarian minister, an able speaker and cultured gentleman, is open for engagements by Spiritual societies, or for funeral or other services. He may be addressed at 498 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill.

Will C. Hodge, after his successful labors at Delphos, Kansas, and other places in the West, will arrive in Chicago some time this week. Address him for engagements at 40 Loomis street, Chicago.

Julia Steelman Nichols closes her engagement at Clinton Camp August 10. She will be in Moline, Ill., for a few weeks. Will give lectures or test seances in towns in Illinois or Iowa within a few hours' travel from above place through September. Has November and December as open dates. Address as above.

Annie Lord Chamberlain, who has had a heavy burden to bear in taking care of her aged parents, and now her blind sister, writes: "Through your valuable paper I wish to thank the kind St. Louis friend who sent me one dollar July 21. Also please permit me to call attention of friends to my card on the 8th page of The Progressive Thinker. I shall return to 15 Franklin street, Milford, Mass., September 1, and hope to find a goodly number of letters awaiting to be answered."

Mrs. Burrows writes from Detroit, Mich: "The following names and dates have been added to the union course of summer lectures at Occult Temple: Sept. 2, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Kates; Sept. 4 and 5, Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing; Sept. 9, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, of Chicago."

The Chicago Daily News says: "Superstition is as deeply seated in the make-up of free-born and freely educated Chicagoans as in that of any people living within the influence of paganism or under the magic spell cast by "professors" of fetich, if the revenue derived from the sale of certain amulets by the Hindoo soothsayers is an indication. Lucky boxes are at present the latest novelty offered. They are a small circular contrivance with a hollow cut out in the center in which a brass ring is secreted. They were brought to Chicago from the interior of India and are sold by a native Hindoo with a guaranty that the possessor will henceforth be fortunate. Gamblers are more susceptible to the influence of meu who lay claim to residence in some province of India than persons of other pursuits, though lawyers have been known to confide their clients' interests to the magical powers of a charmed stone or bit of bull hide. One woman whose experience covers nearly every department in which magicians and the professed professors of potent charms operate, does not hesitate to say that the biggest humbug is always the easiest to sell."

Samuel Anderson writes from Montana: "The Progressive Thinker is the greatest educator of the age, a grand and noble work that is freeing the fettered minds of ignorance and superstition, and giving back knowledge and enlightenment to comfort the weary, restless souls. I do so regret that I never knew of it earlier in life, that I might have had it in my family always. It has been introduced by a neighbor with some well-worn copies, and now it comes to stay."

Men used to look about in deserts and wildernesses for the fountain of youth. Latterly they are more sensible, and look each man inside of himself. From teaching how to be young at sixty, they went on to teach how to be young though a nonogenarian, and then how to retain youth's vigor for a hundred years. And now a man has written a book—and a mighty plausible book it it—on "The Possibility of Not Dying," says the New York World. Why not live forever? the advance school is saying. Is not the body renewed throughout every few years? Is it not merely a machine? Cannot proper care and intelligence always replace wornout parts with new parts as good as the originals, or even better in many cases? Why not abandon the whole superstition about the necessity of dying? There was an account in the news during the past week of a youth of upward of eighty who was making century runs down in Pennsylvania. A wagon run over him and broke several of his bones. He was in the hospital a few weeks and then resumed his century runs, feeling, as Teddy Roosevelt would say, "like a bull moose." And Physical Culture gives an account of a New Rochelle woman of ninety-three who is a great dancer, as frisky and limber as a girl at her first ball, and who is also a daring horsewoman and is only kept from jumping the rope and rolling the hoop by the entreaties of her great-grandchildren, who do not think it dignified. To resolve to live forever is a laudable ambition. It is a good idea to hitch your achievement wagon to a star. If you don't attain the full measure of your ideal, at least you will save yourself from being a whining, shrivelled, unsightly wrech of a human being at seventy."

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

The Republican, of Ottawa, Kansas, says: "The Spiritualist meetings closed with a business session this morning, after the most successful session of the Association history. It was enthusiastically decided to return to Ottawa for the next meeting, and for a longer time. The officers elect are: President, H. W. Henderson, Lawrence; secretary, Jacob Hey, Overbrook; treasurer, R. N. Kerr, Glenlock."

The Grand Rapids (Mich.) Democrat says: "The eighth annual meeting of the State Spiritualist Association was held at the camp grounds at Briggs Park. The western part of the State was well represented, but very few delegates from the eastern part were present. All the officers of the association were there, however. There are thirty-six charter societies in the State Association, but neither the Briggs Park Association nor the Grand Rapids Association is in the list. President D. P. Dewey, of Grand Blanc, presided, and the report of Secretary May F. Ayres showed that the receipts for the year amounted to $1,404.75, and that the association was increasing rapidly in membership. In his annual address President Dewey said that the members of the Spiritualists' Association felt pride in saying that their affairs were on a safe foundation, that what they lacked in wealth they made up in love for one another. He warmly indorsed the project started by one of the members to raise a fund for the establishment of a private school for educating young men and women of the Spiritualist belief."

The Port Huron (Mich.) Times says: "Residents of the vicinity of Sixth and Wall streets have been quite aroused recently by sundry mysterious nocturnal appearances in and about the brick mansion on the corner formerly occupied by the late Dr. P. W. Reed. The house long had the appearance of being empty even before the doctor died, so that the fact of its being unoccupied did not attract any attention until several unusual occurrences which would indicate that it was not entirely uninhabited. But just who the occupants are no one seems to know as yet. The first intimation of occupancy, ghostly or mortal, which were noticed were lights in the office building that faces Wall street. Here the old gentleman during his life-time used to spend many evenings with the shades closely drawn, around which only the smallest cracks of light could be seen. For several weeks past lights have been again observed in the little brick building, much the same as before the doctor's death. There were no indications of habitation except the light which shone through the cracks of the shades, but when investigators approach closely enough to examine the windows, it is said the light entirely disappears. The light may be seen again, however, when one has moved away a few feet. No one has yet had the courage to enter the building at such a time, but from close outside observations no solution has been found to the strange phenomenon, except in the minds of some who declare that the spirit of the late doctor finds comfort in visiting his earthly abode. Shortly after the mysterious light was observed in the office, passers-by noticed other lights in the residence. It was at first thought that they might be reflections of the electric light on the corner, but neighbors who watched the house soon became aware that the lights were not stationary. They were seen to move slowly from room to room, increasing and lessening in intensity as they did so, now visible through one window, now at another. One observer declares that a shadowy figure has been seen carrying a lighted candle and apparently searching for something as it moves about through the house. These strange manifestations have even been seen in the third story and tower of the house, where lights were never seen during the doctor's lifetime. So frequent have these shadows and lights appeared and so strong an impression have they made upon the residents of that vicinity that the house is carefully shunned after dark and only the more venturesome ones approach it."

Frank Callues writes from Edinboro, Pa.: "We are progressing grandly here in a quiet way, developing mediums, circulating Spiritualistic literature, and giving 'life readings' by impression or inspiration ,or both, which is causing very many to wonder how or where I get my wisdom."

The Chicago Journal says: "The ghost which has been haunting the old Paige house at Connellsville, Pa., had an encounter with an incredulous boarder last week. Thomas McGown, who boards at the house, had been away both times that the ghost appeared before. He laughed at those who said they had seen it and declared that it was someone playing a practical joke. McGown was sitting upon the porch in the back yard waiting for the supposed joker when he heard peculiar sounds. He looked out in the yard and saw quite plainly a white-robed figure. McGown is a powerful man and he sprang at the figure, determined that it should not escape him. To his utter dismay his hands went clear through the thing and he shook hands with himself. McGown turned quickly, but the ghost had disappeared. He believes in spirits now and is firm in his conviction that it was a genuine spook he saw."

D. Edson Smith writes: "I have just finished a careful reading of Hudson Tuttle's new book, 'The Arcana of Spiritualism.' This manual of spiritual science and philosophy should be carefully read by all seekers after truth, no matter what their creed or present belief. In this work Mr. Tuttle has presented his views of man's nature and destiny in a masterly manner—clear, comprehensive and logical. This is a good work for Spiritualists to loan to their orthodox friends. All thoughtful readers will find this work interesting and profitable."

John J. Ingalls, for eighteen years Senator from Kansas, now passed to spirit life, some eleven years ago wrote: "Unless we survive, the structure of laws and customs upon which society is based are a detected imposture; the codes of morality and justice, the sentiments of gratitude and faith are empty formulas, without force or consecration. Why should their inculcations be heeded, if in this life only we have hope (and consciousness)? Our passions and our pleasures should be the guides of conduct and virtue is indeed a superstition and a duty must be a chimera if life ends at the grave. Unless we survive the ties of birth, affection and friendship are a delusive mockery. Neither veneration nor reverence is due to the dead, if they are but dust; if the life of Burnes terminated on this bank and shoal of time, if no morning is to dawn upon the night in which he sleeps, then sorrow has no consolation, and the impressive and solemn ceremony which we observe to-day has no more significance than the painted pageant of the stage. If the existence of Burnes was but a troubled dream, why should we pause to recount his virtues and that his associates should assemble in solemn sorrow around this voiceless sepulchre. No cenotaph should be reared for posterity, the memory of their achievements, if those who come after them are to be their only successors in annihilation and extinction. Why should their inculcations be heeded? Perjury is a (derisive) jest. The latest prayer of Burnes' departing spirit has no more sanctity to us, who soon or late must follow him, than an arrow that is spent, or a taper that is burned out. This is the conclusion which the philosophy of negation must accept at last. If these teachings are right, then obedience to law is an indefensible servitude; rulers and magistrates are despots, tolerated only by popular imbecility. Justice is a denial of liberty. Honor and truth are trivial rhapsodies; murder and perjury are derisive jests, and their harsh definitions are frivolous phrases invented by tyrants to impose upon the timidity of cowards and the credulity of slaves. This is the conclusion which the philosophy of negation must accept at last. Such is the felicity of those degrading precepts which make the epitaph the end. If these teachers are right, then we are atoms in a moral chaos."

Mrs. M. J. Briggs writes from Arlington, N. J.: "I have received my paper and book all right and I wish to thank you ever so much for the premium. I have it partly read through and enjoying it exceedingly. I with a good many others do not know how you can give so much for so little money. The Progressive Thinker is a feast of good things, the best Spiritualist paper that is printed, and I have taken it ever since it was first printed."

The Quincy (Ill.) Whig says: "Spirits of the dead who haunt the old witch house, at North and Essex streets, Salem, Mass., Miss Carrie Peabody Bly declares, control her actions. Miss Bly prefers to be known as Carrie Peabody. She lives in an addition to the witch house, built more than a century ago. But much of her time is spent in the upper rooms or in the attic under the old beams and rafters of the old house. Here she holds communion with spirits, goes into trances and startles the town's people by her odd actions. Miss Bly was born in this town twenty-seven years ago. It was only a year ago last May that she first felt herself controlled by spirits. Before that she was a bright, keen-witted shopgirl. Miss Bly fell into a trance after an illness. Doctors could not relieve her. James F. Lifhtman, a medium of Marblehead, restored her to consciousness. She is a slight young woman, with a dark complexion and brown eyes. In speaking of her trances she said: 'My spirit seemed to be suspended above my body. I could not speak. A light—a tiny bright blue flame—seemed to burn in my heart. When a medium breathed in my mouth and the flame was about to go out, I opened my eyes.' Miss Bly says she is controlled by the spirit of Nathaniel Hawthorne. 'One day,' she says, 'I was in an old chamber. I felt myself going into a trance. I saw a fine old gentleman in the doorway. When he spoke I knew it was Hawthorne. 'You must be patient, my child,' he said, 'you are to do great things. Perhaps you may not wish to do them all, but remember your duty and you will be rewarded. Do them as Hester Prynne wore the scarlet letter upon her bosom.' He has since been with me every day.' Miss Bly also said she spoke with the spirit of Caroline Miskel Hoyt on the night before Hoyt was sent to the sanitarium. 'I will never be happy,' Miss Bly reports Mrs. Hoyt's spirit as saying, 'until the judges release my husband. He is not insane. Speak to them for me.' Salem folk are flocking to see the girl and listen to her experiences."

After the report of the secretary had been read at Briggs Park, President Dewey read his annual address. Mr. Dewey said in part: "We feel pride in saying that our affairs are on a safe foundation, that where we lack in wealth we have those higher riches—a love for one another." In speaking of the fund which has been started by one of the members of the association for a private school for the education of young men and women of the Spiritualist belief, Mr. Dewey said: "The fund will in due time establish and maintain a school for the development of the entire person in spiritual as well as physical and mental accomplishment."

Carrie F. Weatherford writes: "After a week at Haslett Park, Essie and I find ourselves at Louisville, and we were met last Sunday evening by a large and representative audience, in spite of its being an unusually warm evening. The First Spiritualist Church has secured our services for the months of September and October."

Clara A. Beck writes from San Diego, Cal.: "The First Spiritual Society of San Diego, Cal., elected the following officers and board of trustees for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Clara A. Beck; vice-president, Charles A. Buss; secretary, J. H. Hammond; treasurer, J. Shaw; board of trustees, Mrs. C. A. Beck, Mrs. Shaw, C. A. Buss, L. G. Evans and M. P. Burbank."

The Chesterfield camp is prospering exceedingly well this year. We are glad to know that. The Indianapolis Sentinel says: "The large attendance at the meetings of the Indiana Association of Spiritualists at Chesterfield continues and the newcomers are numerous. The meetings are proving more attractive than was anticipated and the leaders claim that they will be productive of several hundred additional converts to the religion. Stalls have been arranged by the various mediums about the grounds and these have been scenes of nightly seances, which are creating great interest. An address by Swami Abhayananda, the Hindoo philosopher, drew an unusually large audience today. The Rev. George Colby will deliver a discourse to-night. The executive committee is preparing for another immense crowd Sunday, when it is expected that the attendance of 8,000 last Sunday will be exceeded. The program will be as follows: Lyceum celebration, 10 a. m.; lecture, Swami Abhayananda, 2 p. m.; tests by C. L. Ainsworth, 4:30 p. m."

August Englund writes from Crawford, South Dakota: "Will you kindly allow one of your obscure though greatly benefited readers to tender his thanks for the weekly visits of The Progressive Thinker the past seven months. I would not do without it. Some of your readers estimate its value at $5 per annum. I would not miss it for one dollar a week. Some of its guardian angels may know something of its worth to me, but few if any mortals ever will know the transformation it has made in the life, hopes and aspirations of one of its most humble readers. I wish, and many with me, that the Spiritualist workers and demonstrators of this grand science and philosophy would not ask such large prices for their labor. How much did Jesus ask and receive as compensation for his untiring work? Why not follow his example as nearly as possible? I wish that I were financially able to subscribe for at least 500 copies of your valuable paper. I would place them where at least fifty good honest Spiritualists could be made from them, open their blinded eyes and comfort the doubting, sorrowing hearts of that many of my brothers and sisters of earth. One year would be enough for the same list. Then I would change to others. I feel assured that each of them would renew their subscription. Long may The Progressive Thinker live, flourish and grow until it is large enough to publish all the truths there is each week and send it to every nook and corner and hamlet of this continent and other continents."

Clara A. Beck writes from San Diego, Cal.: "The First Spiritual Society of San Diego, Cal., desire donations from every Spiritualist or liberally inclined persons to aid in buying a lot upon which to erect a Spiritual Temple or building, for the spread of this grand truth. It has had bequeathed to it property to be used for building purposes only; hence this invitation to every Spiritualist in the land, to contribute only what they feel able to give. You will get returns from it doubly greater, as we believe, As ye give so shall ye receive. Remittances will be thankfully received by John H. Hammond, secretary, 1035 15th st, San Diego, Cal."

The Salt Lake Tribune says: "Canyon road and vicinity has been a lively neighborhood for the past two nights, numbers of people going there to see the ghost, somnambulist, demented person, or whatever it may be, which has several times been seen promenading there at the hour when churchyards yawn and graves give up their dead. On Monday night the watchers were quie numerous and very persistent, numbers of them remaining until daylight warned any troubled spirits that the hours they were permitted to leave their unhappy places of abode had expired and that they must return. Some of the watchers were armed with clubs and others carried revolvers, and yet others of a gentler nature brought musical instruments on which they discoursed sweet music to soothe and entice the restless spirit. Altogether, however, the scene was too lively for any ghost to walk."

Wm. Ball, secretary, writes: "The First Spiritual Society of Payne, O., held its third annual reunion in Barnes' Grove, August 12, with Dr. H. V. Sweringen as speaker. His lecture was pronounced by all, simply grand; scarcely a move by any; all seemed spellbound. Brother Fred Dunlkin opened the meeting, and all who have heard him know how to appreciate him. Notwithstanding the rain, nearly one thousand people were on hand."

W. D. Noyes, of Columbus, O., writes: "The First Spiritual Temple opened its doors for the first time in Columbus. We have a fine hall capable of seating 200. The temple will be used exclusively for spiritual purposes. It is intended as a headquarters for local and visiting Spiritualists. The temple will be open every day and evening as a resort for Spiritualists. A cordial invitation is extended to all speakers and mediums who visit Columbus to call at the Temple, and an opportunity will be given them on the platform to introduce their phase of mediumship. The temple can be used for light or dark seances. Our permanent address is the same as the temple, 282½ South High street, Columbus, Ohio."

A Detroit (Mich.) paper speaks of the dedication of the Occult Temple there as follows: "There was a Spiritualist dedication service last night at the Occult Temple, 132 Michigan avenue. The deep red effect of the walls and the stage drapery was accentuated by a row of red and green lights over the top of the stage curtains. The red glow cast upon everything and the association of Spiritualists spread an air of mystery. At the rear of the stage there was a picture of the late Mrs. C. W. Burrows and a mother of Christ forgiving Mary Magdalena. An opening to the rear was screened by green-wood scenery, people leaving the stage disappearing apparently in the trees. The procession of dedication was led by Dr. Burrows dressed in black. As he marched at the head of the procession he distributed white carnations, giving one to everyone present. Rev. Moses Hull of Buffalo, the speaker of the evening, marched behind Dr. Burrows. His only decoration was a broad white ribbon drawn over his right shoulder. Behind the two men marched a half-dozen women and girls, singing to the tune of 'America,' a poem composed for the dedication by Adam Scholes, of Detroit. Reaching the rear of the room, the dramatic flow of events was unhappily interrupted by the inability of the column to come to the right about in the limited space. Rev. Moses Hull in his dedicatory address charged the Spiritualists of to-day with being a boastful lot who have accomplished little. After that ice cream and cake were served."

Columbus Wells writes: "The older I become the more firmly I am in the thought that there is no Infinite Intelligence, Supreme Power or God outside of Nature; Nature takes in everything. Suppose we could start from the earth on a straight line, and could travel at the rate of one million miles per minute. In every hour—more or less—we would come to a planet, or world something like the earth. If we would slacken our speed enough to take a view of it we would find it peopled the same as our earth. Then if we could go on, we would soon come to another planet. We could keep right on passing world after world, and never come to the end. The Supreme Power and Nature are one and the same thing, this being the case, how useless it is to utter a prayer to God for help, for the prayer would never be answered. Nature or God does not work in that way. We must help ourselves. If all on this earth would live true to Nature's laws and be harmonious with them all the time, there would be no poverty, sickness and misery."

A. F. writes: "A word about the Occult Life of Jesus. I read it through carefully, and thought between the lines, too. To the scientific man, I must say it matters not whether it is represented as a vision, a dream, or a novel, or call it what you please, it is more consistent, more logical, more scientific, more in harmony with natural divine laws than that New Testament story. When put on the balance and fairly weighed, it is not wanting in the possibilities. To me it is interesting throughout."

Mrs. Helen Taylor writes from Philadelphia, Pa.: "I have just concluded a successful three months' engagement with the First Society of Spiritualists of Williamsport, Pa., and although much pressure has been brought to bear upon me to still continue with them, I feel that their interests can best be served by the introduction of new speakers, at least every three months, for while I favor the settlement of speakers, in societies that have reached a mature age, I feel convinced that younger societies can create a greater interest in their communities by changing their speakers from time to time in order to present Spiritualism in all its many phases, each speaker presenting new features according to his or her mental and spiritual unfoldment, thereby infusing new life, energy, interest on the part of its members. I will not accept any engagements for the coming fall or winter, but will conduct my own meetings in Philadelphia, as usual, teaching the higher truths of Spiritualism and giving comfort and consolation to the many aching hearts through kind and loving messages from those just gone before. I would like to say in closing that this valley contains large deposits of silver and copper, and is rich in oil and natural gas. I have seen all of these in my private work, and wish to place this prediction on record that Williamsport will in a few years have many oil and gas wells, and they will be the chief products of that vicinity. As the lumber dies out, gas and oil will take its place."

Frank T. Ripley can be engaged for the Sundays of September. He has been engaged in Grand Rapids, Mich., for October; Columbus, Ohio, for December. He can be engaged for November, January, February and March. Address all letters to 40 Loomis street, Chicago, Ill.

L. B. Lyman writes from Helena, Mont.: "I wish all my investments made in business affairs proved as profitable as those made to meet your offer for progressive reading, not only in your cheapest and best of all progressive weekly papers, but in the premium books you give away with the paper. No spirituany inclined progressive thinker need pine in solitude for reading to his taste. As long as you can afford to make such offers of reading, I can afford to accept them, and 'here's your coin.'"

T. W. Woodrow, No. 1115 Garfield avenue, Kansas City, Mo., writes: "We are arranging to purchase a fine residence building and ten acres of land two and a half miles west of Topeka, Kansas, for a sanitarium. Estimated cost of the building, $40,000. By addition of $9,000 to the fund available we can buy it. We propose to raise the amount in this way: Subscriptions by persons who will take the amount of the subscription in medical service at the sanitarium for any patient or patients that may be designated. Several have subscribed already and others have signified their willingness to subscribe with that understanding. It is also intended to make it the centre of a general spiritual movement. Active canvassing has not yet begun, but it will not be long delayed. In the meantime I would like to hear from those that are willing to take hold of the project with us. I would like to arrange for appointments following the Spiritualist camp at Marshalltown, Iowa, September 2 to 16, and in places not far remote. Those desiring my services as lecturer, will confer upon me a favor by letting me know."

A. F. writes: "The Progressive Thinker comes regularly every Friday, just in time to have a good Sunday's reading, and I read it, and re-read it, and it only makes me more anxious to see the next week's issue. I was agreenbly disappointed when I received the premium books two months ago. It seems I did not understand that I was to get the Hull-Covert Debate with the premiums. I thought I would have to send for it extra. The debate alone is worth all the money, inasmuch as it shows how low some ministers of the gospel will fall in debate, and how Elder Covert reflected upon his own christian God throughout the whole of his argument, when he says so often that all mediums and Spiritualists are frauds and deluded, while at the same time he forgets that they are images of the God he worships, and where is the wisdom of his God when he chooses to create in his own image so many 'fools' as Spiritualism represents in America alone, saying nothing of Europe and other countries. Just compare Covert's language with that of Moses Hull's scholarship, his logic, his consistency, his science and his gentlemanly conduct throughout the debate. If Spiritualism is not true, what a farce to preach everlasting life without the knowledge of spirit return."

A special dispatch from Paris to the Chicago Tribune says: "One of the most wonderful stories of the transmigration of souls ever told comes from L'Orient, an Eastern seaport, where seven persons of good intelligence and a reputation for truth swear upon their honor that a dog spoke to them intelligently. Ten years ago, according to their testimony, a mariner of the name of Kerbec, who had always been a firm believer in the transmigration of the human soul to the body of an inferior being, told his wife that after he died he would return to her in the disguise of some domestic pet. Four years ago a strange dog wandered into the house and remained, being well taken care of by the family. Three days ago Widow Kerbec, her three grown children, and three neighbors, including a skeptical schoolmaster, were spending the evening together at the house, chatting pleasantly, when suddenly the dog rose on his hind legs and spoke distinctly in a faraway, unnatural voice, these words: "Adieu, wife and children; adieu, friends.' Then the dog fell over stone dead."

Will Mrs. Maude Lord Drake please send her postoffice address to The Progressive Thinker, and thus satisfy inquiring friends?

Miss Rose M. Ruff writes from Corning, Ohio: "Mrs. A. E. Kirby, inspirational speaker and test medium, of Cincinnati, Ohio, has gone to Summerland Beach, to fill a two weeks engagement, after a sojourn of two weeks in Corning an vicinity. Enough cannot be said by way of praise, and she will never know the extent of good she did while here. Her callers were so numerous for private readings and circles, that in justice to herself, she was compelled to disappoint many, by refusing to further tax her strength. The entire community is enthused as never before, and her work is being most highly complimented by all who were fortunate enough to hear her."

Alex Levering writes: "Those premium books should be in every home the world over. They are the very books that should be on everybody's center table. As ornaments and spiritual teachers the books are worth $25.

Julia Steelman Nichols, who is now lecutring in Moline, Ill., will officiate at funerals or hold meetings or test seances for Societies or others, within a few hours' ride of the above place. She has some open dates for fall and winter months. Address as above.

Dr. V. Fell writes from Washington, D. C.: "In laying before your readers in your late issue the magnificent address of Cora L. V. Richmond, at Corry Pa., you have, in my estimation done the thinking world a greater service than could at this time have been done in any other way. Truly, it was the 'right thing, at the right time.' It ought to be published in pamphlet form and sent throughout this country by the million. The masterly way in which it is presented will command for it attention everywhere. And this is 'Christian civilization' at the beginning of the 20th century—a forcing, not only of our religion on a quiet, honest and inoffensive people, but an ill-concealed attempt to subjugate and make them vassals of the 'Christian' nations of Europe. If this be 'Christian civilization,' let us have Mohammedanism, or the religion of the North American Indian. In square dealing, would it not be an improvement?"

Ottawa Camp, Kansas.

The Ottawa, Kansas, camp session of 1900, like all things earthly has come and gone, and we are quite sure the work accomplished will redound to the lasting good of the cause of Spiritualism, not only in the immediate vicinity of Ottawa, but throughout quite a scope of country contiguous thereto.

The meeting was well attended, the workers and managers in the best of condition, the managers wide awake to their duties and the needs of a successful camp, everybody happy and a grand, good time was enjoyed by all.

Forest Park is within two squares of the railroad depot, within the limits of the city, and is one of the most beautiful natural forests in the west. Art and money, with the aid of the flower gardener has made it an earthly paradise, and we look forward to the not far distant time when Ottawa Camp will be the "Cassadaga of the West."

Four sessions a day were held, which was more perhaps than is advisable, yet both workers and audience seemed equal to the occasion, and the program was carried out in that way.

That invidious feeling so often manifested between mediums and speakers was noted for its conspicuous absence—not a ripple occurring to mar the perfect feast of spiritual things that were so bounteously supplied.

The philosophy was expounded by Brother D. W. Hull, Judge Farley, Ben F. Hayden, Mrs. Lull, Mrs. Hammond and Mrs. Mabee, while the phenomena by way of tests was given by Mrs. Hammond, Mrs. Wagner, Mrs. Hayden and Mrs. Lull. Other private mediums were on the ground, and all were kept busy giving out the feast to hungry souls. Before the meeting closed arrangements were made and expenses guaranteed for holding meeting next year upon these beautiful grounds.

At the breaking up of camp, Mrs. Hayden went directly home to Indianapolis, where she will be glad to see all friends who may desire to call. I came here where I am staying for a while with dear good Spiritualist friends, Mr. and Mrs. Marion Cummings and daughter Kate. After a few days rest I will be ready to answer calls to lecture anywhere in the West, on terms that will be satisfactory. Societies or individuals wanting to arrange for my services can address me at Gardner, Kansas, P. O. Box 86.

BEN F. HAYDEN.

Buffalo, N. Y.

To the Editor:—I returned from a two weeks' camp-meeting at Freeville, N. Y., to find but one Spiritualistic meeting wide open and the house full from platform to ante-room. This was the old original Buffalo Spiritual Church Society, E. J. Chase president, Mrs. Catherine Chase, pastor and platform test medium. Mrs. Chase is the drawing card at these meetings. All through the intense heat of August these meetings have been kept up, while the others have closed and the members and workers have enjoyed themselves in the cool retreat of Lily Dale's sylvan shades. President Chase is now looking for a larger and more commodious hall for winter use, for he well knows that the present overcrowded one will not hold his audiences when cooler weather comes.

Some of our over-nice Spiritualists talk about doing away with all phenomena, but I claim that phenomena is the bed rock upon which we build, must build up and build upon forever, or we fall just as the churches are failing for want of demonstrated proof and demonstrated truths. J. W. DENNIS.

LET ME FORGET.

Let me forget that I was wronged,
That sorrow clouded so my way;
Let me write this across my path,
"They knew not what they did," and say,
Let me forget.

Let me forget my own mistakes,
How oft I've failed, yet know not where
The fault had lain, till circumstance
Showed 'twas in me, by Truth's bright glare.
Let me forget.

Let me forget all bitterness,
All sadness, drooping and despair,
All weakness of the heart and will,
For Hope and Love are everywhere.
Let me forget.

Let me forget and seek to leave
All that's behind for that before,
The greater light has shown the way.
Flashed out from Time's cerulean shore.
Let me forget.

Let me forget, and ever seize
Each chance my enemy to bless,
Lift high the standard I have won,
Its legend lightening each distress—
Let me forget.

Its legend "Love;" supremest power
The mightiest wrong to overcome,
The brilliance of Hope's gleaming star,
The glory of Millennium's sun.

Love is the filling of the law;
Love crowns the Universe in light;
With this about me I'll forget,
And live the song of Bethlehem's night.
Yea, I'll forget.

NEW EDITION.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE

Do you want to organize a society, for the social, intellectual and spiritual advancement of the children and adults?

THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM

furnishes all you desire.

Do you want a self-sustaining society, founded on the basic principles of the spiritual philosophy? You have it in THE PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM. It furnishes a system of evolution by internal growth; not the old cup and pitcher Sunday-school. It has something to interest and advance every member, and those who are most active in teaching are the ones who learn most.

NO SPECIAL INSTRUCTOR REQUIRED.

THE LYCEUM GUIDE gives every detail needed for effective organization, and for conducting the society when established.

It has Golden Chain Recitations; the prettiest songs and music; choral responses; a service for a Band of Mercy; calisthenics; how to make the badges, flags and banners; marching exercises; full instructions in conducting the exercises, with parliamentary rules, etc.

Many Spiritualists living in isolation, have formed lyceums in their own families; others have banded, two or three families together, while large societies have organized as lyceum platform, and found great interest in this self-instructive method.

Do not wait for a "missionary" to come to your assistance, but take hold of the matter yourself, procure copies of the GUIDE, and commence with the few or many you find interested.

Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle (address, Berlin Heights, Ohio) will answer all questions pertaining to lyceum work.

The price of THE LYCEUM GUIDE is 50 cents, postpaid, or by the dozen, 40 cents each, by express, charges paid by receiver. Address

THE SUNDAY QUESTION

Historical and critical review, with replies to an objection. By G. W. Brown, M. D. Price 15c. For sale at this office.

Real Life in the Spirit-Land.

Given inspirationally by Mrs. Ma

"TRUTH IS MIGHTY AND WILL PREVAIL."

This is an old adage, and recognized as a truism as long as language has been written.

The question upon which I propose to talk a few moments is, What Is Truth as Applied to Modern Spiritualism? It is claimed there is no new truth, and yet we often hear Spiritualists and investigators say they have found a new truth, or an advanced thought, which to their minds is more consistent with true Spiritualism, as developed through the Fox Sisters, and more modern teachings, and they propose to withdraw from their first love, or their early associations in Spiritualism, and connect themselves with some new organization, which has developed, as they claim, some new truth or advanced thought.

And the first we know, they have associated themselves with some of the new organizations, among which may be named christian science, occult science, metaphysical science, psychic science, divine science, psychology, hypnotism, theosophy, psychopathy, magnetic healing, etc., and as is usual with new converts, they are active and enthusiastic, and have done much to depress and draw off from spiritual circles, those that were in sympathy and investigating spiritual teachings.

Even some of our best and most earnest thinkers, seeing the falling off in interest and the lack of fellowship and brotherly love, in some communities of Spiritualists, and have concluded that Spiritualism has done its work, as an independent organization, and has been transferred, or has drifted out into churches, or other sects, or organizations, and will be known no more as an ism, or a special representative of original Spiritualism. Most of these various isms are new, and are emanations from Modern Spiritualism.

Every little while a new ism springs up, with some new theory, more or less possible, and with a new name, enters the field for converts.

I have in mind a case in point. In the Philosophical Journal, published in San Francisco, August 11, 1899, I read the following advertisement.: "Julianism—The Philosophy of Consciousness—School at 519 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco. Julian Mac Rae, Initiate." Then follow the terms of initiation, etc. On Sunday evening, August 5, 1900, at the instance of Dr. Julian Mac Rae (as I understand he claims to be an M. D. as well as a Spiritualist), there was held at the Odd Fellows Hall, in San Francisco, a public meeting, at which were seen many prominent Spiritualists, and literary men and women. After a very splendid discourse by an eminent lecturer on the subject of "The New Race of God-Men," the Doctor then proposed to answer philosophical questions, and a few were asked. He then announced his purpose to continue these meetings and his teachings, as advertised, and predicted a "pentecostal" commotion, from the introduction of Julianism, the Philosophy of Consciousness.

"Truth is mighty and will prevail."

The important question for us to consider is, will anything else prevail? If not, it seems as if we are trifling away valuable time in visionary speculations. Can we afford to do that? Is it necessary to determine a simple truth, to spend so much time, to go into so many speculations, to tear down one theory to build another, with no additional authority.

What have all these new theories, new isms, that have been inaugurated in the last fifty years done to establish the truth, that was not accomplished at the introduction of Modern Spiritualism?

Where science has been introduced to confirm those truths, the cause has been advanced undoubtedly. But it seems difficult to understand how truth has been promoted.

Is there not a natural, a legitimate cause, for the introduction of so many new isms, and so much speculation? Have we as earnest, sincere Spiritualists done all we could to promote the cause of true Spiritualism, and protect it from abuse, from false representations, from fraud and calumny?

Have we, by precept and example, done all we could to exclude from our ranks improper persons and practices?

Have we made the Golden Rule our rule of action? Have we contributed to the extent of our ability, to the support of sick and indigent Spiritualists?

Have we made earnest and active efforts to provide for the education of such as are worthy, competent and desirous of becoming teachers of the great truths of Spiritualism?

Have we by our sympathy, charity and devotion to truth, shown to the world we are worthy and entitled to their confidence and their co-operation?

Until we can answer these questions in the affirmative, we need not be surprised to find investigators who have sought for truth in the churches and among luke-warm Spiritualists, still going forward looking for truth, where the evidences of it are more consistent with their hopes and anticipations.

If truth only can prevail, it seems a vital question to determine which of all these numerous isms, if any one indeed, embodies the truth.

Those who have studied and experienced the evidences, accepted by many, as spirit influences, and spirit confirmation, will do well to adhere to the original teachings as developed through the Fox Sisters, and confirmed by their own numerous experiences, notwithstanding the many new isms, so ingeniously placarded before them in the last few years.

Those who have sought diligently and failed to find the truth, as they conceive it, and are now studying new theories, new dogmas, new truths, as they term them, should remember the many legitimate causes that have interposed, to prevent the development of the genuine truth, for which they are seeking.

The practical question for that class to consider is, can we not by personal effort, precept and example, do more to restore pure spirituality, and promote the cause of truth, by strictly adhering to the original teachings and principles involved in Modern Spiritualism, as developed through the early teachings of the Fox Sisters? Is it not evident that Spiritualists have through their lack of zeal, their lack of charity; true benevolence, brotherly love and the principles involved in common humanity, done more to create dissatisfaction, doubt, inharmony and discouragement than anything else?

By a determined effort to develop and practice the spiritual virtues we know are of truth, and confirmed by spirit influences, can we not restore what has been sacrificed, by our failure to practice the principles and the virtues we realize are embraced in true spirituality?

If we will do that, and abandon our pursuit after strange gods, and new theories, and manifest our change of heart and purposes, by associating ourselves with those who are steadfast, sincere, active and consistent, we may overcome in large part the tendency that now prevails, to disintegrate and confound many of the valuable truths we once cherished.

We, as Spiritualists cannot hope for success and advancement, by absenting ourselves from stated meetings and spiritual circles, because those from whom we differ in some minor respects, are expected to be present, and perhaps may be leaders, with some pronounced new theory. These are meetings often, in which new theories, new isms are concocted, and eventuate in a new organization.

Most of the inharmony and dissatisfaction that arises in spiritual circles, is from that class of minds that is speculative, never satisfied, always seeking for something new, regardless of what is true or false.

Hence the dissensions, the new theories and the numerous isms, that have sprung up in the last few years.

I apprehend the cause of this to be largely from the failure of leading thinking Spiritualists to stand firmly upon what they recognize as truth, regardless of skepticism, criticism or new spiritual theories that may be advanced by those whose object evidently is to tear down, or for notoriety, with no substitute of equal value.

A firm adherence to established principles, a conscientious, upright life, the Golden Rule as their rule of action, involves as much truth as is necessary for usefulness in this life. And those who are seeking a larger truth, may be assured that in the practice of the principles and the virtues contained in Modern Spiritualism, as originally introduced they have "a truth that will prevail."

EVOLUTION OF GODS.

A Critical Analysis of the Same.

Almost everyone who has ever heard of a God, has an idea of what a God consists of; and these ideas are as many and as varied as the people who think them.

No doubt a majority of the people of the earth have a God, for it is easy to own one.

They are cheap and easy to make; therefore, everybody who desires, can have one of his own.

Some people have no God. They have no use for one. There is a God for each person who wants one, and no two alike.

Everyone who has a God, takes him with him to the grave.

The number of people who have no God are on the increase; hence, in a few more centuries Gods will be relics of the past, as witches and krakens are today.

Gods, devils, witches, krakens, etc., are all made of the same material—superstition. Just as the world improves and progresses, so do the gods, devils, etc. Gods are much better than they used to be. Some people's gods are much better than others.

Every body makes a god to suit them, and whenever they change, they change their gods also.

Everybody's god is their reflection and likeness, hence when a person describes his god, he also describes himself.

When a person tells you that his God is a terrible God, full of jealousy, hatred, tyranny, revenge, etc., do not trust him with the care of your dog, horse, cat or child, for he will abuse it just as his God does his beloved ones.

Ingersoll said: "A just God is the noblest work of man."

Gods, people and theories change, but facts never change. Theories founded on error conflict with facts; theories founded on facts never conflict with facts. For this reason it is easy to tell a theory founded on facts, from one founded on error.

Science is demonstrated facts, therefore science never changes. Astronomy is a science, therefore astronomy is the same to-day as in Bruno's time; but gods are not.

Did you ever know of a fact that contradicted astronomy? "I never did.

Theology is said to be the science of God.

Theology changes and so does its gods; but theology changes first. If there was a god, theology would not change.

When facts are discovered that contradict theology, then theology is worked over to suit the facts; then again some other facts contradict it, and it is worked over again and so on without limit, and each time it becomes more and more scientific, that is, conforms more and more with science.

Thus the process will go on and on until finally theology will lose itself by merging into, blending with, and becoming a part with science, and then it will have no god, for science has no god.

In the early days of theology when a fact was discovered that contradicts it, they tried to kill the fact by killing its discoverer; but failing in this way to kill the fact, they worked over their theology to suit the fact, and they have been working it over ever since, and are still at it, and such is the change in their God that he would not know himself if he were to see his former self in a mirror.

They executed Copernicus, burned Bruno and imprisoned Galileo, in order to kill the facts of astronomy; but they found it easier to change their gods than to kill facts, and they have done so.

Changing gods is easy and common; it is an everyday occurrence. It is more common to-day than in ancient times.

Few are the people that do not change their gods. Show me a person who does not change his God, and I will show you a person who does not progress.

It used to take centuries to change gods as much as they are changed to-day in a lifetime.

Martin Luther made the first great change in gods, recorded in modern history, and yet his improved god was a tyrant, filled with jealousy, envy, hatred, cruelty, etc. Nothing could be portrayed in the English language too heinous for his god to do when he got mad.

Luther's God was known as the Protestant God.

From time to time the Protestants have worked over their Gods and each time improved them, till to-day the average Protestant God is quite humane compared with Martin Luther's God.

There never was a time when Gods varied more in type than to-day; and never a time when gods were being improved faster than to-day. Every one who will observe can see the change wrought every year.

Lots of people, if they will be honest, can see how much better their god is to-day than a few years ago. For example I will cite the Christian Science God. Their God is quite different from the average Christian God.

Lots of the scientists can look back and see quite a contrast between their God of-to-day and their God of a few years ago. They would not trade back.

Devils are reflections of Gods, hence Devils improve as fast as gods.

Some Christians have quit making devils because they have no further use for them. After awhile they will have no further use for gods and will quit manufacturing them.

There has been more energy, time and lives spent in manufacturing and protecting Gods, than in pursuit of knowledge.

Most of the wars were to protect gods. When the world quits manufacturing gods it will have lots of leisure, and save lots of trouble. How was the first god made? He was made the same as the turtle that used to be under the earth. The way it was made was: Some one asked what was under the earth to hold it up. The one addressed, not knowing (in order to answer) made a big turtle and put it under.

Then Number One asked what the turtle stood on.

Then Number Two made a rock for the turtle to stand on, and had it go clear down.

Then Number One asked how the sun got through.

Then Number Two made a hole in the rock large enough for the sun to pass through and that completed the structure, and it remained unchanged for hundreds of years, and never would have been changed but for a Columbus, a Copernicus, a Bruno and a Galileo.

They had no farther use for them and so did away with them and made relics of them.

So it is with a god.

Some Number One asked, who made the world?

Then Number Two who was addressed, not knowing, but in order to answer, he made a god and told Number One that God made all.

Number One and Number Two have existed ever since and will exist.

Number One is Optimist.
Number Two is Pessimist.
Number One is Heterodox.
Number Two is Orthodox.
Number One is Progressive.
Number Two is Conservative.

Number One investigates and substitutes knowledge for ignorance.

Number Two substitutes theory and dogmatism for ignorance. For what he don't know he makes something to fill up. He is not honest. When Number One asked him what held the earth in place, I would have respected him more if he had been honest and said, "I don't know," and when Number One asked, who made the world, if he had been honest he would have said, "I don't know."

What are gods for?
First, to make all things.
Second, to govern all things.
Third, to damn nearly all things.

A god who is used for this trio of purposes is made up of a mixture of love, wisdom and hatred.

When people, who are using this kind of a God, advance and learn that nothing is damned, they then change their god and take away hatred and leave only love and wisdom. Some Christians have advanced to that degree already.

Again they progress and learn that nothing was created and they change their God again.

Again they progress and learn that all is ruled by fixed laws of cause and effect, and no God is needed, and they dispose with their god, and the universe moves on just the same, and their god becomes a relic.

The gods under discussion so far are Christian Gods. While there are Christian gods in variety without number, there are also other gods as well. While each Christian god differs from all others, yet there is a trait of nationality common to all, and the same is true of the Gods of other religions.

The Hindu gods, the Buddha gods, and so on each have their characteristics in common, so that when one becomes acquainted with them, they can readily recognize them as belonging to their respective class by their religious traits.

As far as I have read of other classes of gods they are all superior to the Christian gods.

But it is only a question of time when the Christian gods will be up to par with his cousins; and finally they will all be substituted with science, philosophy and reason and be laid away as a relic, like an Egyptian mummy alongside of the turtle, kraken, witch, devil, hell fire, etc., etc.

OUR RIGHTS.

The world hath seen in other days,
The millions toil, to keep the few;
And minstrels sung for royal praise,
While millions wept beneath the yew!

"The rights of kings" were well secured,
And millions bled, that kings might reign;
The world, for kings, earth's ills endured,
With stifled sob—with hungry pain.

To-day doth seek the rights of man;
The millions ask release from moil;
Not now for kings should wisdom plan;
Nor for "the few" should millions toil.

The ancient "right" is present wrong;
Let Earth begin her life anew;
While peaceful Labor growing strong,
Secures for man his rightful due!

'Twas thus an angel sung to me,
In the still voice of angel speech;
As lone I sat in reverie.
Did not the angel wisdom teach?
Chicago, Ill. J. O. M. HEWITT.

WHAT THE ANGEL SAID.

An angel stood by my side one night,
And said, as if to his own:
"Ere the book of the day is closed,
For one wrong you must atone.

"Through all the hours you have meant to be just,
And give back measure for measure,
The wealth of your neighbor you have coveted not,
Nor have taken from his rich pleasure.

"But what have you done to cheer the way
For the weak and sick around you?
What have you given from the brimming cup
Of love that so freely found you?

"You've taken the sunshine with selfish greed,
Nor passed on a gleam to another,
You've reveled in all the light and joy
Without a thought of your brother.

"It is much to be just—more to be kind;
Justice untempered by love is cold,
Hearts full of hunger and pain around you
Lacking a word grow weary and old.

"Just but not kind—this is your error;
This is the wrong you must make right;
Give of the love which comes as your portion,
Banish the darkness—let in the light!

"Souls need love as flowers the sunshine—
Give as the Infinite Father has given—
Filling the days unasked and unasking,
So shall we know the coming of heaven."

A QUESTION.

Must a Spiritualist Be an Infidel?

I have lately become a Spiritualist, because facts compelled me. I have investigated patiently and odiligently, reading, seeing, hearing, for several months. "'Tis past conjecture; all things rise in proof." I have always sought above all things to keep a candid mind; to be careful not to let my conclusions be shaped by my wishes rather than by my judgment. Following still this rule, I find myself at the age of 62 a real believer in that "communion of saints" mentioned in the Apostles' creed. When facts compel my judgment, I shall not hide it, let it put me in whatever company it may.

I had a Methodist training and associations, but I was always liberal. My creed has been fully expressed in the words of the Apostle Peter: "In every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of him." I see, therefore, no reason why what Christians would call an Infidel or an Atheist should be lost, provided he is knowing what he can and doing the best he knows. I can have, therefore, a fraternal spirit for one with whose views I am not at all in sympathy.

An article in The Progressive Thinker of August 18, signed "J. S. Harrington," is directed to me. Bro. Harrington has read the Bible a little at a very distant date, thought about it less; and, like the man who climbed to the top of his neighbor's chimney to get warm, has only succeeded in getting the smoke in his eyes. It is not easy to answer a sneer or a laugh, and I shall not speak in detail to the points he assumes to make, because I cannot persuade myself that he is very serious with them. If his judgment is determined by his will it cannot be changed by argument; if it follows facts, then I respectfully refer him from "Philip drunk to Philip sober." He has a fling at Abraham's marital relations, which, tested by the social and moral laws of his time and country, and the request of his own wife, were correct enough. No matter whether this, or Sarah's falsehood, or the deception practiced by Rebecca and Jacob, or any other fault or folble that he can hunt up in the lives of Old Testament characters or New—nothing of the sort is offered to men for their imitation, and my critic knows it. Let him say, if he will, that such and such people, when brought alongside the standard in his own mind, must be pronounced less than perfect—it might be their fault; it might be the fault of the standard by which they are judged. Let him find spots on the Sun—the Bible, I mean—if he will: if the Old Testament had been perfect there never would have been a New. This fact is implied both in the words of Jesus and of Paul; the very existence of a New Testament is an affirmation of it; and all Christians believe it. So, while the remarks of my Brother are highly captious; so much so as to give a suggestion that they are born of a fault-finding rather than an inquiring spirit, it really matters very little whether they are true or false. They have no relevancy. Man for his perfection in righteousness needs only two things—light for his head, motive for his heart; when the Bible can be shown to be signally deficient in either respect, it may be time to abandon it. But it says—said even so far back as Sinai—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself." If there is anything in the lives of any Bible characters; if there is anything in my friend's life at war with this precept, it may safely be condemned. I want also to notify my friend that he may throw out the Song of Solomon, if he likes; he may throw out Balaam and the ass, Samson and the jawbone, the storm that struck Sodom, Jonah and the whale, the sun halting in his course, and considerably more, if he likes, he will not hurt the book essentially. The book is still a history and illustration of the development of the God idea among the Israelites and down to us, with the associated thoughts of duty and destiny. Find fault with it if you will; you will not find its parallel outside Judaism and Christendom. It is at least a pure Monotheism, when polytheism and fetichism were everywhere else. Before you find fault with Jehovah, go study the gods of the Egyptians, the Babylonians, the Hindoos, the Greeks, and the Romans. Before you find fault with the book of Job, which is only a dramatic poem and not a history at all, tell me where on earth in that age could have been found such lofty ideas of the Divine Being. The more my friend studies and understands that poem, which even the preachers do not understand, the more he will be filled with wonder and amaze; especially if he is thinking at the same time of Zeus, and Hermes, and Pallas, and Aphrodite, and Jupiter, and Juno, and Vulcan, and Venus, and ten thousand demigods and lesser divinities. It is a shame that one should speak of "Jehovah and his boy;" of "Satan and Jehovah as brothers in market gardening;" but until he can look round as far back as Job's time, and find a better idea of God in Baal, or Ammon, or Ashtoreth, or some other contemporary divinity, his slur will only recoil upon himself. But respect for his own father and mother, who seem to have tried to teach their child something of the Bible which they probably loved; respect for noble men and women living; respect for millions of the most upright and illustrious dead, should have held his lips from utterances which may hinder Spiritualism, but which can never hurt Christianity.

Brother H. read the Bible when he was five years old, but some forty years afterwards he read Denton, and Ingersoll, and Paine. Well, I read Paine when I was just grown, and I have read Ingersoll again and again, whenever he came out with one of his characteristic hits. Both of them said some things which the world, the Christian world, would do well to listen to. But although "dogs have barked at the moon, it is a moon yet." Much that is not quite complimentary may justly be said of creeds and professors, but these are not the Bible nor Christianity. If the lives and teachings of certain Spiritualists are Spiritualism, then the less sober, right-intentioned people have to do with it the better.

Brother H. got mental freedom after he read Ingersoll and Denton and Paine; and seven years later he got the light, when his spirit son succeeded in opening communication with him. So, in Spiritualism he seems rather new, as I profess myself.

I get more confused and bewildered. I have seen wonders most amazing in the last eight months; and what I have read would make Munchausen and Gulliver ashamed. But now that I am in new company I cannot tell whether I am expected to build up Spiritualism or to fight Christianity. I meet a man who I thought was a Spiritualist, and behold he is a crazed Malay running amuck at the Bible and Jehovah and Jesus Christ. I see a spiritual mouse, and he imagines himself a Titan making war on the gods. My words have no reference to Bro. H.; but I would like to know where I am at.

Perhaps, as Bro. H. and I are both young in the cause, it might help us to compare notes. If we are going to throw away the Bible, and throw down Christianity, and look to the spirits, it would be well for us to obey at least one precept of Scripture and "try the spirits." As Bro. H. gets the light from the spirits, I wonder what they can be telling him that should make him so hostile to the things that are so respected by millions of the wisest and best of the present and the past. I am ready to join with him in this onslaught just as soon as I am convinced that it is more my duty to fight the Bible than to build up Spiritualism. Really, I would like to know what I am here for. The Free Thinker advertises the Rev. Samuel Watson as "A Modern Savior." Now Rev. Samuel Watson was a Methodist preacher and editor during almost the whole of his active life; and his book, "The Clock Struck One," is as orthodox as the Bible. Which leader shall I follow? Bro. Watson or Bro. Harrington? The greatest Spiritualist that ever trod this continent, Emma Hardinge, could deliver lecture after lecture, and write book on book, ponderous volumes, covering the whole history of Spiritualism, and not utter a word against anybody's Bible or anybody's religion. I have read a wonderful book by Florence Marryatt, but she sticks to her text, and lets the Bible and Christians alone. I have read a book by Prof. A. R. Wallace, and another by Prof. Zoellner, but they attack no man's religion. But if I pick up a Spiritualist paper, and expect to hear something interesting as to its work and its phenomena, too often I meet somebody who feels called on to tell me what fools my father and mother were; what a horrible monster Jehovah was, and what a sorry and impracticable fellow was Jesus Christ. Well, I am ready to go forward in the one path or the other just as soon as I know my duty. In the meanwhile Bro. H. and I may be useful to each other by comparing notes. He is getting light from the spirits and so am I. Are we talking to the same kind of spirits? May be the law of association between men and spirits is the well-known one that "birds of a feather flock together." I have seen something to indicate this. Prof. Robert Hare, the infidel, doesn't get the same kind of messages as Samuel Watson, the Methodist preacher.

Here are some of the messages we have received lately in a trumpet circle, the guiding spirit being "Dona Mendota," a Mexican Spaniard, a lawyer of liberal views, who at the age of forty-five passed into spirit near the city of Mexico—so he tells of himself.

Our circle is opened and closed with a brief petition, not to the spirits but to God. Much of the time is spent in singing religious songs. We seldom meet when Dona does not exhort us to a higher life. When a remark was dropped in the circle as to the spirit world, the serious voice of Dona was heard through the trumpet:

"The more beautiful and perfect your life is here, the more beautiful it will be there. Every act done here is recorded in the book. This is indeed a beautiful world, but not for all, only for the pure and good. Be not afraid of death, which can only admit you here. Some ask what good there can be in this communion of spirits, even if it be true. Is it not good to be moved to higher and better things? Is it not good to help the poor sinner to come to Christ?"

When we were singing

"Let the bright angels come in,"

Dona said: "What a beautiful thought that angels will come and help you in answer to your faith in God. Therefore have faith until death; faith in Jesus Christ." As we resumed singing, Dona's voice was heard through the trumpet, singing tenor. Again he spoke: "My faith looks up to-day—looks up to God. The fool hath said in his heart, 'There is no God.' How can he say that? The very flowers proclaim it false."

"Jesus, lover of my soul," was now sung with much volume and fervor, when Dona continued, "You do not know how inspiring this is to me. My soul is exalted, and to-night I am in the fifth sphere."

A spirit came and was asked: "Is Sam happy?" The answer was: "No, he isn't; he hasn't got out of the saloon business yet." He had laid down the saw and plane of a carpenter to keep a saloon, and was sorry for it, living and dying. The medium said: "Tell Sam to come, and we will do all we can for him." A little later Sam came, and said: "I thank you; I want you to pray for me." Here is another of the sayings of Dona:

"It is always morning here with the beautiful and bright spirits. And beautiful flowers are always blooming day and night. The light never darkens; everything is joyous and bright. In the morning little children come to be taught, so they can progress better in every way. We have teachers here; teachers in all lines and branches; teachers that will teach the soul; they that will lead it to Christ. In your beautiful world each little wave has its little story to tell as it dances and sparkles in the sunlight. Could you but know what the little birds are saying as they whisper tunes so low, it would surely teach you a lesson; for their melody is so sweet and strong, and they are saying, 'God is good.' O, dear friends, hearken unto me before it is too late. Do all the good you possibly can. If it be only one soul that you save, you are doing your own good work. I say, be not ashamed of this glorious truth. Teach it and proclaim it from mountain to mountain and from pole to pole, and be able within your hearts to say, 'I have done some good in this world of ours.' Dear friends, I hope you will listen to this, and take it into your hearts. Study it, and it will help your onward course, so you can pass within the golden gates, and say: 'Father, I have tried to do the best I could; receive my soul, that soul thou hast given me. Amen.'

"And now may the divine Father watch over you and bless you now and forever. Amen."

I could give you much more from this and other sources in our circle. You will plainly see from these quotations that our guide has not yet gotten beyond Jesus Christ. There is something wrong with him or with some writers in The Progressive Thinker. We are all Spiritualists, but the question is: Has the Devil come to some of us in the guise of an angel of light?

Come over, Bro. Harrington, and go with me to our circle. We will compare notes, and if either of us is in the wake of a fiend, I am sure that we will alike be disposed to give him the bounce.

ENCYCLOPEDIA
...OF...
BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM
...OR...
A CONCORDANCE

To the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism;

Together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible.

BY MOSES HULL.

Much that is in this book appeared in an abridged form in a series of nine full pages of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. These articles were prepared at the call of hundreds of Spiritualists who felt the need of some kind of document for ready reference. They only seemed to whet the appetite for more; hence the publication of this work.

The author, Moses Hull, has written many volumes on Spiritualististic and other themes and each one is full of careful study on the subject chosen. Mr. Hull, in his introduction of this work says:

"Hoping that this book will serve to lead the people out of the wilderness of doubt and despair; and that when Spiritualism shall have wrested the Bible from its 'sanctified' enemies, it will not 'spike' it, but will use it to batter down the walls of Christian superstition and ignorance. I send it out on its errand of enlightenment with the humble prayer that it will prove a divine benediction to every reader."

THE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM contains 385 pages, beautifully printed on good paper, contains a full-page portrait of the author and is handsomely bound in cloth. Every Spiritualist should have this work.

OLD AND NEW PSYCHOLOGY.
BY W. J. COLVILLE.

Reports of twenty-four distinct lectures, recently delivered in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Philadelphia and other prominent cities of the United States, have contributed the basis of this volume.

The chief aim throughout the volume has been to arouse increased interest in the workable possibilities of a theory of human nature, thoroughly optimistic and at the same time, profoundly ethical. As several chapters are devoted to improved methods of education, the writer confidently expects that many parents, teachers and others who have charge of the young, or who are called upon to exercise supervision over the morally weak and mentally afflicted, will derive some help from the doctrines herewith promulgated.

Longley's Beautiful Songs
For Public Meetings and the Home.

VOLUME ONE

Contains the following songs with music:
I'm thinking, dear mother, of you. We miss our boys at home. The land of the bye and bye. The good times yet to be. The land beyond the stars. They are waiting at the portal. When the dear ones gather at home. Resting under the daisies. The grand jubilee. My mother's tender eyes. Dear heart come home. Come in some beautiful dream. Where the roses never fade. In heaven we'll know our own.

VOLUME TWO

Contains 15 new and beautiful songs, suited to the home circle, seances, local meetings, mass-meetings, conventions, anniversaries and jubilees. They come prise an excellent variety of poems set to easy harmony and ought to sell readily. These books are 15cts. each; the two for 30cts. For sale at this office.

POEMS

From Soul to Soul.
BY EMMA ROOD TUTTLE.

THE NATURAL PHYSICIAN.

The Physician can only be the servant or handmaid of Nature in the cure of

In reality we can do nothing; we can only remove the offending cause while

Performs the cure, and therefore we lay it down as a fundamental maxim in medicine that all a Physician can do is to act as a Servant to Nature.

DR. C. E. WATKINS, Ayer, Mass.

Onset, Mass.

Once more the friends of Onset send greetings to the friends of The Progressive Thinker, and we wish to say at the outset that this summer has been the banner summer for many- years. We have been blessed with many excellent speakers. Our Woman's Congress was a great success, and when I tell the friends that we had the pleasure of listening to such speakers as Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Rev. Anna L. Shaw, Mrs. Ursula N. Gestefeld, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, Miss Susie C. Clark, Mrs. Kate R. Stiles and Mrs. Minnie M. Soule, you will not wonder that the congress was a cussess. We have also been privileged to listen to two very fine lectures by Rev. B. F. Austin, D. D. He aroused the friends and did us all good. Miss Susie C. Clark, of Cambridge, gave a beautiful lecture on Spiritual Altitude. This was a very uplifting lecture and made us all better for having listened to the same.

Mr. Harrison D. Barrett has given us two or three grand lectures, and he was received with hearty enthusiasm upon all occasions.

Mr. F. A. Wiggin has been doing good work as a test medium, he has also given good lectures. He will be the platform worker for the remainder of the camp.

The weather all through the season has been all that could be desired. The "Martha's Vineyard" has brought large excursions every Sunday from New Bedford, and excursions have gone out from here once a week, upon a long trip; this gives the visitors of Onset an opportunity to visit the points of interest along the Bay. The "Genevieve" takes trips daily, and when the moon is full, takes moonlight sails down the Bay, and one must take a trip to appreciate. Words cannot express the beauty of the sail.

The associations that have had days at the camp have all had successful meetings and all feel deeply grateful to the Onset Bay Camp-meeting Company for the courtesies extended.

Well, we all send a breath of our cool breeze to the friends at Chicago, and hope next year they can and will be able to visit Onset and breathe for themselves the health-giving air of Onset. HATCH.

Lake Brady, O.

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley has been the attraction at Lake Brady for several days. Though a fine, forcible speaker, she claims to have had no instruction but what has been given to her by the spirit world. Her first disembodied instructor was an Indian chief, who, she said, raised her from a bed of sickness where she had lain fourteen months, and having entranced her under his hypnotic influence, she awoke as from sleep and found herself well. But this spirit hypnotist would still continue to exercise his power over her until one day she awoke from a somnambulic sleep and found herself standing at her own door in her bare feet with a shoe and stocking under each arm. She was told she had traversed the streets of the city where she then lived, in her bare feet. The object of this was to give greater strength and power of endurance and to bring her close to nature. Mrs. Cooley came a stranger to the grounds, but during the few days of her stay, gave nearly a hundred messages and tests, not one of which failed to be either fully or partly recognized.

A representation of the district school in miniature was given last evening by the children of the lyceum, under the management of Mrs. McCaslin. In costume and manners, the children lived over again, the characters of their great grand parents. There was a large audience and everybody enjoyed the exhibition.

A preliminary meeting of the Lake Brady Association was held Saturday. There was almost a full attendance of the membership. A number of the by-laws in the constitution were changed by vote, and some elections were made on the board of trustees.

The usual excursions from Cleveland, Canton and elsewhere came to the camp to-day.

Mrs. M. McCaslin, of Cleveland, and E. W. Sprague, of Jamestown, N. Y., were the speakers. Mrs. McCaslin spoke on the Religion of Humanity, drawing an analogy between various systems of religion of the past and present, showing them to be based on the one principle of truth.

E. W. Sprague's address was in answer to the questions, Are the dead alive? Can they return to us, and what good will it do? He cited many incidents regarding spirit communion and claimed that the spirit world was ready to reveal new truths for the benefit of humanity.

Salem contributed one of the largest picnics that has been at Lake Brady this season. MRS. M'CASLIN.

OUR PREMIUMS.

There are many Spiritualists who know a good thing when they see it. There are others, however, who do not seem to realize what is going on around them, and therefore miss many chances to enrich their minds and enlarge their understanding. Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World is furnished to our subscribers at less than cost, and should be in every family in the United States, whether Spiritualists or not. Volumes 1, 2 and 3 constitute a wonderful magazine of thought on Death in its multifarious phases; in fact you can not find in all the libraries of the world as valuable information in regard to Death as you will have presented to you in these three volumes. They are nicely printed, neatly and substantially bound, and are an ornament to any library. Volume 3 is furnished at 25 cents, much less than the actual cost to us, and the three volumes, when ordered in connection with a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, only cost $1.10. The aggregate cost of the three books to the trade is $4.50. At this price, these three books ought to be in every Spiritualist family.

The Progressive Thinker is the first Spiritualist paper to inaugurate the Divine Plan—a portion of the profits of the office returning to subscribers in valuable books.

VOLUMES 1, 2 and 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Art Magic, Ghost Land, The Next World Interviewed, and the Occult Life of Jesus (including the Hull-Covert Debate) constitute our premium list. Those seven books have been on sale, costing the buyer in the aggregate, $10.75. We, after paying the postage and expense of mailing, realize only $1.50 for the seven—far less than cost to us. We desire to form the nucleus of a library in every Spiritualist home, hence this remarkable offer. By subscribing for The Progressive Thinker, you then have the privilege of purchasing these books at the premium prices. See terms on another page.

BOOK REVIEW.

The Singer Complete Mandolin Method is submitted to the musical public as a work embodying the following important and unique features:

It teaches the art of mandolin playing.

It inculcates a high standard of taste and execution.

Its lessons are perfectly graded, beautiful, and of permanent musical worth.

It gives guiding rules for the technique of the right as well as the left hand.

The following are some of the valuable features of the work:

1. All about tuning.
2. About the true tremolo and how to obtain it.
3. The meaning of the down and up stroke.
4. The art of sight reading and memorizing.
5. The scales systematically treated.
6. Syncopation — Grace notes — The trill.
7. Signs and repeats used in orchestra music.
8. Lessons in double playing.
9. A thorough knowledge of shifting.

It is only necessary to examine the book thoroughly in order to verify all of the foregoing statements. Sold by the Sherman Publishing House, 702 Washington Boulevard, Chicago. Price $1.50 net.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, near Fargo, N. D., on August 12, 1900, William J., son of F. and Cornelia Hanson, aged 21 years, 8 months and 5 days. He was in the Philippines during the late war; was much beloved by his companions, and will be sadly missed. COR.

Passed to spirit life, August 18, at Coon Rapids, Iowa, at the age of 65 years, Mrs. L. A. Caswell, an old-time Spiritualist. She had been a reader of The Progressive Thinker for many years. She leaves a husband and several children to mourn her departure, some of whom were present. Funeral conducted at the home, August 20, by Hev. Henry Hepburn. X.

James H. Dennis, a brother of J. W. Dennis, of Buffalo, N. Y., passed to spirit life, from St. Louis, at the age of 71 years. He was one of the old-time Spiritualists, and a true one. His body was cremated in accord with his last request. J. W. DENNIS.

THOUSANDS CURED!

Marvelous Has Been the Success of This Well-Known Healer in Curing Chronic and Obstinate Cases.

J. M. PEEBLES, A. M., M. D., PH.D.

If Sick Read His Liberal Offer, Then Consult Him and Be Healed.

Half a century spent in successfully treating chronic diseases and the unsolicited testimonials from thousands of those whom he has cured, after the best local physicians had failed to give permanent relief, have gained for DR. J. M. PEEBLES a reputation that extends from ocean to ocean, as the most successful practitioner and healer in AMERICA.

This eminent man, whose life has been devoted to the relief of suffering humanity, is not only a graduate of the best medical colleges of this country, but he has counseled with the best medical men in every country on the globe, and his study and research after knowledge that would enable him to benefit those around him who are suffering from chronic diseases, has taken him three times around the world, and to-day his advice and counsel is sought after not only by chronic invalids who have learned his ability to cure these troubles, but also by many physicians as well.

This great and true Healer was one of the pioneers in the study and investigation of the Psychic Science, one of the greatest and most wonderful of all the sciences, and one which is destined to do more for the sick and suffering than any other agency ever discovered. He has made a study of this subject for over half a century, and is to-day considered by the advanced students of this grand science the greatest Psychic living. You should read his late essay on this subject, entitled, "The Psychic Science in the Art of Healing," which he will send you free of cost with the diagnosis if you desire it. Learn for yourself of this wonderful power which may be developed by all. The learned physician who fully understands the Psychic Science can read the human body like an open book. All Dr. Peebles' diagnosing is done by the aid of this occult science. All that is necessary for you to do to receive a complete and accurate diagnosis of your case is to write the Doctor a plain honest letter in your own handwriting. If you will do this, he will send you a diagnosis free of all cost and special advice concerning your case, also his essay spoken of above and other literature explaining fully his methods of treatment and testimonials showing some of the most remarkable cures ever performed.

Thousands of sufferers are treated by physicians who do not know positively where the seat of trouble lies. They experiment for weeks trying to hit upon the right point. The result is that instead of getting relief, the patient gradually grows worse and the case becomes, as they term it, "chronic," and at last the poor sufferer receives that awful sentence, "Your case is hopeless." With Dr. Peebles there are no hopeless cases. His life has been devoted to conquering disease, and the tens of thousands of lives he has saved, the thousands of so-called invalids he has made healthy men and women, and the countless number of homes in every part of the world his wonderful skill has brightened, are testimonies of his ability to treat all kinds of chronic diseases.

Remember that Dr. Peebles does not cure by Christian Science, Mesmerism, or any other "ism," but uses mild magnetized remedies in connection with his Psychic treatment. "These Psychic treatments," says one of his patients, "seem as if they would almost raise the dead." Every effect has its cause, and if the cause is seen and removed the effect will cease—health will ensue. What is your condition? It is within your power to know. If he can tell you the exact cause of your trouble, he can bring relief and without doubt a cure. This he can do, and it will cost you not one cent to test it. In order to inspire confidence in those who have been given up beyond hope, he will diagnose all cases free of charge. All that is required is for you to write the Doctor an honest letter, giving in your own writing your name, age, sex, and leading symptoms of your case. A letter of advice from this great and true physician, whose life has been devoted to relieving the suffering of his fellow-men, drives back the cloud of despair and comes like a ray of sunshine into the chronic invalid's darkened sky.

Remember that it costs you nothing to write the Doctor and learn your true condition. Write to-day and learn your exact condition, and also ask for literature that will give you a full knowledge of this wonderful method of curing disease.

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Camp-meetings and Other Spiritualistic Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. For sale at this office. Price 10 cents.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth $1. For sale at this office.

"The Mysteries of the Formation of the Earth, the Rising and Sinking of Continents, the Introduction of Man, and His Destiny Revealed in God's Own Way and Time." A work of deep interest, given through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley, by an advanced band of ancient spirits. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"Never-Ending Life Assured by Science." By Daniel Kent Tenney. A strong and conclusive argument from the basis of science. For sale at this office. Price 6 cents.

"The Watseka Wonder." To the student of psychic phenomena, this pamphlet is intensely interesting. It gives detailed accounts of two cases of "double consciousness," namely Mary Lurancy Vennum of Watseka, Ill., and Mary Reynolds of Venango county, Pa. For sale at this office. Price 15 cents.

"The Bridge Between Two Worlds." By Abby A. Judson. This book is dedicated to all earnest souls who desire, by harmonizing their physical and their psychical bodies with universal nature and their souls with the higher intelligences, to come into closer connection with the purer realms of the spirit world. It is written in the sweet spiritual tone that characterizes all of Miss Judson's literary works. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 75 cents. For sale at this office.

"Principles of Light and Color." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A truly great work of a master mind, and one whom Spiritualists should delight to honor. The result of years of deep thought and patient research into Nature's finer forces are here gathered and made amenable to the well-being of humanity. Medical men especially, and scientists, general readers and students of occult forces will find instruction of great value and interest. A large, four-pound book, strongly bound, and containing beautiful illustrative plates. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $5. It is a wonderful work and you will be delighted with it.

CLUBS!

CLUBS CLUBS

We want ten thousand clubs formed in every part of the United States, for which we present inducements never before offered by any Spiritualist paper. These clubs must consist of ten subscribers, and each one will get Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death; or if they would prefer it, they can have the Next World Interviewed. They can have their choice of the two. Each subscriber in order to avail himself of this offer must pay $1.15. The fifteen cents is to pay expense of postage and mailing, and the books sent out are practically a gift. They are not cheap affairs; they are nicely and substantially bound in cloth, neatly printed in clear type and are ornaments to any center table. The contents are indeed valuable, such as every Spiritualist family should have. The aggregate price of these two books to the trade is $2.75. To each of our club subscribers one of these books is a gift, and when they receive the one of their choice they will be delighted with it, and will wonder how we can afford to do so much for them. The one who gets up the club will be entitled to The Progressive Thinker for one year, and Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, and also the Next World Interviewed. He will not only get The Progressive Thinker for one year, but both books. He gets what is equivalent to $3.75 for his trouble. There should be no difficulty whatever in getting up hundreds of clubs.

Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World will not only interest Spiritualists, but church members will be attracted to it. The Rev. M. J. Savage, a leading liberal divine of New York, leads off with several of his masterly productions, treating Death from an advanced standpoint. He is followed by leading Spiritualists who treat of Death in a philosophical and fascinating manner.

The Next World Interviewed is also a very excellent work. The plates of this book were donated to the office of The Progressive Thinker by Henry J. Horn. It consists of communications from the spirit side of life from leading minds there. Fifty-five communications are given by prominent personages, among them Prince Albert, Harriet Martineau, Judge Edmonds, Horace Greeley, Lord Lytton, Fanny Fern, Dr. Livingstone and the Czar of Russia.

This is a work of great value, written by one of the keenest, most powerful and most truly religious minds of the day. It is particularly a work which should be put into the hands of those who have freed themselves from the dogmas of orthodoxy and from the dogmas of materialistic science, for it will strengthen the conviction of the free mind that mind and senses are not the whole of life.

The chapters reveal a new method in psychic and spiritual research. They show vivid glimpses of a stupendous moral cosmos that will supercede moral confusion; that only verifiable tenets can survive, and the childhood period of faith and fancy will be superseded by knowledge and facts. "The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books combined at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 462 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

is a careful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its moral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, and expressed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRAST

consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend Spiritualism, or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.

A Compendium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1, New White Cross Literature.

BY AUGUSTA W. FLETCHER, M. D.

In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well-handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. It will prove a fine addition to any Spiritualist's library, and a most excellent book for any one seeking information concerning Spiritualism and its teachings.

Discovery of a Lost Trail

BY CHARLES B. NEWCOMB,

Author of "All's Right with the World." Cloth 270 pages. Mr. Newcomb made a distinct success with "All's Right with the World," which continues in the front rank of the Metaphysical books that are now so popular. The great number who have been cheered and strengthened by him will welcome another book by this wise teacher whose words of help are doing so much to make the world better by making men and women better able to understand and enjoy it.

"Discovery of a Lost Trail"

is a simple study of that strange and beautiful thing called life, but grand in its scholarly simplicity. It will be in demand by many who have not previously read metaphysical writings. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

The Soul of Things;

WHERE AM I? IN HEAVEN OR IN HELL?

By the Spirit of Robert G. Ingersoll. Through the Lips of Cora L. V. Richmond, at Cassadaga Camp, Aug. 5, 1900.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—I have no human form of my own; I have no lips of earthly life with which to address you.

I did not know when I last stood in your midst that I would be a living spirit to-day.

When the change came that set my soul free from the thralldom of earth, I had no knowledge of that which was to come. I say, I had no knowledge. Within every human mind there is born the impulse of hope; in every human mind the aspirations to futurity. I had received no evidence, even in your sylvan retreat here, of that which would convince me beyond all doubt of a future individual existence.

You will bear me testimony, Mr. Chairman and friends, that I never doubted your honesty. I believed that you thought that you had evidence. But a mind used to much careful analysis; a mind conscious of the fallibility of the human senses and human judgment, could but think that much of that which was supposed to be evidence of a future life was in reality but the happy conception of faith. But I am here to confess my mistakes as a spirit who is now aware of living, who is not willing to be considered dead, who does not wish to be mentioned in the past tense, and who, with your permission, will describe to you where he is.

I am a conscious, living intelligence, a thinking, active being, no longer bound by the narrow limitations of time and sense, and only tethered by my own lack of knowledge.

None of my theological friends have ventured to send me to the theological heaven, and I am not in the theological heaven. No angels, as far as I know, of the theological kind, received me when I passed from earth; no one ushered me into a kingdom of transcendent beauty and greatness which was separated from all the rest of the realms of space; no walls rose up; no gates opened to receive me guarded by the ancient benefactor of those who are saved; Saint Peter has not welcomed me, that I am aware of. If he did, he stood among those multitudes of spirits that I have seen, and he wears no label, and he has not refused to admit me into the place over which he has (it is said) guardianship. No harp has been presented and no crown. I saw no walls that shut out the majority of the human race; no alabaster throne, on which a fearful, judging God is enthroned, have I seen. I have passed through no vast spaces. I have not entered into the theological heaven that shuts you out and the majority of my friends. I have not smiled down from parapets and towers made of precious stones, nor from those streets of gold, nor from the midst of those fountains flowing with milk and honey, upon souls in torment and torture. I have not been glad that I was one of the saints to be saved and that most of my friends were to be lost. No such heaven has received me.

Notwithstanding a few of the utterances of my theological friends, that have been wafted to my consciousness in spirit life, I have seen no hell. No yawning abyss opens to receive my spirit; no flames of torture dart up from an abyss still more terrible to engulf and enfold me. No personal Satan, whether described in Milton's "Paradise Lost" or in the figurative language of the Bible, has come to mock and torment me, nor one among the general throng of spirits to remind me of my sorrow, my condition, and ready to torment me further on. I entered no shadowy, cloudy region of flame and torture. I did not see demons lurking everywhere for those who are disenthralled for earth, to swallow them up in the shadows of eternal torment.

Ah, my friends! I have passed the boundary of death, and I have tested all that death can do. I was not afraid, because the mind becomes prepared by inward retrospection for the change that must inevitably come. I did not have much hope, but I was most intensely anxious until the last moment of my mortal life to study the change that was coming to me. I felt that it was coming, though I did not tell my family and friends. So when it finally came I wished to watch every emotion, every pulsation, every throbbing thought before the mind sunk away into that forgetfulness, which I thought might be the Lethean stream from which I would never awaken.

To my great surprise, with the shock that carried me off I felt the gateways of my being unloosen, and I felt as I have sometimes felt when watching the dawn, when Aurora, with her attendant beams, glides up the heavens and one by one unbars the gateways of the dawn for Phoebus, the god of day. You have seen with what splendor these gateways swing open and the rays of light, first reluctantly, then more consciously and more aware, rush in through all the avenues of existence. You have seen the leaves tremble, you have seen the lake grow silvery gray, and golden, and crimson beneath the flush of dawn, and you have almost heard the sliding of the bars of light that swing the gates open to receive the day-god. I felt innumerable beings, throngs of messengers, sliding back the bolts and bars of my material consciousness, and opening up avenues of which I was unaware. Almost instantly it seemed to me millions of fairy fingers touched my recollections and my consciousness in ways that had been well nigh forgotten; great and wonderful depths and promontories of thoughts and feelings came throbbing through my brain and heart like the tides that well up when the ocean yields up its mighty treasures. I felt myself growing more and more conscious, more and more aware; more and more there were all the recollections and memories that had long perished: the imaginations of early youth and later manhood. Those wonderful imaginings with which our lives are crowded, and that make up in reality the immortal things that we are.

Oh, you remember I believed in imagination! I thought it lent wings and power to every human faculty. I believed that it should be cultivated in the minds of children until poetry and philosophy should go hand in hand. But I never dreamed that that wonderful gift of Imagination lies close to Intuition; that it really opens the gateways of immortality to your poets, seers and philosophers.

I can understand now how the immortal Shakespeare learned the wisdom of life and his hints of that which is to come. I can understand now how the poets of antiquity reveled in this knowledge of the higher life, through that heaven-born gift of imagination. Then and there, in that supreme moment of the mighty change, I was glad that my imagination had not been sealed. Glad, Mr. Chairman, that in the midst of the treadmill of time, of the dull realities of human existence, of human law and law-making that there was a realm in my nature that had drawn close to the immortal realm and through which I had passed with fairies and blessed beings, creatures of those thoughts that are set free from the trammels of time and of the senses.

Now when the great hand of this added life, with all its messengers, had set free the thoughts that were teeming and pulsing in my brain, when every attribute seemed to kindle a resplendent glow, when near and far trooping messengers came born of the higher life, I found that I had fashioned them, and instead of being creatures of the imagination, poetic images that I had conjured up in my flights of fancy, they were living realities; they were born of the affections of the past, they were those affections that had been folded away in the chambers of the spirit, whose memories, laden with lavender and with sweetest gifts, had been placed among the things that were. All these came, as if summoned by the mighty presence of this wonderful change, to bid me welcome to myself; welcome to every avenue of my being, that until then had been closed and fettered; welcome to the great store-house of thought and aspiration, that had sometimes been neglected; welcome to the hopes and prophecies that—some of them—had been abortive on the earth, or fallen, like the blossoms, or like seeds, on unfruitful soil.

Oh! I could stand at this hour for many days of mortal time and tell you of the infinite rapture of death; of that which you and I and all human beings have dreaded and feared the most of all things. I could stand here for hours, and days, and weeks, and declare to you that, not human birth, when the babe gazes for the first time into the mother's eyes when she bends with all absorbing and grateful love above that little form, when the babe realizes for the first time the infinity of the love that is in the mother's eyes, not that compares with the great rapture of death; not human love when the heart hath found its chosen mate and life opens with all its beauty like a new-born bower of paradise; not human love when two lives are linked together in perfect happiness and labor and suffer together, can compare with the great rapture of being caught into the arms of this eternal mother Death.

Oh! I have stood (as you all have stood) when in human life over the remains of the dearest and the best; I have seen their silent lips close in the last sleep, their faces and forms chiseled and white, as if by some enchanted sculptor, and I have yearned; as you have yearned, and I have asked; as you have asked, and I have thought; as you have thought, and I have sobbed; as you have sobbed over the great relentlessness of this seeming foe of human life; but I have lately stood in spirit where my own loved ones were weeping, where the silence, and the gloom, and the stillness shut out all possible communion, where they could not follow, where they did not understand, where the dear hearts were clutched in the awful agony of this separation, and yet in the midst of that I have never experienced so great a rapture as that which came to me because of death, the surpassing freedom of the consciousness that thought is eternal; that not one of these fairy children of the brain would be lost; that not one of these hopes and imaginings for human life would be destroyed; that not one of all those whom I had loved was missing in this goodly company that gathered to receive me.

Was I dreaming? Was it a delirium that would soon pass? Was this a great ecstasy that preceded the final dissolution and end? Nay. For there was my body clothed for sepulture, for such disposition as had been my wish and theirs who loved me. It was there. But oh! what was that compared to this? The eyes could not see; the lips could not speak; the hands could not move in response to all the endearing words that were uttered. But I was there; and after the great first flash of the awakening, after the great first consciousness of being free, of this which had come to me, of a new birth, and a new awareness of what that birth meant, there came a change: Then I, too, was immersed for a time in grief. A sudden change came over me, a sudden recollection that they did not know me, a sudden consciousness that those whom I had loved could not see me, nor hear me, nor speak to me, nor be aware of my existence. I moved among them a being unknown. The awful barrier of the great human grief, the one inevitable sequence of human blindness to spiritual presences, had separated me from them and them from me. For the instant I would have gone back into that habitation of clay; for the instant I would have taken up the breath and burden of human life again. Oh! there have been those who have come back from the border land of the spirit realm and told the story of their experiences to their friends, and physicians, and men of science, and men of learning have heard them. Then I said: "Oh! it is but the imaginings of a poor, weak and sickly brain." I uttered that sentence, and bestowed it upon others, as others have bestowed it upon you.

At this hour I take upon myself all the blame that I deserve for laughing at such as had knowledge of the future life; for disputing the evidence that came to minds as capable of judging as myself; for helping to seal the doorways between human consciousness and that which shall come after death. I take back the boasted sentence of my proud agnostic mind, "One world at a time is enough for me."

I ask you to forgive me; for there is nothing that can come into human life, there is no knowledge of love, of poesy or science, nothing that can uplift and strengthen the infirm, the weak, the downtrodden, and those who are prone to error, like the consciousness of this continued life. I may repeat that sentence by and by: "one world at a time is enough for me," but it must mean all the world, not a part of it; the entirety of existence, not its mere primary department; it must be all of that which is within, around, beneath and above as well as that which is in the conscious human sentient being and frame that you now possess. I would give all the possibilities of many, many years and ages of my spirit's existence if I could unsay any words that have influenced any in human life to disbelieve in the evidence of the future existence.

Take my message for what it is worth, for it comes from the great heart-throbs of that recollection that finds itself in possession of its life, of its weaknesses, of whatever strength it had, of all its faculties, of its great possibilities, So if at this hour I could wipe away the doubts and substitute the distinct inquiry that leads to knowledge, I would do it. I would not substitute faith, blind faith, any more than when I stood here four years ago; I would not substitute credulity, blind credulity, any more than I would then. But I would substitute that attitude of mind that is willing to receive evidence.

I was offered evidence while here. I would not take it. I was met with a fraternal spirit that proposed to lead me to a line of investigation that would give me evidence. I did not accept it. Let no one say that I stultified my convictions; for I did not. But I was afraid to have convictions. If I had convictions, would I not be obliged to speak them? If they came to me as they have come to you, and you, and you, where would be the citadel of that boasted reason and intelligence which I had set up to distinguish between dark, false superstition, and the reasoning faculties of the human mind? But, oh! without knowing it I did shut out the evidence, I did close my mind to the receiving of testimony. I wished to stand free and untrammeled before the gateways of human life that I might help to destroy error and superstition. I saw those master-minds who had aided in destroying superstition, and I did wish to continue the onslaught against the theological errors which I believed held the world enthralled.

But oh! I saw not that which had opened to you, that vast plain of thought into which I did not enter. With all the possibilities of this grand truth, the light, the knowledge of life that has come to you (much that you accept or that is offered to you is not true). But rather than that your knowledge should be destroyed, I would leave it that the healthful growth may take the place of that which is unhealthful. I will not tear away the sacred vine and the precious fruitage of immortal life, if I must do so in order to take away the tares. You are intelligent, you understand, you know that there is the shadow as well as the light in all human life. But preserve this truth as Christians would the Bible; hold high, as they would, the sacred truth of Olivet, for such it is evermore; accept the allegorical language of that which comes to you as manifesting the knowledge of spirit existence.

Now where am I? In a realm so vast that I have seen, as yet, no boundary lines; a realm that stretches far and far away in all directions, peopled with lives, some of whom I have known on earth, some of whom I have known in dreams and visions, some of whom are the heroes of my imaginings, some of whom have been my familiar companions in the works of poets, authors and dreamers of mankind. Where am I? No limited space enchains me, no walls encompass me around about, no dim labyrinths of terror mock me, no limit appears before my vision. I feed upon the nectar and ambrosia of the gods. But they are not gods of the heathen, or of Christian theologies; they are the dear ones of my household, the loved companions of my thoughts; those who, like me, have passed from the trammels of time and sense; and, like unto me, are seeking to tell you and teach you of their existence.

Have I visited other worlds? I know not. For the present I am here; I bask in the sunshine of that light that comes from within and above. I see around me on earth and in spirit thousands of spiritual beings who, like myself, are seeking to solve the problems of life. I offer you my congratulations that here is an open gateway, where there are no powers of fear, superstition and prejudice to separate you from that realm unseen. See to it that there are no barriers erected; see to it that this investigation is pursued in a clear and honorable manner; see to it that the pathway which the investigator would travel is made clear and plain; and, above all things, friends, at this hour, in this moment of my great secondary joy, when the first sadness and sorrow for the separation because of those I loved has been passed, let me enjoin upon you not to build these walls of sorrow between you and your loved ones. Think of it! Out in the world they say, "he has gone from human speech." Often prompted by human errors of speech, you say, "he was with us four years ago." How many days, and hours, and moments, through how many messages and impressions he has been with you since, you take little note of. Alas! too often the dear ones fold the memory away as carefully and sacredly as a lock of hair, or a keepsake, a sacred treasure-trove at the altar of love, and say, "how good he was." There is no "was." It is: life is eternal, it is now, it is endless, it is indestructible, it is continuing to unfold, it will be the bearing of the message unto all eternity. I that spoke to you then, I that am speaking to you now, I that will speak many more times through as many human lives as I can inspire, and approach as many brains as are amenable to my influence. I will speak and think thoughts as the product of this realm of intelligence forever.

What is the motive power I employ? I have no need for the torturous steam engine, or for the swift lightning stroke to bear my message. Thought itself is my message-bearer. I have built my mansions or palaces of thought. I have made them of such of my deeds as were worthy to be preserved in the kingdom of life. I make no boast of this. They are mine. If they are shadowed I am permitted to wipe out the shadow. If I have unwittingly pained any one I can remedy that by aiding that one. If I have done injustice to my fellow-man through ignorance, I can gain knowledge and aid him.

In the great interests of human life I take part still; but it is the interest that leads thoughtward and soulward, not mammon-ward, not even nation-ward. I have no nation, I am a spirit, I live with all souls that are like unto me, I am fraternal with them. The boundaries or limits of human habitations, human races and human conditions affect me not, excepting as my loved ones are there. I believe in Humanity, in the great dominant, living, absorbing purpose of human life. I believe in the spirit of humanity. I have done with earth and earthly measures and devices. I know nothing about finance or war. I see nothing but shadow in the direction where the war clouds tend. I plead with you for the higher and nobler condition, I plead with you for the light that comes from poetry and philosophy and the living message of absolute life. Teach the people how to live, teach them the great knowledge of life.

May I bear my torch as one of the humble instruments in this great truth; as one who has seen no God face to face, no Satan starting out from any terrible region of bondage; but has seen the godlike human souls and those who have passed onward and upward into higher and more divine beatitudes. These I have seen and I must follow, and you must follow.

Oh, the great, surging, incoming tide of Life! It bears you upon mighty billows; it woos and beckons you by its crested arms and shining waves; it is the one eternal light and truth that must sanctify human love, must upbuild human aspiration, that must crown human hopes, that must set mankind free from the thralldom of error, and from the thralldom of the dust!

Knowledge and truth are offered to me. I stretch out my mental pinions for flights. If I falter it is from lack of knowledge. I stretch out my heart to include the world; if I falter it is from lack of loving kindness.

Oh, ye friends! unto whom this knowledge is given at this hour, I pray you turn with me to these immortal heights of light and promise, and thought. No heaven of glory, no fair region of pictured saints, no delightful paradise appealing to the senses can compare with this realm of supernal and perfect thought and truth. We are borne on its mighty pinions; we are not afraid of its great intuition; we are plumed for the flight into its eternal azure spaces of thought and truth. Every word that drops from the messengers of spirit life healing the broken-hearted, giving balm to the afflicted mind and breathing unto the mother and father, the husband and child the knowledge of this life, is a word that is sanctified and sacred from the altar of heaven.

Talk about sacred altars; there are none, excepting the altars of love; human love which uplifts humanity from the dull bondage of the senses and makes human lives worthy to be lived. Divine love, which cometh from the human soul when crowned with immortality, and bathed in the living splendor of that morning which shall never be shadowed, which shall never go down to the evening tide of sorrow, but shall forever and forever bear you on and on until the gateways of eternity open more and more refulgently, and then on and on and on forevermore!

"That all facts yet known to man, indicate that there is an external or an internal cause of all existences, by the fact of their existence; that this all-pervading cause of motion and change in the Universe, is that Incomprehensible Power which the nations of the world have called God, Jehovah, Lord, etc., etc.; but that the facts are yet unknown to man which define what that hitherto Incomprehensible Power is."

"From facts which no experienced and unprejudiced mind will deny, it appears to our senses, that there is an unceasing composition, decomposition, and recomposition, always in progress upon the earth; and we naturally infer, without, however, having more than plausible conjecture to guide our supposition, that a similar process obtains throughout the universe.

"This knowledge, limited as it is, has been derived by very slow degrees, through ages of very wild imaginations, and most random conjectures.

"Upon all subjects connected with universal causes, effects and operations, the human faculties have been hitherto unable to acquire such knowledge of facts as can give any satisfactory results to their most extended investigations. The wisest course, therefore, for man to adopt, is at once to admit the extent of his ignorance as to the cause of all things, and its qualities or motives, or intentions; if, indeed, motives and intentions, as they are found to exist in human nature, exist in such cause. By admitting our ignorance, the ground is cleared from the wild and random imagination of our poor deluded ancestors, before they had been trained to observe and carefully to investigate facts. And if we are now to make any progress in real knowledge, we must abandon all imaginations unsupported by facts, and especially all those which are opposed to facts unknown to change during the past history of our race.

"When the wild conjectures and now evident prejudices, derived from the false education of our more remote as well as immediate ancestors, can be abandoned, and the mind left free to make the most of the best authenticated facts, obtained through the past period of human existence, the probability, even amounting to the approach of certainty, appears to be:

"1st. That the Universe, the material it contains, and the Power, whence proceed motion, life, and knowledge—composition, decomposition, and recomposition, with all the action within the Universe (if the term within can be applied to that which can have no bounds) are Eternal, or could not have had a commencement, and can have no termination.

"2d. That the Universe, these materials, this Power, how these actions arise, are continued, and their future results, are all alike hidden from the human faculties; and that, until new facts shall be discovered, it is no more than an amusing exercise of those faculties to imagine or conjecture, or to predicate anything respecting either the one or the other.

"3d. That for any human beings to pretend to know, correctly, anything respecting the Universe, the materials in contains, the Power that directs and controls them, the will, intention, motives, objects, or qualities of that Power, or why this apparent eternal composition, decomposition, and recomposition, proceed, is a proof of their utter ignorance of these matters, respecting which they have been made to become insane or hypocrites.

"4th. That this insanity and hypocrisy have created miseries to the past generations of men, beyond all human calculation and conception, and that at this day they are the only obstacles to the progress of knowledge, to the advance of all the superior qualities of humanity, to the attainment by all individuals of high virtues, and to the progressive happiness of our race.

"5th. That this gross insanity and hypocrisy, which our ancestors have unwittingly transmitted to the present generation, must, by some means or other, be stayed and overcome, or there will be no chance for improvement and happiness to man.

"Experiencing this misery, and now plainly perceiving the immediate cause of it, the question for the consideration of all the nations of the world now is: How is this gross insanity and hypocrisy to be stayed and overcome with the least evil to those poor creatures thus made insane or hypocrites? Or, how can the change from insanity and hypocrisy, which have been made so general, be effected in the shortest period, with the least evil to all nations and people?

"Surely, by stating in clear and distinct, yet in mild terms, the whole truth, as far as it is known, upon these matters; and by avoiding all personal blame to the poor deceived individuals who have been, by the laws of their nations, compelled to become insane or hypocrites upon these subjects—subjects so far beyond their capacity to comprehend.

"It is with this view that we give the simple statement which appears at the head of this chapter: 'That all facts yet known to man indicate that there is an external or an internal cause for all existences, by the fact of their existence; that this all-pervading cause of motion and change in the universe, is that Incomprehensible Power which the nations of the world call by some name which they hold in reverence, and to which all the actions of the universe are referred."

Concerning Animals in Spirit Visions.

It is of great significance that we cannot agree regarding the persistence of animal life other than human in the spiritual realms. One declares there are none there; another affirms that all kinds survive. Pure truth is often found between extremes and we are not compelled to accept either statement. I am going to try walking on eggs without breaking any, that is discuss the question without committing myself.

One says if the horse survives, then snakes and tigers, lice and bed-bugs must also torment the saints. The satirical or the reductio ad absurdum argument is useless in such a case. The assumption that if a horse lives the louse must also be saved, is idle. Even in this sphere the tendency to eliminate the ugly and vicious without killing off the gentle and beautiful is certain. In some communities we find no bedbugs nor lice, and hardly enough fleas to allow one for each inhabitant, while the more worthy animals increase. To be a little funny on the other side of the question, one might say if St. Patrick alone drove the "snakes and frogs out of the bogs," as we read in the book of the Chronicles of Ireland, surely with the help of a few more saints he could drive the bedbugs out of Paradise without disturbing the nightingales, seeing that he spared the goats and meadow-larks to our "ancestors."

Again, one tells of Mother Nature loving all forms and bestowing as much care on the fever germ as on the human baby. Speaking for myself and the few like me, I would say that if Mother Nature loves me she will not insist upon tormenting me with noxious insects, but will extract their stings and evolute them into more beautiful forms, or give them a reservation of their own. But this talk about Mother Nature, while very beautiful in its place, like Santa Claus, is in the way regarding the scientific solution of any problem, and recalls the rhyme,

"The wadly bird sat on the jingo tree,
A dying bird, ah me! ah me!
"Ah me! ah me! it's so absurd.
There's no such thing as the wadly bird.

"It's so absurd, ah me! ah me!
There's no such thing as the jingo tree."

Neither is there any such person as Mother Nature, and on this plane man by virtue of his superior intelligence holds the balance of power and decides what forms of animal life shall exist with him, and there is no sign of reproach from nature when he determines that the bear and the tiger, so well equipped to fight for life, shall be eliminated, and the defenseless lamb shall survive.

It cannot be ridiculous to allow animal forms to exist, if we allow vegetable forms to do so, and if there be any thing substantial at all in spiritual realms we may be permitted to assume that it will manifest in various forms. But in any case we cannot admit the testimony of the delirious. We are told that the vision of the drunkard is real, and that he does in fact see the reptiles he describes. He also sees with equal vividness devils with hoofs and horns dance gleefully as they pitchfork babies into the brimstone furnace, and I submit that his evidence be excluded. It has been customary for seers to behold visions comparable to those of the drunkard, as dragons with seven heads and ten horns, but the competent seer knew them to be symbolical pictures and at his best would "ask the angel what these things mean." For some time the dream of a snake biting me when in a magnetic sleep indicates sickness, yet I never suppose that a snake from the spirit world comes here to bite me.

The important feature in connection, and what distinguishes this kind—the prophetic—from the dream of an uncontrolled imagination is that I have no fear when a monstrous serpent sinks its fangs in my side, being too well under control of the warning spirit. The imagination of the drunkard has broken the control of reason and is subject to the will of no intelligent spirit (ordinarily), and he creates subjective images in "astral matter" as a simpleton may chalk on a blackboard pictures of what is neither in the heavens above, in the earth beneath nor in the waters under the earth.

In Chicago I visited the panorama of Gettysburg. Emerging from a dark passage I suddenly beheld the picture so pect that I could believe for a little that it was reality. This is a good illustration of subjective spirit visions at their best. Under ideal conditions the spirit control may paint a true reflection of his spirit home, but it is not the Summerland, and the conditions and development of the sensitive and ideal rapport is rare. So far the conditions have been good enough to exclude the devils and elementaries that destroyed previous spiritual movements, but if a belief in all these monsters becomes general, mediums developing under that faith all over the land will begin to see them. If we adandon reason so far as to acknowledge the dream of the delirious from rum or opium (generally) we open the gates to every delusion, and mediumship is worth less.

WHAT DOES SPIRITUALISM INCLUDE, AND WHAT ARE THE DUTIES IT IMPOSES?

By Prof. J. S. LOVELAND, Summerland, California.

NUMBER ONE.

"Ism," as a suffix to any word, means a principle or a system of principles, the character of which is indicated by the word to which the suffix is attached. Buddhism means the principles or doctrines taught by Buddha. Methodism signifies the doctrines taught, and the ecclesiastical system carried out by the Methodist church. No people are entitled to use the suffix ism unless they have some system of doctrines, or principles distinguishing them from other religious or philosophical systems. If the term Spiritualism has any meaning it must include the principles which pertain to spirit substance and entities, if such exist. And it must include all, not a part of those principles.

REASON FOR THE EFFORT.

I propose, in this essay, to give an approximately full definition of Spiritualism, and deduce therefrom the duties resting upon all who assume the title of Spiritualist. The present condition of the Spiritualist movement is a sufficient reason for such an effort. In the early days, such an exposition might not have been so easily made; but fifty years of thought and experience puts us in better condition to perform the much needed work.

During this time, there has been a strong tendency to minimize Spiritualism, and reduce it to the narrow limits and work of a mere sect. Many, who have acquired only a little smattering of the Spiritualist doctrine, are often greatly in earnest to align Spiritualism beside the narrow sectarian churchism of the day. The N. S. A. has unfortunately pursued the course of a mere sectarian organization. Furthermore, the intense selfism of our individualistic, social system has well nigh converted our whole movement into a mass of contending antagonisms, destitute of all sense of oneness or brotherhood.

The Catholic church stood for unity, but Protestantism was the assertion of absolute individualism, and the Abolitionists carried the Protestant idea to the extreme of anarchical come-outerism. Modern Spiritualism was born when abolitionism was most rampant, and not a few of the early Spiritualists were Abolitionists and deeply imbued with its anarchistic teachings. The Protestant idea was carried to its extreme of disorganization, not only as to societary organization, but also to the presentation of any basic principles of truth and action. The individual was supreme authority to himself both as to the perception of truth and his personal conduct. "The God within" was superior to all outside of one's own personality. Hence, it was impossible to secure any statement of principles as a basis of organization and unitary action. There were as many Spiritualisms as there were exponents of the same. And that is substantially the condition at the present time. Every lecturer gives a different definition, and nobody has any authority to correct mistakes, or submit with authority the true position. This Babel of conflicting notions has led to the narrowing down of the pretensions of Spiritualism until the bare fact of spirit communication is made the whole of it. Nothing but phenomena is allowed. This superficial falsehood has been most successfully used to stifle all scientific investigation of the phenomena, and also prevent any true and thorough philosophizing upon the question of unitary action on the part of Spiritualists in the great work of human uplifting. Individual Spiritualists have done something, but as a body they have done nothing—have taken no active stand in reference to great social and world movements. Hence, Spiritualism is despised as a powerless, or hated as a disintegrating influence in social evolution.

The position that the manifestations constitute the essence of Spiritualism renders it impossible to secure anything like unity of purpose or effort in anything beyond the mere holding of seances and phenomenal shows. There is no intellectual or moral impulsion in this to secure consolidated action. And in the popular estimate, Spiritualism stands for no great principle of human relationship or effort. Spiritualists are looked upon as mere believers in ghosts. And until it is conclusively shown that there are world-wide principles in, and underlying this movement, it will fail to modify our social structure or benefit our struggling humanity.

It is one of the oft-repeated boasts of the Spiritualist writers and speakers that their Spiritualism has revolutionized the thought of the church and the world during the last fifty years. That a wonderful change has been wrought during that period none can deny, but, instead of the Spiritual movement being the cause it is very largely the effect of this great change. But for the fact that the change had commenced in the first half of this century, Spiritualism would most likely have been crushed in its very beginning. Universalism, Unitarianism and Abolitionism had permeated the thought of the country, and in the evangelical churches there were thousands on the very brink of heresy. Thousands had witnessed and been staggered by the exhibitions of mesmerism. And the extraordinary discoveries in science and mechanical inventions in the first and middle of this century had given a tremendous impetus to the thought of the people. The Spiritualist movement shared the benefit of these stupendous changes and was an instrument in stimulating still more the newly awakened thoughts, though not the primary or sole cause of it. "The Higher Criticism" was getting in its work on ancient and Biblical literature, and a wide-spread revolt against the old credulity had set in, and has continued down to the present time. It would have done its work if Modern Spiritualism had remained unknown. It was not the author of "The Vestiges of Creation." Neither did it create Comte, Herbert Spencer, Wallace, Lyell, Darwin, Colenso, Kuenen, Davidson, and a host of others who have done infinitely more in changing the general trend of human thought than all the reputed millions of Spiritualists. Indeed, the great mass of radical utterances from the spiritual platform and press were well digested ideas in the minds of the early speakers and writers before the raps at Hydesville. Such men as Brittan, Harris, Finney, Fishbough and A. J. Davis did not learn their lessons in Spiritualist seances. They had developed them before. They had outgrown the doctrines of the churches to which they belonged and were ready for a New Departure.

The true position is this: Humanity had so grown that it had reached that mental status which rendered it possible for a new instauration of philosophic and religious thought. Indeed, it was impossible for such an instauration not to commence, and the Spiritistic advent took advantage of, and accentuated the New Departure. Modesty and honesty demand that we acknowledge the truth as it really is, and not assume positions which intelligent thinkers know to be destitute of any foundation in fact.

Another reason for writing this essay is because of the superstitious notions which prevail so extensively among professed Spiritualists. We have not outgrown the ignorant ideas of the church, and depend upon the aid and teachings from the spirit side of life to tell us what Spiritualism is, and what the doctrines we should accept, and the duties we should perform. But that will not be done. Intelligent spirits will neither tell us what we can find out ourselves, nor do the work which we ourselves can perform. Spirit ignoramuses may attempt to teach us, and we shall have as a result all manner of crude and monstrous notions, from the primacy of St. Peter down to that of Brigham Young or Teed.

Man must master his science and develop his philosophy for himself, or he will never comprehend it or be able to practice it. It is enough if the spirits manifesting suggest to us the material with which to work, and give us some hints of the best methods of using them. Then we must dig out the answers by our own energies. Only in this way can we ever be anything but mere parrots, repeating the sayings of some one else. Hence, in defining Spiritualism, I shall not repeat what any spirit has said, or is supposed to have said on the question. That is the church method—the method of authority. But truth needs no authority but its own statement. If stated clearly all balanced minds will perceive and accept it. And there will be no dispute or argument in the case. No one attempts to prove that twice two are four, or that the whole is equal to the sum of all its parts. The mind so feeble as not to grasp the truth of these propositions would be incapable of comprehending any form of argumentation.

But I am told that people differ in their opinions. They don't see and think alike. To be sure they do, because an opinion is simply the evidence of ignorance. People do not differ in opinion where they possess knowledge. It is only of unknown things, and only to the extent of their ignorance that they disagree. So, in regard to Spiritualism, the disagreements are included in the realm of ignorance, and the most violent disputers are usually the most ignorant, and consider their opinion as good, or a great deal better than another's knowledge. Of course, we ought not to be surprised at this, for centuries knowledge has been degraded and faith or opinion exalted. Eternal salvation is won by faith, and damnation is the penalty for its lack. Hence, it is nothing strange that men, with centuries of heredity back of them, and the persistent teaching that faith is the only recommendation to the Divine favor, and the only door to eternal life, should consider opinion as superior to knowledge; for they have been taught that knowledge puffeth up and contributes nothing to man's salvation and eternal welfare.

The mere acceptance of spirit phenomena does not rectify all these old habits of thought and faith. Does not, at once, lead us from the old habit of opinion forming to the scientific search for positive knowledge. Hence, Spiritualism has come to be very largely a mass of disjointed, contradictory opinions, instead of a careful statement of scientifically demonstrated truths. Even the National Spiritualist Association, at its last meeting, gave science as square a slap in the face as Christianity did in the adoption of the Nicene Creed. Like the Christian church, it proclaimed its belief in an unknowable, undemonstrable, imaginary, incomprehensible idealism, It is as easy and consistent to accept one as the other. Ignorance could go no farther. The retention of that creed will send Spiritualism into contending sects just as creeds have divided the church.

It is, therefore, of the greatest importance that Spiritualism should have a full and correct definition. And especially so, as the creed question will undoubtedly be considered at the next meeting in October. If Spiritualism is nothing, as the N. S. A. has affirmed, but one among the numerous sects, let it be so understood, and then people can adjust themselves accordingly. But, it must clearly state the points of agreement and difference with existing sects, in order to show a reasonable ground for the creation of another sect. Such an attempt would show at once the non-necessity of another sect. When the points of contact and agreement with the older sects are pointed out, the grand question will be, what reason is there for a new sectarian organization? And, so far as the creedalists among the Spiritualists are concerned, there is no more disagreement in opinion with the liberal sects than they differ in opinion among themselves. The creedalists should join the liberal churches instead of forming another. They have nothing better in theory, and nothing half as good in methods of working for the general welfare.

Another reason for writing this essay, is the fact that the most advanced intelligence of to-day submits that all bases of true organiztion and methods of action must rest upon, or be constituted of absolute demonstrations of science. In other words, the scientific method must underlie and support all our systems of action, whether personal or social. Even a system of ethics, not grounded on science, is worthless as a working force for human uplifting. The rule of authority is broken forever, so far as personal commands are concerned. A reason, founded on demonstration, must be given the human mind, in the future, instead of a "Thus saith the Lord," or thus said and did the Fathers. Men are seeing this clearer and clearer every day. The old is passing away, not with a great noise, but surely, and to many entirely unobserved.

To me, Spiritualism is the latest evolution of science, and this culminating fact of the ages must be comprehended and incorporated in the consciousness and organization of the Spiritualists, or what is termed Spiritualism will in a very short time become a ridiculous fiasco, and a lamentable failure as a force for social regeneration. Therefore, it is supremely important that we have a true and full definition of Spiritualism for our own guidance, and for the enlightenment of the general public.

Every thinking being, no matter how limited their field of thought, has and must have something as a basic principle of action. It may be of the vaguest and most flimsy character. It may rest upon the wildest speculations, or the most superstitious faith, but it exists notwithstanding. The various schools of theosophy and mental science are probably capturing more Spiritualists than are being made by the mediums. They submit principles, true or false, and the people are captured. Men will have something more than bare facts. They demand explanation of facts. In other words, the law and tendency of facts.

The Spiritualists may bury their heads in phenomena, as the ostrich does its head in the sand, and when they open their eyes to look around, they will find that the procession of progress has passed on and left them behind. A true Spiritualism, not one of superficial pretense, or of diluted churchism, but one of principle, of scientific demonstration, will take their place and lead the world to victory and harmony.

Principles never die. The people, who ought to proclaim and support them die and pass on, but others will live and embrace the discarded or neglected truths and embody them in human institutions. For these reasons the articles which will follow have been written, to set before the world's thought the real principles of Modern Spiritualism, and to call the attention of Spiritualists to the duties which are necessarily deducible from the basic principles of their profession. Again, as the N. S. A. holds its annual session this coming fall, I am desirous of suggesting the adoption of certain principles of truth and action, which will not be the occasion of fruitless discussion of incomprehensible creeds, but the uniting bonds of a determined and persistent work along the lines of altruistic brotherhood. Standing near the line which separates the seen from the unseen it would be no little satisfaction to think that in fifty years of effort I had done something toward the establishment of the universal principles of brotherhood instead of resulting in the organization of a puny sect with all the narrowness and contentiousness inevitable from all sectarian organization.

A RESUME OF CAMPS.

G. W. Kates Has Pleasant Words.

Having been so busy all of August that I could not write about the excellent camps Mrs. Kates and self have visited, I will now make a brief mention.

The first week was at Maple Dell Camp, Mantua, Ohio. There we found an earnest coterie of workers led by D. M. King. It is a pleasant camp, well conducted, and doing a practical educational work. There is never an idle hour at the camp. Visitors will always find something to interest or instruct. This camp is doing a great practical work in the development of a school system for which purpose they have erected an edifice.

At Grand Ledge, Mich., we found a welcome that served as a soul-exhilarant. We had fairly good audiences here and a large Sunday meeting. This camp is harmonious and full of good cheer. Mrs. Sheets makes all feel at home, and the days glide away in joyful fraternity.

Haslett Park put on a beautiful dress of flowers this year, and gave us good audiences, but like other camps, Sunday was the day for a large crowd. Mrs. Haslett is putting forth much energy to create success and comfort. There we had an effective Memorial Day. But Pioneers' Day brought out the old people with their earnest spirits as an example of devotion for all of us to copy. Good cheer and good results have made this camp a success and a promise for greater results.

At Island Lake we made our initial bow, and found it a splendid locality for a camp. Detroit Spiritualists should take more interest here, for nature has given them a spot of beauty. The improvements are excellent—indeed the hotel is the best at any camp east or west. The lake is the best little sheet of water for bathing, boating and fishing I have seen in the west. Island Lake has every reason to expect support and success. They provide well for meetings, and the camp is kept lively with social interests. People from all the states should visit the Michigan camps. Grand Ledge, Haslett Park and Island Lake are close together and these three camps can be visited in alternation and afford a summer itinerary and healthful resorts that will bring good cheer to the soul and body of any or all who may visit them.

When the friends learn the value of these camps, they will surely attend and enjoy. Here is found rest, health, comfort and culture. G. W. KATES.

Mount Pleasant Park, Ia.

The Mississippi Valley Spiritualists Association has just closed one of the most successful camp-meetings ever held in Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Ia. The utmost good feeling prevailed, and the interest kept up until the last hour. The program as published in the Association's annual announcement was carried out and some very interesting additions were made to it by way of entertainments not given during previous camp seasons.

The lectures and test seances given were never better, the speakers and mediums being Prof. W. F. Peck, Willard J. Hull, Julia Steelman Nichols, Rev. B. F. Austin, Mariah Carpenter, Carrie E. S. Twing and Edgar W. Emerson. Max Hoffman was also here and several times delighted large audiences with his fine tests. Good mediums for materialization, slate-writing and other phases of manifestation were here in numbers.

The musical part of the program was exceptionally fine. The Zumbach Quartette, of St. Paul, Minn., sang its way into all hearts, and made our entertainments exceedingly interesting and of an unusually high character, while the Columbia Band of Clinton, and the Weise Orchestra, both under the able leadership of Prof. Adolf Weise, furnished out-of-door music and dance music such as has not been heard in Mt. Pleasant Park for many years, if ever before.

Miss Flora A. Keyes, of Evanston, Ill., a fine dramatic reader, and instructor in physical culture and dancing, gave her services to make our entertainments interesting, and the general camp life enjoyable, and the Ladies' Independent Union, auxiliary to the M. V. S. A., outdid all former efforts on "L. I. U. Day, Woman's Day, and The Old Maids' Convention.

Brother Will C. Hodge visited camp for a few days, and gave us a ringing speech on L. I. U Day. It is impossible to mention all the good things we enjoyed during the four weeks of camp-meeting.

At the annual business meeting of the Mississippi Valley Spiritualists' Association the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Prof. W. F. Peck, St. Louis; vice-president, Mrs. Emma J. Knowles, Clinton; secretary, Stella A. Fisk, Keokuk; treasurer, Isaac Millisack, Ottumwa, Ia.

The Ladies' Independent Union officers for the coming year are: President, Emma J. Knowles, Clinton, Ia.; first vice-president, Fannie I. Glasser, Maquoketa, Ia.; second vice-president, Rose A. King, Ida Grove, Ia.; secretary, Mollie B. Anderson, Clarksville, Mo.; treasurer, Christine Cooper, Clinton, Ia.

The old board of trustees was re-elected without change. The outlook for next year's camp-meeting is very bright. The M. V. S. A. is in a more prosperous condition than ever before.

Working harmoniously together for gether for the glorious cause of Spiritualism, and the good of humanity generally, we shall make Mt. Pleasant Park a center from which shall radiate truth and love, the drawing power that makes success sure and permanent.

Nature's Joke Spontaneous.

Not long ago, a domestic chanticleer stood upon the ground near a harvesting machine. The chick looked up, saw a good place for his two feet to stand. He made a leap and planted himself fairly on the horizontal bar of the wheel. Then he flapped his wings, stretched his neck and began to crow. His weight on the wheel was enough to turn it. It did turn and let the rooster quietly down on the ground. But the motion of the wheel confused the bird and the crow failed. It died in his pompous throat. It was funny to see how cheap and wilted the rooster looked, puzzled to know what had happened.

SAW SPIRITS.

An Interview with Lily Dale Spirits.

To the Editor:—I thought your many patrons would like to hear from this beautiful camp called Lily Dale. Indeed this is a beautiful place. It seems to me the God of nature designed this place for the purpose it is used for, and as for the weather since I came, it is perfectly delightful—a nice, cool and refreshing breeze blowing from the lake constantly. Now I want to tell you about the wonderful phenomena I have investigated since I came here this last time. This I speak of was done by the Bangs Sisters.

I first purchased three slates. Some time before I left home I bored holes in the four corners of them and tied each corner with twine. I wrote seven names of spirit friends, put them in an envelope, and put in the same envelope seven sheets of blank tablet paper. I sealed it up and tied the sealed envelope up between the slates at my room before going to the Bangs Sisters' place. I took my third slate with me to use after I got there. I then put my third slate on top of the two sealed or tied slates and between this last slate a small piece of cloth about one inch square with a blot of ink on it. I also wrote on a piece of paper a question which I put with the ink pad. I tied the third slate with a strong twine to the other two slates and then tied one end of the twine to the button hole of my coat. I then rested the slates on a table near which I was sitting.

There was but one of the Bangs Sisters in the room at the time and she was not within four feet of the table. I did not wait three minutes before she said: "I see such a person near you," and gave the name, which was one of the names I had in the sealed envelope and slates. She mentioned the names one after the other till she named all that I had sealed up in my envelope, and inside of fifteen minutes three loud raps came on the table at which I was sitting, to signify they were done writing. There was no one near the table but myself during all this time, and she left the room while I untied the slates. I found the envelope just as I had put it and the seal unbroken. I opened the envelope and my blank paper was filled with ink writing, some of it written across the other writing and answers to my questions, and one of the answers gave me a very important clue to a business matter which occurred in Philadelphia about two years ago. The slip of paper I put under the third slate with the ink pad was in the sealed letter when I opened it and answered my questions.

Now I want to tell you of another phenomenon I witnessed, done by the Bangs Sisters, of producing pictures of departed friends in the light before your eyes, both by photograph or without, which you can seal up before going there, which you hold in your hand at the time of getting the picture. You can pick out your own canvas from a large number they have on hand, the picture comes on in from 15 to 30 minutes an exact likeness of the one you hold in your hand, life-sized. They also make life-sized pictures of departed friends who never had a picture taken while on earth. I witnessed both since I came up the last time.

The attendance is much larger than last year. S. J. GIBSON.

FOR a moment stop and consider. The Progressive Thinker is the one original dollar Spiritualist paper. It introduced a new era in the ranks of Spiritualism. Its success financially has been all that could be desired. Notwithstanding the rise in the price of print paper, it has still maintained its status as the only one dollar Spiritualist paper. Not only that, but it introduced the Divine Plan in its business with its subscribers—a portion of the profits of the office returning to them. Just think of the Seven Premium Books being sent out to our subscribers for $2.35. After paying the postage of these seven books, and the expense of mailing them, all that we have left is $1.50. You can readily see that we are furnishing them for less, by far, than the actual cost to us. We do this work in accordance with The Divine Plan, in order to assist in forming the nucleus of a library in every Spiritualist home. Read carefully our premium list, and you will certainly want to become a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker, if not so already, and obtain the books we announce.

Total price to the trade	$10.75
Total price to our subscribers	$ 2.35
The Progressive Thinker one year and the seven premium books	$ 3.35

These seven books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art will be furnished to our subscribers alone for $2.35. But bear in mind that in order to secure these SEVEN valuable premium books for $2.35, the order must be accompanied with a year's subscription for The Progressive Thinker. The paper one year, $1.00; the seven books, $2.35. Total, $3.35.

The aggregate price of these seven books to the trade is $10.75. In order to assist in forming a Spiritual and Occult Library in every Spiritualist's home, these seven valuable books are furnished to our subscribers for $2.35, which is less by far than their actual cost. The authors make no charge for the vast amount of labor bestowed on these works, and which extended over many years. The publisher receives not a single cent for the great expense he was to, hundreds of dollars being paid out in putting them in type, and electrotyping the pages, and making them ready for the printer. That is why you are getting these intensely interesting books for almost nothing. We are only carrying out the Divine Plan, inaugurated only by The Progressive Thinker. There are thousands of Spiritualists who take no Spiritualist paper, and this inducement is offered, in order that they may commence forming at once a Spiritual and Occult Library, and thus keep in line with the advancing procession. The postage on the above books and expense of mailing is about 85 cents, hence you are almost receiving them as an absolute gift.

By taking 85 cents from $2.35, you will find that all we have left us for those seven books is only $1.50.

Postmasters.

We have been swindled out of a large amount of money by postmasters, who knowing a person desires The Progressive Thinker, sends his money, deducting a large commission. The Progressive Thinker is one dollar per year. The great rise in print paper renders it utterly impossible for us to give any commission to news agents or postmasters.

Bear in mind when making a remittance, that only one book, the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3, is furnished for 25 cents. You must not substitute any other of the premium books for that one.

OUR ECLECTIC MAGAZINE

THE TESTIMONY OF A GHOST, IN TEXAS.

It Was Accepted in the Settlement of an Estate, and Is a Part of the Public Records.

It is seldom anything occurs in the life of the average rural agriculturalist (special correspondence from Dallas, Texas, to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat) to break the routine of his generally monotonous existence, but when such event does occur, whether it be of joy or sadness, it is apt to be looked upon as an epoch in the lives of those concerned from which to date. So, even unto this day, it is a common occurrence among the older citizens of the county of Denton, Texas, when the subject of spooks or other supernatural phenomena are under discussion to hear one remark: "Well, that beats all since Jones' ghost." And Jones' ghost occupies a position considerably above that of the average ghost in that it is doubtless the only case on record wherein the testimony of his ghostship was accepted in the settlement of an estate, and is a part of the public records of above county.

As a number of the parties closely connected with the following occurrences are still living, I will substitute fictitious names for the real.

In the year 1877 there resided on a farm in the county of Denton, Mrs. Laura Jones, a widow, with two sons, Frank and John, nearly grown, and several smaller children. William Jones, deceased, had been a hard worker and successful farmer and stock raiser, and at his death had bequeathed to the widow and her children a model farm, well tilled and stocked with the best the country at that time afforded, together with a valuable tract of land in the southern part of the state.

The following spring, after his death a considerable number of their horses strayed away from their accustomed range, and, the country at that time being sparsely settled, were soon lost track of, and the usual course of inquiry served to elicit no information except that the band had been seen headed south.

Early in the fall after the crops had been garnered, it was decided that Frank, the eldest, should make an extended trip to the southward and endeavor if possible to locate the truant stock, as their entire loss meant a serious blow to the family exchequer. On a bright September morning, as the rising sun was painting with lavish hand the fading green of autumn, Frank Jones drew the double cinch to an easy notch under his faithful saddle horse, and, bidding his mother and John farewell, sped away to the southward, never to return again in the flesh.

There was yet plenty of work to be done on the farm, and time which otherwise might have dragged wearily to the lonely widow was filled with labor and pleasant anticipation of the absent one's early return. Days passed in rapid succession, and an occasional letter from Frank describing the beauties of the country and his own hardship in traveling alone through such unsettled regions furnished food for discussion in the fading twilight. At last a letter came which stated he was on the right trail and would soon overtake the slowly retreating herd. This was the last letter ever received. He was then some 200 miles south of the home place, and they began to speculate upon the day of his probable return. Allowing for delay for grazing the stock en route homeward, a day was set which it was considered, barring unforeseen accidents, should give him ample time for the return journey.

The appointed day came, but with it came no Frank and no tidings, nor the next day nor the next, and as the days lengthened into weeks the anxious mother, with moistened eyes, daily scanned the dusty trail to the southward.

The country at this time was none too safe from marauding bands of Indians, and horse-thieves were more plentiful than now and cared little for human life when a cavey-yard was at stake. These possibilities were anxiously discussed by the distressed family and inquiry was made by letter at various points along the route from which letters had been received from Frank. But all their inquiries came to naught. They did not know whether he was still going southward on the trail or had overtaken the stock and was even then on his return.

On the night of the 7th of November there came a sound as of footsteps on the front porch. After the usual custom, the family had retired early. The fire had been burning in the wide stone chimney to dispel the chill November winds, and its dying embers were casting fitful shadows on the wall. The footsteps approached the door, a hand turned the knob and some one entered. John was a light sleeper and, being aroused by the sound and the draft through the open doorway, awoke and raised himself partially on his elbow. He saw the dim outlines of a man and, reaching for his revolver, he demanded, "Who's there?" The familiar voice of his brother answered him and he came and sat down on the foot of John's bed. They conversed together in low tones for some time, but, not caring to disturb his mother at that hour, John vouchsafed the information that his room and bed were ready for him just as he had left it, as neither had been occupied during his absence. The dim outlines and retreating footsteps vanished through the opposite doorway, then all was still. John wondered a little that he heard no further noise from his brother's room, but, thankful for his safe return after so many days' watching, and anticipating her joy when, in the glad morning, he would tell his mother the glad news, he soon fell asleep.

John was up early, and after kindling a fire in the kitchen stove started at once for the barn to feed and rub down his brother's horse. He looked in the stall where Frank was accustomed to tie his favorite saddle pony, but it was occupied only by a stray calf. Thinking possibly he had turned him out in the pasture he searched it carefully, likewise the surrounding barnyards, but without result. Much puzzled by this occurrence he returned to the house. His mother greeted him at the kitchen door and inquired: "What were you talking about in your sleep last night? I heard you muttering something." "Why, I was talking to Frank, mother," he replied; "he came in last night."

"John, you must have been dreaming. I've been in Frank's room this morning, and it's unoccupied. The bed is just like I made it up the day poor Frank left." And the widow heaved a sigh in her anguish at the thought of the fate which may have overtaken her firstborn. John immediately went into his brother's room, threw open the blinds, and a flood of sunlight dispelled the lurking shadows, but there was no sign of Frank. He was becoming seriously alarmed, and returning to the kitchen told his mother part of the conversation he had had with Frank the night before. His mother for a while refused to credit such a thing, and ascribed it to too much supper or a slight illness, but John's earnestness in support of his statement and his fear that something had happened to Frank had its effect, and Mrs. Jones began to think that possibly there was something wrong. However, as certain supplies for the farm were needed in town it was decided to hitch up the wagon, take the children and go spend the day with Uncle Bob Saunders, who was at that time doing a thriving business in Denton, the county seat of Denton county. Upon arrival there, after the usual greetings and common-place talk, inquiry was made about Frank, and Uncle Bob was forthwith enlightened as to John's strange experience and his uneasiness. Mr. Saunders, being a practical man and a firm disbeliever in things supernatural, ridiculed the idea and tried his best to cheer them up, but John's countenance quickly disclosed to him the fact that he was not making much headway, so in deference to their wishes he and John started to the telegraph office to see if they could learn something from that source. While crossing the corner of the public square, around which were grouped the business houses of the town, they were hailed by the sheriff, who approached them bearing in his hand a telegraphic envelope. He handed the message to John, who, hastily unfolding the yellow paper, read:

"McDade, Tex., November 8, 1877.—To Sheriff of Denton county, Denton, Tex.: Man found dead near here last night. Papers disclose identity of Frank Jones of your county. Notify his people. (Signed)

"S. P. WILLIAMS, County Judge."

Something more than a year passed away when, through divergence of interest, it was thought best to dispose of all the Jones property so it could more easily and equitably be divided among the heirs, and with that end in view Bob Saunders, who had been appointed administrator, rapidly disposed of the estate until there was nothing left but the one tract of land in the southern part of the state. He was about to offer this for sale, when John Jones put in an appearance and strenuously opposed it. He refused to give any reason for it, but, thinking it could do no harm to humor him, the administrator postponed the sale.

After some months the sale was again urged by interested parties, but again John opposed it. His uncle refused to listen to further delay without some reason for it, whereupon John, for the first time, told in detail his conversation with the supernatural being which made its appearance at his bedside the night of Frank's death.

Frank had told him that he had found the horses near the town of Stellar. Mrs. Mary Williams, a widow living in that vicinity, and owning a large cattle ranch, had turned the horses into her pasture. Upon learning that Frank owned the adjoining section of land she proposed to purchase it, together with the stock, and knowing the danger from Indians and horse-thieves in driving the stock home, he decided to sell, and making Mrs. Williams a bill of sale to the stock she paid him over the entire purchase money. Not having the necessary papers at hand, Frank was to make out and send her the deed when he returned home. This he instructed his brother to do, but for fear of being laughed at he had kept his own counsel until such time as it became necessary for him to speak. That time had now come, and he declared he would contest with all his might any attempt to dispose of that tract of land until the matter was thoroughly investigated. Part of his statement having already been verified, it was decided to make some inquiry relative to this Mrs. Williams. With this end in view a letter was sent to Mrs. Williams asking her for information as to the whereabouts of one Frank Jones. A short time after this she made her appearance in Denton, and, learning who was administrator of the Jones estate, presented herself before Mr. Bob Saunders and exhibited her receipt for the money paid, and also the bill of sale to the stock which Frank had given her. Her story tallied in every detail with that of John's ghostly visitor. John Jones went before the county court of Denton county and there made affidavit, which is a matter of record, that his brother Frank had detailed to him his trade with the widow, and that the administrator was in justice bound to furnish her a deed to the property. Although he robbed his own pocket of considerable money, he carried out the instructions of his brother's spirit and the widow received her own.

THE ANGELS COME.

Ye come, ye come, from your gardens fair,
Ye come, ye come, from your home o'er there.
I see your forms as you gather near,
Your thoughts I sense, and your voices hear.

From your bright home in the world above,
Ye come to me, with your words of love;
Ye come with thoughts full of help and cheer,
To lift my soul from earth's gloom and fear.

Ye tell of life in the world unseen,
Of joy and light, more than mortals ween;
Ye bid my heart sing its cheerful song,
Tho' time be sad and the path be long.

For life below soon will pass away,
The night of earth will be turned to day.
The tears and sighs, the sad toils of earth,
Will pass away in that peaceful birth.

O, when my time shall have come to go,
From mortal scenes, and from life below,
May my glad soul, ere it quits this home,
Look up and cry: O, ye come! ye come!

PROPHETIC DREAM.

In Which She Saw Her Brother Dead.

"Mamma, I dreamed that Frank was dead, and that I saw him in his coffin."

When 9-year-old Lena Koehl came to the breakfast table with the announcement Sunday morning she was chided by her parents. Her vivid vision of the the early morning had filled her with a terror which did not leave her until she saw her brother come downstairs, happy in the anticipation of a day's outing. Then she forgot her fright and said no more of her strange dream.

Less than 24 hours later the body of Frank Koehl was lying in a coffin in the parlor of his parents' home at 2716 North Ninth street. His sister's dream had come true, and his fishing trip of Sunday had proved a fatal one.

It was Michael Koehl, the 14-year-old brother of the dead boy, and an eye-witness of his drowning, who reminded the family Monday morning of the words his sister had spoken the day before. All the family, except Frank had heard little Lena tell of her dream, and all lamented that more attention had not been paid to the child's warning.

Koehl was in his 18th year, and since leaving St. Michael's Parochial School had worked in a factory near his home. His opportunities for recreation did not come often, and when a party of boys from the neighborhood proposed Saturday afternoon that he and his younger brother should accompany them on a fishing trip on the following day he readily agreed to the plan.

Three skiffs were occupied by the boys, and they started from the foot of North Market street about 1 o'clock Sunday afternoon. An hour later the biggest of the boys, who had gone ahead of the rest, had found what seemed a safe and pleasant swimming place, and had plunged into the cool water without waiting for the rest to arrive. The spot where they were bathing was on the Illinois side, a few hundred feet north of the Merchants' bridge. With young Koehl in the water were Will Noon and Snarlie Strab.

When the second skiff, in which Michael Koehl sat, came in sight of the swimmers, they saw Noon and Strab making the most desperate attempts to throw a board or a bough to Frank Koehl, who was struggling in the water.

A man on the bank was pulling off his clothing and cutting his shoe strings in order to dive after the drowning boy, but before he could divest himself of his heavy clothes the lad had sunk for the last time. The boy in the skiff would even then have plunged after his oldest brother's body had not his comrades held him back from the hopeless undertaking.

Young Strab said Monday morning that Koehl seemed to have been sucked under by a current, and that he rose to the surface but once after calling for help. The body was recovered late in the afternoon.

"We never thought any more about what little Lena Koehl said until they brought us word about the drowning," said Mrs. Mary Koehl, the dead boy's mother. "The children say so many things, and we never thought of paying any attention to her dream, except that we noticed how frightened she seemed when she told of it."

"It seemed to me in my dream that I saw a coffin lying on the table in my room," said little Lena in telling of her dream Monday. "I got up and looked in the coffin, and there was brother Frank with a black coat and white necktie on, and looking so white and still. It has been a long time since I saw a person in a coffin, and I don't know what could have made me have such a dream. But when mamma told me not to talk about it and I saw that Frank was not dead, I tried to forget it. I can't never forget it now."—St. Louis (Mo.) Post-Dispatch.

Lily Dale Camp.

The season at Camp Cassadaga was full of interest from start to finish. It is conceded by all to have been one of the most profitable and harmonious sessions ever held at this camp.

Sunday, August 26, was the closing day. Mr. Grumbine in the morning and Mr. Mason in the afternoon spoke to large audiences, much to the edification of their special admirers. The people who gather to listen to the lectures at Lily Dale are thinkers, and it is rather dangerous for a speaker to draw too largely upon his imagination, or use untenable arguments to bolster up his assumptions. "Variety is the spice of life," and the variety of thought expressed from this platform gives a large field for the explorer to investigate and select from.

There have been many fine things given by some of the phenomenal mediums who have been located here during the season. Among the most marked are the portraits obtained through spirit power at the seances of the Bangs Sisters, and the Campbell Brothers. The portraits, obtained in the light, on canvas of your own selection, seem to give entire satisfaction to those who have sat for this kind of phenomena. These mediums are to be here during the season of 1901, and are to give a public demonstration of this remarkable power from the platform.

J. Clegg Wright and Prof. Lockwood will be here the entire season of camp, and beside their public lectures will hold classes, and give private lectures.

Moses Hull's school will also be another profitable and instructive feature of the camp of 1901. There will be changes in other directions, which will add to the progressive features of the assembly, and those who come to this delightful place another year will find their time profitably expended.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in retaining the entire board, without change, with Hon. A. Gaston as president, Mr. Brooks is retained as chairman, A. E. Gaston, secretary, and Miss Kate O. Peate, assistant secretary. At this writing, August 30, there are still a goodly number of people remaining to enjoy the quiet and rest which follow the busy exciting days when the camp is in full activity.

Moses Hull dropped down for a morsel of rest before proceeding to the conflict which lies before him in another debate with a minister. But Moses seems to grow fat on these debates, and always comes off victor. Mrs. Hull remains awhile in the pleasant cottage which they have purchased here, then, I believe, she goes to take up the work in Buffalo.

Quite a number of strangers have purchased permanent homes here, and Camp Cassadaga seems to have entered upon a season of greater attractiveness than ever before.

It is well, under the present management, no one need hesitate to come to Camp Cassadaga at any time or at any season, for there is always something to make the time pleasant and profitable.

A CHALLENGE.

Wants Mrs. Maude Freitag to Prove Herself Genuine.

To the Editor:—In your paper of August 4, I see that an Ottumwa, Iowa correspondent accuses Mrs. Maude Freitag of practicing sleight-of-hand in her ballot-reading tests, and a forfeit of twenty-five dollars is offered if Mrs. Freitag will read the ballots under test conditions. I know that she will not consent, and for good reasons. First, she cannot read the ballots under such conditions; second, because she has been repeatedly caught opening ballots in this city, and was offered double the amount to go under test conditions that was tendered her in Ottumwa; third, because she left Ottumwa immediately after her methods were detected, and arrived in Los Angeles, July 29, a month sooner than she was expected. She is protected here by officers of the society, who positively know of her sleight-of-hand practices.

Over a year ago I was informed by a former president of the Harmonial Society of this city that Mrs. Freitag's ballot-reading was the result of a trick, and was told how she performed it. Then at one of her public seances I went to the platform to investigate and detected her concealing a ballot in her hand, and saw her deposit it on the pile of ballots which the raps later indicated it to be on. Afterwards, on three different evenings, by looking through a window near the platform, I saw her opening ballots. On my third visit to the window I was accompanied by four other men, all of us Spiritualists, and one, Mr. Griffith, was and still is secretary of the society. Mrs. Freitag was then seen to open three ballots, one after another, upon one of which Mr. Griffith read the initials E. G. Each ballot was folded by her and dropped back upon the pile, then found by raps and the names given by her as if from spirits.

A few days later I placed a forfeit of fifty dollars in the hands of Dr. K. D. Wise, the most prominent Spiritualist in the city, to be given to Mrs. Freitag or the Harmonial Society if test conditions failed to prove her ballot-reading the result of sleight-of-hand. The offer was published in the city papers, but was not accepted, and to prevent any further detection of her methods, a door was erected at the head of the stairway leading to the porch from which we had taken our observations, and the entire porch was enclosed with wire netting, thus making it safe for Mrs. Freitag to perform her ballot trick without fear of further detection.

So far as I know, all efforts to investigate Mrs. Freitag's methods have developed evidence of trickery. On three different occasions ballots were sent to the platform containing fictitious names, and long communications were received in reply from pretended spirits, proving that Mrs. Freitag not only reads the ballots, but coins the messages as well.

To the amount offered by the Ottumwa committee, I will add fifty dollars, the money to go either to Mrs. Freitag or the National Spiritualists Association, if upon her submission to test conditions the ballot-reading is not found to be the result of sleight-of-hand work; and if the Editor of The Progressive Thinker will act as stakeholder, I will forward the money to him, to be awarded according to the terms that may be agreed upon.

Now, Mr. Editor, hoping that your influence may bring about a test of Mrs. Freitag's honesty and mediumistic ability, I am, very truly, yours for the truth,

A. M. BUCK.

Los Angeles, Cal.

We hope that Mrs. Freitag will promptly accept this challenge and forever silence those who think she uses sleight-of-hand in giving her tests. We believe she is able to do it. Mrs. Ada Foye would delight to accept such a proposition. These howling skeptics should be put to flight, and forever silenced.—Editor.

THE SEER'S REVERIE.

The life that I live; O world, canst thou tell?
The seeing of life; where to thee, hangs a veil;
The hearing of words; where silence seems crowned;
The speaking, so plain, where to thee is no sound?
The guestship of soul—what is it to thee?
The appearing of forms; the world's mystery;
The singing of songs; the writing of psalms;
The message of Life, where Death but embalms;
The breaking of seals, where the world dare not break;
The lifting of curtain, for a suffering one's sake;
Revealing the features, the form of thy dead;
The saying of words that an angel hath said;
O world, canst thou tell of this life that I live;
That I unto thee Love's message may give?
Yet this is my Life; surrounded by Guests,
That come to me now; preferring requests;
And holding me back from the things of the earth,
That I make reveal of some friend's higher birth!
I am taken away from the work and the noise;
Away from earth's gains, that my soul may have poise;
And yet ye would ask, what need for all this?
And think it may be that such life is bliss!
But lo, I must feel the sense of a death;
Perchance there will come the stifling of breath;
The fever must burn, the chill overcome,
E'er I can thee tell of the one from thy home;
And oft it must be, that my soul has its part,
In the flow of the feeling that comes from the heart.
The life that I live; O world canst thou tell,
When unto thy vision is lifted no veil?
Then judge me not harshly, as I sit here alone;
When I ask thee for bread, O give me not stone;
But think of these things that I tell to thee here,
Of the things I must bear, that vision appear!

SPIRITUALISM.

The Latest Scientific Convert.

Professor Hyslop, who occupies the chair of logic, ethics, and psychology at Columbia University, has recently declared his belief in spirit return. A convert of such scholastic learning and philosophical eminence will be a valuable addition to the number of those who have accepted the spirit hypothesis. Although Dr. Hyslop would very probably object to being called a Spiritualist, still he fully admits the central facts around which the Spiritualistic belief has grown, viz., the survival of man beyond the gates of the grave, also that the disembodied souls of human beings can and do return to earth to communicate with us who are still imprisoned in the flesh. No doubt to many minds the possibility of spirit return is peculiarly distasteful. The wish is father to the thought, it cannot be true; some people are too materialistic even to entertain such a conception for a moment; others again reject the supposition because it is conflict with their own peculiar notions of what should be. But how many facts have already been proved, which were quite at variance with generally accepted opinions? Facts are stubborn things, not always to be fitted into theories. The truth is still the truth, though contradicted on all sides. When Galileo said the earth revolved around the sun, it was disbelieved and denied by everyone; yet all the rest of the world was wrong, and he alone was right. As Daniel Defoe naively remarks: "He that opposes his own judgment against the current of the times ought to be backed with unanswerable truth; he that has truth on his side is a fool as well as a coward if he is afraid to own it because of the multitude of other men's opinions. 'Tis hard for a man to say all the rest of the world is mistaken but himself. But if it be so, who can help it?" That people of such moral integrity and intellectual capability as those who are engaged in psychic research, could be deceived themselves, or intentionally deceive others, is entirely out of the question. In spite of the fraud and folly, the illusion and delusion, which has so often been mixed up with Spiritualism, beneath all the shifting sands of doubt, uncertainty and disbelief, there must be the bedrock of facts, otherwise this quest would have been abandoned long ere now by all philosophical inquirers. Instead of which we find the belief in spirit return gradually but steadily gaining ground day by day, and winning acceptance not only in the ranks of the ignorant and credulous, but also among the most cultured and critical of the community. Mrs. Sidgwick (Principal of Newnham College), one of the most capable and skeptical inquirers into this subject, has recently made the following admission, speaking of telepathy (the communication of impressions of any kind from one mind to another, independently of the recognized channels of sense), "a communication between mind and mind in which the physical world is not concerned," which would go to show "the existence of mind apart from body, with the further chain of probabilities that the mind continues to exist when the body is dead, that it continues to carry on telepathic communication with minds in the body, and, indeed, that telepathy is of the nature of the communication of disembodied spirits with each other." And Professor Oliver Oliver Lodge says, alluding to psychic phenomena generally, "It rather feels as if we were at the beginning of a fresh branch of science."

In the case of Mrs. Piper, the well-known American medium, he fully admits that something more of a supernormal character was involved in many of the instances than could be explained by thought transference from the sitters, and he found himself forced to the hypothesis of "telepathy from distant persons if that is in any way feasible, telepathy from deceased persons only as a last resort, but telepathy of some kind as distinct from any conceivable method of extracting information from persons present." This comes very near to accepting spirit return as a fact in nature. Professor Hyslop sums up the general results of his own inquiries thus: "Being reduced to a choice between an omniscient telepathy and communication with discarnate spirits, I simply prefer the latter hypothesis as the more rational of the two, in the present state of our knowledge regarding supernormal phenomena." In other words, Dr. Hyslop considers it more reasonable to admit the fact of spirit control, than to suppose Mrs. Piper in her trance condition becomes a goddess.

W. H. SIMPSON.

Grahamstown, South Africa.

Island Lake Camp, Mich.

Although we have had feasts of fishes, and the flow of eloquence at the early part of the camp, the genial, honest workers, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, have left their impress on the minds of the campers (the few that remain), and their smiling faces will live in our memories, and their kind words spoken at the proper time, will live after them. Mr. Kates', lectures have been clean, clear, and seemingly just what was needed. Mrs. Kates, in her pleasing manner, captivated her listeners by her clear descriptions. Wednesday evening was an evening with Ichabod, which was enjoyed by all present for his quaint saying, and Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing has already captured those who never saw or heard her before by her motherly ways and her kind and gentle words. In conclusion she asked: What have you Spiritualists left in your legacy of the past, and what will you leave? Will it be that of a life of honesty and true manhood and womanhood? Are you living the truth, as embodied in our grand philosophy? Her appeal for a good, truthful, honest, upright humanitarian life was pathetic indeed. She remains with us until the close of the camp.

Mr. Kates remarked after one of his lectures that the best music at any camp was at Island Lake. Quite a compliment to Prof. Hudson.

HYPNOTIC CONTROL.

I have just prepared a Mail Course of five complete lessons on this subject, and have them bound in booklet form. The complete Mail Course will be sent to any one for only 10c silver. This course of instructions contains my latest discoveries and methods with which you can hypnotize any subject, no matter how hard. I have written them for the benefit of professional hypnotists, and all who wish to greatly increase their percentage of success. No matter, student, whose instructions you have, and no matter what your degree of success, if you send me 10c I will send you this complete course, which will enable you to fasten on to any incomplete instructions and succeed right from the start. No matter whether you have ever studied hypnotism before or not, you will find yourself succeeding at first trial. You can hypnotize anyone that complies with these original methods. I repeat, that you are just as sure to hypnotize the first person that complies with these methods as you are sure that the sun rises and sets.

These complete instructions, mind you, will be sent for only 10c, actually enabling you to thoroughly master all herein described, without further charge. This book also contains methods for Self-Healing that will not fail. I absolutely guarantee that when compiled with they cannot fail to cure diseases that medicine cannot touch at all. Any one can be a practical operator in the Occult Arts who reads this Mail Course. This book contains my very latest discoveries, which enable all to induce the hypnotic sleep in themselves almost instantly, at will, awake at any desired time, and thereby cure all known diseases and bad habits. Anyone can induce this sleep in himself at first trial, control his dreams, read the minds of his friends and enemies, see absent friends, communicate with disembodied spirits, visit any part of the earth, solve hard questions and problems in this sleep, and remember all when awake. This so-called Mental Vision Lesson and four others—one in Self-Hypnotic Healing, Control of the Sub-Conscious Mind in the waking state, and several strong healing methods are all contained in this little book, which will be sent to any one for 10c silver, enabling you to be as good an operator as any one living. Mind you, this can be successfully accomplished by the study of this little book, without further charge.

I am so absolutely confident that you will be successful, right from the start, with these instructions that I will even send them SUBJECT TO EXAMINATION, if so desired, just to prove to the most skeptical that they form the best course ever sold for 10c, and to all who send the dime, if they should be dissatisfied, money will be cheerfully refunded. But this Mail Course is just as described, for I would not dare to use the mails for any fraudulent purpose. This bargain offer is limited, so send at once to

Joan, the Medium.

Or, the Inspired Heroine of Orleans. Spiritualism as a Leader of Armies. By MOSES HULL. This is at once the most truthful history of Joan of Arc, and one of the most convincing arguments on Spiritualism ever written. No novel was ever more thrillingly interesting; no history more true. Price in cloth, 40 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

The Real Issue.

By MOSES HULL. A compound of the two pamphlets, "The Irrepressible Conflict," and "Your Answer or Your Life;" with important additions, making a book of 160 pages all for 25 cents. This book contains statistics, facts and documents, on the tendencies of the times, that every one should have.

All About Devils.

Or, an Inquiry as to whether Modern Spiritualism and other Great Reforms come from His Satanic Majesty and His Subordinates in the Kingdom of Darkness. 40 pages. By MOSES HULL. Price, 15 cents.

Jesus and the Mediums, or Christ and Mediumship.

Careful comparison of some of the Spiritualism and Mediumship of the Bible with that of to-day. By MOSES HULL. An invincible argument proving that Jesus was only a medium, subject to all the conditions of modern mediumship. It also shows that all the manifestations throughout the Old and New Testament were under the same conditions that mediums require to-day; and that the coming of Christ is the return of mediumship to the world. 48 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The Spiritual Birth, or Death and Its To-Morrow.

The Spiritual Idea of Death, Heaven and Hell. By MOSES HULL. This pamphlet besides giving the Spiritualistic interpretation of many things in the Bible—interpretations never before given, explains the heavens and hells believed in by Spiritualists. Price, 10 cents.

The Quarantine Raised.

Or the Twenty Years Battle Against a Worker Ended. Price 10 cents.

Spiritual Songster.

By MATTIE E. HULL. Thirty-eight of Mrs. Hull's sweetest songs, adapted to popular music, for the use of congregations, circles and families. Price, 10 cts., or $6 per hundred.

World's Sixteen Saviors,

—OR—

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST.

BY KERSEY GRAVES.

New and startling revelations in religious history which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles precepts and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising in His tory of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods. This wonderful and exhaustive volume will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which the author has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape, the student of free thought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, 380 pages. New edition revised and corrected, with portrait of author. Price $1.50. Postage 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Real Life in the Spirit-Land.

Given inspirationally by Mrs. Maria M. King. Price 75 cents. For sale at this office.

BY LILIAN WHITING.

Three choice volumes, each complete in itself, in which spirituality is related to everyday life in such a way as to make the world beautiful. Price $1 each. For sale at this office.

Psychopathy, or Spirit Healing

A series of lessons on the relations of the spirit to its own organism, and the inter-relation of human beings with reference to health, disease and healing. By the spirit of Dr. Benjamin Rush, through the mediumship of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond. A book that every healer, physician and Spiritualist should read. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

PSYCHE

Is the invention of a practical medium, under spirit guidance, and is designed to develop mediumship. Many, by its use, have received long communications from spirit friends, and express great satisfaction. Price, $1, and 20 cents extra for expressage. For sale at the office of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER.

Out of the Depths Into the Light.

By Samuel Bowles; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, medium. This is a very interesting little book, and will be appreciated from start to finish by all who wish to gain spiritual information. Price 25 cts. For sale at this office.

OUTSIDE THE GATES

and other tales and sketches. By a band of spirit intelligences, through the mediumship of Mary Theresa Shelhamer. An excellent work. Price, $1.00. For sale at this office.

Views of Our Heavenly Home.

By Andrew Jackson Davis. A highly interesting work. Price 75 cents. Postage 5 cents. For sale at this office.

DEATH AND THE AFTER LIFE

By Andrew Jackson Davis. Something you should read. Price 60 cents. For sale at this office.

KAREZZA.

ETHICS OF MARRIAGE.

By Alice B. Stockham, M. D.

Karezza makes a plea for a better birthright for children, and aims to lead individuals to seek a higher development of themselves through most sacred relations. It is pure in tone and aim, and should be widely circulated. Price, cloth, $1.

ASTRAL WORSHIP.

By J. H. Hill, M. D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts given possess great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Superstition in all Ages

Or "Le Bon Sens,"

By JEAN MESLIER,

A Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastoral service of thirty years in France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and asked God's pardon for having taught the Christian religion. He left this volume as his last will and testament to his parishioners and to the world. Translated from the French original by Miss Anna Knoop.

Post 8vo., 339 pages, with portrait. Cloth, $1.00; postage, 14 cents.

"The work of the honest pastor is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind that the last century produced. . . . Paine and Voltaire had reserves, but Jean Meslier had none. He keeps nothing back; and yet, after all, the wonder is not that there should have been one priest who left that testimony at his death, but that all priests do not."—James Parton.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be furnished until further notice, at the following terms, invariably in advance:

One year	$1.00
Six months	50c
Thirteen weeks	25 cts
Single copy	5 cts

REMITTANCES.

Remit by Postoffice Money Order, Registered Letter, or draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so don't send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Direct all letters to J. R. Francis, No. 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

CLUBS: IMPORTANT SUGGESTION!

As there are thousands who will at first venture only twenty-five cents for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER thirteen weeks, we would suggest to those who receive a sample copy, to solicit several others to unite with them, and thus be able to remit from $1 to $10, or even more than the latter sum. A large number of little amounts will make a large sum total, and thus extend the field of our labor and usefulness. The same suggestion will apply in all cases of renewal of subscriptions—solicit others to aid in the good work. You will experience no difficulty whatever in inducing Spiritualists to subscribe for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, for not one of them can afford to be without the valuable information imparted therein each week, and at the price of only about two cents per week.

A Bountiful Harvest for 25 Cents.

Do you want a more bountiful harvest than we can give you for 25 cents? Just pause and think for a moment what an intellectual feast that small investment will furnish you. The subscription price of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER thirteen weeks is only twenty-five cents! For that amount you obtain one hundred and four pages of solid, substantial, soul-elevating and mind-refreshing reading matter, equivalent to a medium-sized book!

TAKE NOTICE!

☞ At expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly, write to us, and errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it is then sent, or the change cannot be made.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The Progressive Thinker is furnished to the United States at $1.00 per year, the postage thereon being but nominal, but when it is sent to foreign countries we are compelled to charge 50 cents extra, making the yearly subscription $1.50. Please bear that in mind.

The Fountain of Error.

Is there any deviltry or crime in Christendom, perpetrated by any wretch however vile, that has not a parallel in the Bible, which lawbreakers cite as authority for their damnable acts? If so we have yet to find it. It shocks churchmen to make such an inquiry; but observation justifies it. Here is a late case, clipped from the Kansas City Star, and sent by some patron, with a request to notice. Woman is very generally the sufferer. The shameful wretch thought wife beating a duty, and the poor deluded victim, gathering inspiration from the "sacred" book, supposed he was right, but he had overdone the task.

"Trenton, Mo., Aug. 7.—In a justice court here Edward Spencer was charged with whipping his wife, and it was brought out on the trial that he thought it was his religious duty to correct her in matters temporal as well as spiritual, and that when she disobeyed him he should chastise her. He had several Bible passages selected, which he read to her in defense of his conduct.

"She was a timid witness, and admitted she believed according to the Bible her husband was in duty bound to whip her when she needed it, but she felt he had whipped her sometimes without cause. One instance she gave was when he whipped her because she could not see a squirrel nest in a tree, her lord claiming she was merely stubborn. At another time he whipped her because she would not drop her baking and wash a buggy so they might go to church the next day. He was to sing in the choir at a church dedication, and said it was a shame to go in such a buggy. There were several similar cases told about in court.

"The jury brought in a verdict of guilty, and assessed the punishment at a $75 fine and six months in jail. The prosecution was forced by the neighbors, who assembled in church Sunday and decided that if the law did not take a hand they would. The court room was packed, and two or three times the justice had to threaten to clear the room because of the applause. Spencer said he might have been a little severe in his punishment of his wife on a few occasions, but that it was a matter outside of the jurisdiction of the courts."

Barbarous as it may seem, the whipping post is a deserved penalty in every case of wife whipping, however numerous the Bible texts favoring such infernal acts.

An Authoritative Statement.

A special Commissioner of Russia, en route to China, to negotiate terms of peace with the Celestial Empire, arrived in New York on the 26th ult., making his trip from St. Pttersburg across the continent by rail to San Francisco, and the Pacific to Hong Kong. If the interview with the Commissioner, as reported by the Associated Press, can be trusted, Russia occupies a very different position than that heretofore represented. He says his government is not warring on China, but against the rebels who are alone responsible for the pending troubles. The Czar is opposed to any division of the empire. He claims the German ambition and influence are prejudicial to the interests of the Western powers, and that its unwise action will make a peaceful solution of the question extremely difficult.

"Russia does not seek to annex even a small bit of Chinese territory, because it would be a burden to her * * * The Chinese are a very good people, and I think the danger with them is more economic than military. The questions at issue cannot be easily settled. There are too many powers in it. Why, even Austria and Italy are sending a few dozens of men over there. The struggle will be of endless duration."

The Envoy did not say in so many words that the missionary business is the difficult thing to encounter; but all know if that disturbing element was eliminated from it the whole matter could be disposed of quickly.

The Fate of Creeds.

Said the humorist, Mark Twain, on one occasion:

"The altar cloths of one age are the door mats of the next."

Could a philosopher, however profound, have written a greater truth? Cast the eye backward over the history of the world, and see the realization of this statement. The present faith, otherwise "altar cloths," will be no exception. It must take its place with its predecessors, and act its servile part. The sooner it enters on its new mission, to remove the filth from dirty feet, the sooner the mission will be consummated, and the race correspondingly advanced.

Christian Civilization and Barbarism Contrasted.

Prof. Judson, of the University of Chicago, says:

"Life and property will be as safe in China as in the United States after the powers have straightened things."

That staid old paper, the Journal, the oldest of the Chicago dailies, in a recent issue told how very safe "life and property" is in this Christian city, where churches, Sunday-schools, and missionary societies greatly abound, and education is almost universal. Read it, you who are so anxious to spread Western civilization over the Orient:

"We nail things down in the United States. The Chicago man's house, after the inmates have gone to bed, resembles a citadel. Doors are locked and chained, windows barred and connected with burglar alarms. A revolver is kept handy for the persistent gentry that saw through bolts and bars. After midnight it is dangerous to be abroad. Belated ones glance over the shoulder every few paces."

We cited last week the experience of the Methodist bishop, Rev. Ninde, who traveled all over China a few years ago, "prowling about her cities at night with a lantern," and his commendation of the morals and good behavior of that barbaric people. Contrast the condition of things found there "in a disturbed condition of the country" with a period of general tranquillity in Christian Chicago, then call the missionaries home, and set them at work in the purlieus and resorts of crime in this great city, provided their labors are reformatory, as they allege; but let us place on record alongside of the Chicago Journal's statement, and along with Bishop Ninde's, that of Sir Rutherford Alcock, formerly a minister of the British government to China. The paper was read before the Society of Arts in London, and was published some years ago in the "Nineteenth Century" magazine. In the course of that article Sir Rutherford said:

"I have lived for the last twelve years in this great city of beer and spirit drinking people, after more than twenty years passed in the midst of a dense population of opium smokers, and I can conscientiously aver that I see more degradation and brutality in a single day in the streets of London—more of violence and misery, with danger to all who come in contact with it—than I ever saw in twenty years of life in China. And I would rather live, so far as personal safety and freedom from outraged feelings for humanity is concerned, in a heathen population of opium smokers, than in a Christian community where drunkenness from alcoholic drinks is the prevailing vice among the mass, and the working class."

Our Christian civilization does not seem to civilize worth a cent, therefore even if extended to China the country will be in a more deplorable condition than at present.

Bishop Cranston, of Seattle, for two years superintendent of Methodist missions in China, says:

"It is my belief it will take 100 years, or two or three generations at least, to bring the Chinese people to a status of what we call 'spiritual Christianity.'"

It is hoped it will take a much longer period than that to bring it up to that "spiritual status" Sir Rutherford complained of.

An Earnest Inquiry.

In 1884, 24,000 Christians were murdered by the Chinese at Kuang Tsi, in Annam, and 22,000 were slaughtered in Cochin China.

To the large number slaughtered in former years on missionary account there must now be added the multitude who have lately fallen, native and foreign. And to the list must be further added the thousands of all nationalities, Chinese and allied foreigners, who fell in deadly strife at Taku, Tien Tsin, Pekin, and elsewhere incidental to those massacres.

May not the inquiry be justly made: For whose good this waste of life? How is the world bettered, or civilization advanced by the blood and treasure wasted, the root of which was an effort to crush out the religion of China, built upon the teachings of Buddha and Confucius, and substitute that of Christianity, whose whole pathway from its founder down to the present is traced in blood? Is a single person made better or more humanitarian, in consequence of this barbaric record?

Look again and see the reflex action growing out of this conflict: Morals are depraved; vices are engendered; and crimes innumerable follow in the trail of war. This demoralization extends to every country participating in this strife, the end of which is still invisible.

The foolish attempt to Christianize China is responsible for every life wasted, every dollar expended, every crime the outgrowth; and they who ignorantly as to the result, contributed of their resources to send the missionaries abroad, or gave means for their support, are really guilty of a positive wrong, for which there is no justification or excuse.

When the ruler of a great nation like Germany, in addressing his troops about leaving for China, as the Volks Zeitung, of Berlin, reported the Kaiser only a few days ago as saying, slightly amended from a former charge,

"Spare the population, but do not spare those who oppose you in arms. Show the Chinese that there is one power which means to punish the crimes they have committed irrespective of more distant and more practical aims."

The press dispatch in transmitting that brief speech adds:

"His majesty is represented as saying he feared the troubles in China might develop a war between the Orient and the Occident."

That danger the Kaiser apprehended will very possibly be turned aside by the really wise action of our own government, in so far withdrawing from all alliance as to refuse to continue the war after securing the release of the legations. Of course it will require "indemnity for the past, and security for the future," but it is believed these can be attained without further effusion of blood. Let the meddlesome missionaries retire from China and other matters can be quickly adjusted.

The Chinaman's Statement.

The Chinese minister to Russia, Yang Yu, lately made the following assertion:

"The majority of the Chinese Christians are dishonest persons, who, under the protection of the church, rob and otherwise damage their fellow-countrymen."

The minister maintains, in explanation of this assertion, that no self-respecting Chinaman would renounce his ancient faith for the religion of foreign missionaries. The Chinese welcome trade, but they abhor proselytism, he declares, and until foreign nations have learned not to interfere in religious matters disturbances must continue.

A Bright Outlook, as Viewed by the Editor of the New York Herald.

For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace.—Romans, viii: 6.

The mind of man is the sentinel on guard at headquarters, and its business is to allow no thought to pass which can prove injurious to body or soul. It is as much our duty to see that this sentinel prevents any ill feeling from entering the heart as it is for the picket on his station to sound the alarm on the approach of an enemy. An evil thought is often worse than the thrust of a bayonet, and should be challenged as soon as its footfall is heard. That challenge should be peremptory, and a halt called the moment its presence is felt. There is not a man in the world who can afford to compromise with a bad habit, even though it promises a thousand innocent pleasures, for if allowed to enter the soul it will weaken the will and corrupt the better nature. It is necessary to keep a careful watch over one's self, and to be a loyal soldier when envy or avarice or unprincipled greed attempts to cajole us into surrender. For that matter, it is more imperative to resent and repel such encroachments than it is for the picket to keep ears and eyes open when danger lurks in the darkness.

It is a mistake to suppose that we cannot control our thoughts. That is the assertion of an obsolete psychology. It is one of the old fashioned beliefs which we ought to have long since outgrown. It has no place in the new philosophy of life, which in this better age is coming closer and closer to the life of Christ. It is not only possible to control our thoughts, but it is the prime condition of spiritual success. Your mind—that is to say, your outlook—decides the health of your body and the use you make of experience, and you, the immortal man, can issue instructions to your mind just as a general issues an order to his staff; and as the staff considers such orders final, so the mind will obey when you give your command with imperative emphasis. You yourself are independent, you yourself are commander in chief, and your thoughts are your servants.

Until you realize that fact you are not even on the threshold of the divine life. So long as you believe your thoughts can run riot, that you cannot restrain their excesses and are not responsible for them, so long the spiritual victory is jeopardized, just as the issue of a battle is jeopardized when the general loses control of his troops. But when you are master and know how to enforce discipline your troops swing into line, face the foe and win the day.

Your prime duty, therefore, is to be optimistic; to feel that heaven is on your side, that earth can do you no harm, and that both life and death are a ladder up which to climb to the stars. That was the attitude of the Christ. He trod His sufferings under foot as one who seeks the mountain top treads the stony path that leads to it. He was rich in the thought of God's presence, and throughout the weary day, in spite of the tempest of men's hatred, there was sunshine in His heart. If this was possible for Him it is equally possible for us. His power is our power when we are like minded with Him.

Grumbling at fate results in discontent and inability to make the best of circumstance. To look on the dark side of an event is to grope in a starless night, perhaps to lose one's way utterly, and to invite the very disaster which you dread. To feel that you cannot be insecure so long as you and God go together is to lighten your load, to broaden your shoulders, and to wrest a possible good from the grasp of a seeming evil. There is more strength and more virtue in a smile than in a frown, and a heart with the good cheer of faith in it is better than a heart of lead. There can be no religion unless that kind of faith is laid as its chief cornerstone. No matter what happens, then, never lose either your courage or your belief that in the end you will come from the fight with your shield, and not on it.

The New Testament doctrine consists of courage, to-day, to-morrow and always. With a high thought as your viewpoint you can see over the petty troubles to which you give so much importance; you are above the fog, with the clear blue over your head. Even if sickness is your present lot the health of the soul is not impaired. And though death be not far away and its so-called shadows are on your path God is there. Christ is there, and a better world is there in full sight.

Courage, therefore; the courage that is founded on an unfaltering faith in the omnipotent hand which is leading you through the night into the eternal day. GEORGE H. HEPWORTH.

No Claim on Heaven.

How is it possible to be a Christian and disregard the words of the Master? We repeat this inquiry, to make it more emphatic. Does change of time, location or customs change a requirement that was the very essence of the faith nineteen hundred years ago? "Sell all thou hast and give it to the poor," not a part but the whole, was demanded as an indispensable requisite of a disciple.

Other virtues and qualifications were of no account without observance of this, the most important of them all.

Waive the poison test, with the ability to cast out devils, speak with new tongues, and cure the sick by the laying on of hands, Mark 16:17,18; and waiving belief in baptism as requisites, as given in verse 16, yet, unless the neophyte sold all his possessions and gave the entire proceeds to the destitute, Luke 18: 22, he had no claim on the treasures of heaven.

Will somebody well versed in the Christian faith be so kind as to inform an honest inquirer how he can disregard all the essentials of that faith, as promulgated by its reputed founder, and still be a faithful Christian, and entitled to Christian rewards? Either belief, and baptism, and ability to drink unharmed deadly poisons, accumulation of wealth, and neglect to give all to the poor, are not essential Christian graces, else there are mighty few genuine, Simon-pure, first-class A-No. 1, 4-X Christians in this age when all these requirements are purposely ignored by the professed Christian.

These thoughts took this present form after reading a news item in one of our dailies, stating that the late Vicar-General of the Roman Catholic arch diocese of Chicago, Rev. Dowling, left an estate in municipal bonds and realty, valued by the Probate court at $75,000. What claim has he, or any other person defying the will of the Master, on the rewards of heaven?

An Important Query.

What Shall We Do with the Fraud and Fake?

MOSES HULL SOUNDS THE ALARM AGAINST A DIRTY GANG THAT INFESTS OUR RANKS, SWINDLING PEOPLE RIGHT AND LEFT.

The impostor, the fraud and the fake, like the poor, is always with us. There is no age nor nation, no church nor society where he is not; it is as impossible to bar against him as it would be to fence against the Kansas grasshoppers. The churches and other close organizations with all their watchful care are troubled with them. However, it must be admitted that they have been able to bar against many of them. This is bad for us, when scoundrels find themselves shut out of other societies they flock in greater numbers to us.

Spiritualism has usually given a carte blanche to every charlatan or swindler who has sought admittance in our ranks. In fact, in the past we have bid high for them and it has not been our fault if he has not been our guest. I have more than once been reproved for exposing frauds and conscienceless pretenders, because in so doing I was injuring Spiritualism and mediumship.

One of these individuals not long since went to a city and exhibited a certificate with my name to it, recommending him as a wonderful medium. I had never seen him, much less had I signed his certificate. This man made some of the younger and more verdant Spiritualists believe that if they would pay him certain sums of money, from $5 up, in advance, he could in a very few sittings develop them—in short he could fit them to go before the world as the expositors, par excellence, of the spiritual philosophy; and as for the phenomena, why there was no phase of them but were wrapped up in these victims; all they needed was for this particular medium to bring it out. Some pawned their watches, jewelry, or whatever they could spare to raise the money with which to "purchase these gifts of the holy ghost." In a few weeks each and all of these dupes were to astonish the world.

After the money was all paid in, this wonderful developer mysteriously dematerialized; so did all the money they had handed over to him. He had gone to some other fields of labor to, under another name, "hold up" another batch of fools.

The "professor" had hardly got out of sight, when another, a lady—a perfect lady—came along. She felt terribly when she heard of how these good people had been swindled out of their money, not only did she pity them, but it was injuring her business; she was a genuine developing medium—no mistake this time. In as much as the people had been so awfully deceived she would develop them for less than half her regular price; and she did. Some of them would not bite; but those least able to afford it did, and a telegram called her away so suddenly that she had no time to tell her friends, but she would surely return as soon as she buried her mother. The old lady will perhaps never die. Fools and their money were again parted.

After people have been thus fooled a few times, some of them measure our religion and our characters by such parties, and renounce the whole system as a swindle and a fraud.

I have letters now in my possession from people who have been deceived in the way herein set forth, and who want to know what they can do about it. I can give no advice but to go to work and earn more money to hand over to the next brace of frauds who may chance to come along.

One who wanted to attend our school, but was persuaded to try these "developers" instead, writes: "Dear Mr. Hull, can you give me any advice?" Yes, I could, but the advice would only last until the next swindler came near enough to get her money. Now if we will guarantee to make of her such a medium as ——— or such a speaker as ——— she will pawn something to attend our school next year, even though the tuition costs her the tremendous amount of $6.50, or could I develop her quicker and as cheap by mail?

My answer was, that if this individual wanted to come to our school, not for one or two months, but until she acquired something of a knowledge of English grammar, rhetoric, logic and elocution—all of which could be acquired in a few years' hard study, we could prepare her to go before the public. When once before the public, if our students continue to apply themselves with diligence to the search after knowledge, and if they acquire wisdom to know how to use their knowledge, in the course of a few years they might fill as important a position as the one to whom they referred. This discouraging letter lost us a student, as we have lost many before, and as, perhaps, we shall lose many more.

The world will perhaps never get done trying to get something for nothing. Some things may be inherited, or obtained at a very small cost, but if there is any royal road to knowledge I have not found it. Ability or development is not a matter of a week, or even of a year. Even three score of years of hard work has not brought me all that some expect to get within the waxing and waning of a single moon.

Mr. Wright, Mr. Lockwood, Mr. Weaver, or any other of our ripe scholars and able speakers could soon prepare a lecture and teach it to a student, and teach that student how to deliver it. All this could be done in a few weeks, but when that discourse is delivered the student is left stranded. That is not what is wanted; each student wants the ability developed in himself to prepare and deliver his own discourses. Our school works for nothing less than that. Those who are not willing to work for that much are recommended to go to some of the "developers" for aid. We neither want them nor their money.

I am quite off of my subject. I started to write about the vampires who perambulate the country to rob verdant Spiritualists. These frauds and fakes have a more thorough and effective organization than the Spiritualists have had up to this point. This organization has not only the purpose in view of assisting each other, furnishing tests and manifestations for each other, but its work is to assassinate such speakers and mediums as see through and attempt to expose their plans. I speak by the card when I say that this Association has been to the managers of at least one camp and told them that they would kill that camp if they employed me to come there again. This so frightened the committee, that they closed all negotiations with me right there.

How many other camps were approached in the same way I do not know, but I have reason to believe that at least two other camps that same year were approached in the same way and by the same parties.

I know of at least one camp where one of the most popular men in our ranks was boycotted in the same way, and for the same reason. I do not tell this because this gentlemen or myself has any fear in the matter. We each have all the work we can do; and if we did not, we can employ ourselves as advantageously as we can work for others.

I tell all this simply to let the world know that these frauds have gone to work with the determination of either winning, or killing Spiritualism; they are determined that Spiritualism shall not live without supporting a gang of barnacles who are of as much advantage to it as warts, wens and cancers are to those upon whom they fasten themselves.

What can we do? I would suggest one thing; that is that we greatly strengthen our National Organization and that no mediums be recognized as such by the Association until they prove themselves to be such, and then that where they are not known they be required to produce a certificate of recommendation from the Association.

This will not boycott those not recognized; it only allows them to work on their own hook, and to get such endorsement as they can from those among whom they may work. In all cases I think drunkenness or bad conduct should be a sufficient cause to withdraw all endorsements.

Spiritualism must take a high stand if it would win that class of people who can do the most for it.

MOSES HULL.

A Frank and Truthful Confession.

A London paper reports a discourse lately given to men in that city, by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, entitled "The Spiritual Wants of Man." During its delivery the preacher said:

"We must make the churches more like the public house, without the drink—more cheerful, better lighted, less formal, and altogether more free and easy, so the working man will voluntarily come in and enjoy himself, as he does at present at the public house.

"It is often thrown in my face that no great reform was ever started, or even aided by the church. Unfortunately it is only too true. The education movement owes nothing to the church. The emancipation movement owes nothing to the church. The temperance movement owes nothing to the church. Indeed, in the early days of that movement, if a man wanted to sign a pledge, he was obliged to go to an Infidel hall to do so, so much was the church opposed to the movement.

"I am anxious the church shall do something to alter the present social evils and inequalities, and so prove it is really of some use in the world. I am confident the needed reforms will come—in fact the air is full of them; but I am dreadfully afraid they will come from agencies outside the church, and the church will be left high and dry.

"The church has grown selfish, without any vitality, and each member thinks only of saving his own paltry soul, oblivious to all the misery and suffering around him. A revolution is only a Reformation delayed. If the churches do not bestir themselves they will be overwhelmed by a gigantic avalanche which will sweep them away."

The warning comes too late. A new order of religious ideas and forces are in embryo, and only wait Time for development.

The Grand March Goes On.

The Pope at Rome is in deep distress. He has lately written a letter to the Cardinal Vicar, pointing out the danger of free propaganda of Protestantism in Italy. He urgently requests his holiness to strengthen the faith, and exhorts Roman Catholics to unite in lessening the danger caused by sectarianism.

Paul represents the Lord as saying: "It is hard to kick against the pricks," but the Pope does not seem to have taken counsel from "the Lord."

The truth is, the thinking world is ripe for a change from ancient modes of thought and worship. Ancient Roman paganism was well enough when all the world was barbaric. As knowledge advances superstition recedes. Protestantism, which the Pope so seriously deprecates, is an advance towards the right. It is the lesser of a great evil. But both must give way while the grand march goes on towards universal mental emancipation.

A Desirable Change.

An earnest movement is on foot to change the services on Memorial Day to the last Sunday in May, as originally contemplated by the projectors, instead of the 30th as now observed. The commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic favors the change. He objects to ball games, bicycle racing, and general merriment on that day devoted to the memory of the dead, and wants it exclusively devoted to patriotism and recalling to memory the services of those who sacrificed everything for the republic, and to preserve it one and indivisible. It was the preachers who set up a terrible howl against the "robbing God of one of his sacred days, and devoting it to the secular employment of decorating graves," that made the change. They triumphed then; but in thirty years priestcraft has lost much of its power, and we are hopeful before these pages shall go to press the Grand Encampment, in session in this city as we write, will act favorably in the premises, and that the right to honor the worthy dead on any day shall triumph over clerical demagogism.

Encourages Criticism.

Said Bishop Fallows in a baccalaureate address before the graduating class at the University of Wisconsin a while ago:

"The Bible ought to be thrown into the fire of criticism heated seven times hotter than for any other book."

Of course it should. If written, or even inspired, by a God, it ought to be faultless in every word and expression. It should be above criticism. And they who object to that criticism only display zeal for the church, and ignorance of the book they wish to hold sacred. If a God cannot write a book without errors, then that God is entitled to no more respect than erring man.

We form our estimate of the ability and honesty of an author by the books he writes. If God has written or dictated a book we can get a very good idea of his character by the perusal of his pages.

Didn't Want the Ponies.

The Argonaut tells this story of Capt. Jack, chief of the Modocs, who treacherously shot a United States military officer, whom he invited to visit his camp. Sentenced to death, a sky pilot tendered him the consolation of the gospel on the eve of his execution, and assured him that by repentance, even at that late hour, there was a chance for salvation. Receiving assurance from the priest that his own salvation was a fixed fact, the Modoc chieftain proposed to give him forty ponies if he would take the culprit's place in the little affair to come off in the morning. But this, as might be expected, the preacher declined.

An Avenging Nemesis.

The Bible is a sort of fetich sacred to all Christians, which it is considered blasphemous to ridicule. Indeed, it was a criminal offense in the old English law, and in most of the American colonies, to "speak or write loosely" of that book. We are assured that additional to the using of Bibles shipped in such large numbers to China by Bible societies, and used by them as interleaves in books of gold leaf sent us from the Flowery Kingdom, they are also employed in making the pesky fire-crackers, so popular with urchins having a superfluity of patriotism on the Fourth of July.

If sensitive Christian people in America are annoyed by the ceaseless snapping of fire-crackers at night when they would sleep, made from Bibles sent to China, and paid for to a large extent by pennies extracted from Sunday-school children, how much greater the vexation of Celestials who are teased by tales of eternal torture extracted from that same Bible before it became an avenging Nemesis, for not believing the Almighty Ruler of the Universe became the father of a son by a Jewish maiden?

Death Part of the Human Scheme.

Preachers and the religious press have exhausted their genius in depicting the horrors of death, as if that act of all others was the most to be avoided, but there is another view of the event it may be well to consider, which we quote with pleasure from the London Globe:

"To die is just as much a part of the human scheme as to be born. One is not more solemn or mysterious than the other. These two supreme events are indissolubly associated.

"It is not within the power of the human mind to regard death lightly. It is invested with a silent majesty which is strangely impressive, but it is not cruel or in any sense terrible. It comes to all with an impartiality that makes its justice beautiful. It is a false system of education which teaches the world to put aside the thought of death and to avoid its presence. The decree of nature which ordains rest for the weary, relief for the heavy laden, sleep for the tempest-tossed, an anodyne for pain, an escape from decrepitude, this can mean no misfortune or calamity to mankind."

THE GOLDEN GATE.

Notes and Comments on Affairs.

To the Editor:—Singular indeed, it seems, that Chicago, that has so often and so truly boasted of its completeness as a summer resort, should find its thermometer climbing into a condition of nineties plus, with men and animals dropping by scores, under the blaze of unmitigated heat.

Still more strange, I find myself agreeably disappointed in what I had always considered, at least, a semi-tropical climate. The thermometer has held itself at a normal temperature, and often below, during the whole season.

The early hours of the day are still, and often Old Sol brags of what he is about to do, but doesn't. At 10 o'clock the trade winds of the Pacific begin to toy gently with the foliage of our irrigated lands, and at times sweep the dust in light clouds through our streets, growing more demonstrative as the day wears on.

Sometimes the early day comes up from the east, wearing a dark gray tint of fog, thick and heavy enough to be worn. Whoever trusts to its warmth, however, will be wofully misled, for it dampens the flesh and chills to the bone. This is the peculiar lot of weather which the master and clerk have arranged for San Francisco this season. But I understand it is exceptional. The mountains and valleys, however, hold in some places concealed ingots of heat, measuring as much as 110 degrees in the shade. But these are always accompanied by cool mornings, and sleepable nights.

Really, I must say the weather of the current season has been most charming, and I could hardly realize that I was outside the usual weather limits of Chicago. But this is 1900, the year of prophecy and fulfillment. Many changes and odd conditions were expected, and our expectations are to be largely realized.

Either I am out of the whirl, or this is an exceedingly off year in politics. There is no sense of the usual exciting stir of clannish partisanship of "our side is all right, and everybody else is all wrong." Those whose business it is to manipulate the political cauldron, stir it up and scatter within it with due care the necessary ingredients for the "witches broth" that is expected to "bubble and boil," are the only ones who seem to care whether it is 16 to 1, or whether we are all of a oneness or not. Perhaps before the ides of November, they will find some means of firing the popular heart. We shall see.

The sudden passing of C. P. Huntington, the magnate who has hitherto overshadowed this fair land, in the opinion of its owners and residents, leaves us an open question whether the quality of vested interest, in other words, the policy of the "man in the saddle" can be changed to a fair-dealing business policy. Perhaps the multi-millionaire operator will soon understand, and he was quick to learn, that there are more profitable ways for sheep-raising, than to skin them alive, in securing the first crop of wool. If this be the fact, we may expect from that impetuous, persistent spirit, such abiding, forceful action as will change the Southern Pacific railway from a ravening animal to a helpful co-developer of this wonderful state. Remarkable Prophecy.

The following remarkable prediction was made by Friar Bacon, who was born in the year 1214, some 686 years ago. "Here," says a certain writer, "is poetry and philosophy wound together, forming a wondrous chain of prophecy":

"Bridges, unsupported by arches, will be made to span the foaming current. Man shall descend to the bottom of the ocean, safely breathing, and treading with a firm step on the golden sands never brightened by the light of day. Call but the secret powers of Sol and Luna into action, and behold a single steersman sitting at the helm guiding the vessel, which divides the waves with greater rapidity than if she had been filled with a crew of mariners toiling at the oars; and the loaded chariot, no longer encumbered by the panting steeds, shall dart on its course with resistless force and rapidity. Let the simple elements, do the labor; bind the eternal elements, and yoke them to the same plough."

One Step Nearer.

The good people of Finland, way up there in the extreme north of Europe, above the Baltic, and clustering around the Arctic circle, have just set an example which all the world will copy in time, when eternal Right shall triumph over cruel Wrong and Oppression. They have enfranchised women, and made them eligible to all municipal offices. This act of justice to an oppressed sex, was not asked for, and begged for, and prayed for, from year to year, but was a voluntary act on the part of Finnish men, who have suffered so long under the tyrannical rule of despotic Russia.

Keep in mind, every step away from the barbarism of the monks, is one step nearer the right, without regard to the direction, and it will ultimately lead to universal emancipation.

A Correction.

It is humiliating to be deceived by press correspondents; but we don't know any way to avoid it. Mrs. Drew, who was credited with telling of the damnable doings of Russian soldiers at Tien Tsin, in tossing babies from one to another on the points of their bayonets in presence of the murdered mothers, says there is not one word of truth in the reports; that the Russian soldiery deported themselves heroically on the occasion, and instead of acting the part of cowardly poltroons, wreaking vengeance on harmless children they were instrumental in saving a large number of lives, which without their valor, must have fallen victims to the ire of the infuriated Chinese soldiery. We gladly make the correction. It confirms our general distrust of newspaper correspondents.

WE are trying our best to establish libraries in every Spiritualist family of the United States, hence we are offering Seven valuable books as a premium. Those seven books have been sold for $10.75. A single one has sold as high as $25. The first edition of Art Magic sold for $5 per copy. As high as $15 has been paid for a single copy of Ghost Land; yet we furnish these seven books to our subscribers for $2.35, when ordered in connection with a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker. Ego Beyond Death = = By Chas. Dawbarn.

The success of the explorer depends upon his proper equipment for the task before him. It is well that the student reader should now examine to see what he has gathered as equipment for his proposed investigation of Ego in spirit life.

We have asserted and proved that intelligence and energy are associated with the most minute speck of matter of which we can conceive. Its selection of certain companions and rejection of others would, alone, satisfy every independent thinker that intelligence is necessarily active in that little speck, just so far as conditions will permit. And as intelligence, matter and energy are all there is to God, atom or man, we recognize Ego as personified in every atom. So much is clear and without possibility of dispute. But when we have left the single atom far behind, and have found it grouped into a one-cell life, there is a yet more marvelous exhibition of this truth. Each cell contains "protoplasm," or "first form" as it is called. It also contains a nucleus, with marvelous properties of its own, marking it as the home of a powerful intelligence. That is to say, it exhibits in full force the combined intelligence of the atoms of which it is composed. The scientist tells us a tale of this cell life more interesting than the most popular novel, which always uses love as its key note to attract the reader. One of these cells is a young gentleman. Here is another cell which—by nature if not by art—is posing as a young lady. Each cell contains protoplasm and a nucleus. It is a case of legal matrimony without any church blessing on the ceremony. In 1875 Oscar Hertwig watched the honeymoon, and his observations are now confirmed and accepted as facts. His experiments were made on the egg of a sea urchin. He perceived that a single cell from the father (spermatozoon) unites with the single cell (the egg) derived from the mother, whereupon the male nucleus blends with that of the female. The necessary protoplasm is then supplied from the egg mother, and we now have a single cell endowed with the marvelous property of producing another cell. This it does by division, and in 1887 Van Beneden made a most remarkable discovery, also abundantly confirmed by subsequent observers. When the male and female nuclei are approaching each other they resolve themselves into a number of little rods, called "chromosomes," of exactly the same number and shape in each. At first there are thus two independent groups of these chromosomes. Presently each chromosome splits lengthways down its middle into two equal halves, which separates and each mates with one of the other sex. They then divide equally into two new cells. There are no odd numbers. It is always ten, or twelve, or twenty, or some even number of these blended chromosomes, so that each of the cells gets its exact quantity and quality for its own coming process of reproduction.

These who want to trace these wooings and family commencements yet further are referred to a most interesting article in the International Monthly for July, 1900, by Prof. B. Wilson, of Columbia University. My object in introducing this illustration of microscopic life in its beginnings is to enforce my assertion of the dominance of individual and collective intelligence at every step of Nature's process. And, yet further, I claim that intelligence cannot be active without consciousness, although, of course, the particular form of consciousness manifested through brain may not be present. But the one who KNOWS without brain is, we may be sure, conscious of what he knows, also without brain.

Having thus marked the presence of intelligence and consciousness at every step of life's process we discover a most serious fact which must now be taken into consideration. We said in "The Size of Man" that Ego's powers necessarily reach from limit to limit of his possible vibrations. And in our last article we watched him at work in life below that of man, with an energy and intelligence born of his divine origin. He is the same Ego everywhere within his limits, but in this life below that of humanity he is gathering experiences amid vibrations which Homo cannot consciously wield or direct. There is evidently no possibility of free mental communication between lower forms of life and humanity. We discover that this lower life divides into distinct personalities, each personality consisting of experiences unshared by others save as united in Ego himself. This is a most important fact to be held in remembrance, since if Homo cannot exchange thought with those below him, by what natural process may we expect him to intelligently communicate with a higher life manifesting amid such different vibrations to his own that it has become a new personality? This is a serious and important question which the student reader must meet and answer.

We have accepted Creation as composed of intelligent Egos, blending into the numberless forms that together constitute the universe, with its infinite material phenomena. We find Homo claiming to be the most advanced and important unit in this Creation, and we recognize that no other form has evolved or is manifesting his powers. He has become master of his surroundings to a greater extent than any of the other units in earth life. His reason, however imperfect, is vastly superior to that of any other form; and in these later years he has been persistently questioning nature, and discovering forms of energy by which he could still further ennoble his manhood. From the beginning of history Homo has been seeking to know something of his own past, and what awaits him in the future. At every era such questions have been answered by Ignorance, and the answers then formulated as theology. This was inevitable. His ignorance was itself the embodied knowledge of the era in which he lived, and therefore, to him, it always appeared to be truth. Every step he gained had to be founded on his discovery of facts, which could be verified as truths. And at last some of his discoveries actually contradicted his old beliefs, and threatened his theology. For a time the priesthood always fought the new discoveries, but invariably ended by embodying them in the old teachings. In this manner theology has been gradually advancing to a higher level, as fast as Homo himself grew more manly. Theology was, so to speak, a science of man's unknown past, and equally unknown future. It presented facts that it claimed to verify. Creation, it declared, was the act of a personal God. All nature proved it. That death was the gateway to heaven or hell must be true because the same personal God said so. The strength of this theological science has always consisted in its claim that it was the only reasonable explanation of life's mysteries. If the man who doubted came to grief, that was, of course, the act of the same personal God. After ages of religious quarrels, of persistent questionings of theology, and anxious search for an absolutely true religion a cloud appeared upon the horizon. Men were born who did not trouble their heads about any form of theology, but commenced to search the sky, the land, the ocean, and write down anything new they discovered. Almost the first discovery of these men was that the earth was only a planet, and a very small one; in fact hardly a noticeable speck in the great universe. So small in fact, that only a personal creator with a microscope could be sure it was actually in existence. This threw a most serious doubt on the claim that the Creator had actually spent thirty-three years on this speck of a planet, trying to save its inhabitants from hell, and, for the most part, without appreciable success. But the sky searcher was only seeking truth, and not at all intending to attack theology. It was the discovered fact which made the priest uncomfortable. And at every step of modern progress it has been discovering facts which have exploded old beliefs.

We have already noted a few of such discoveries relating to life below man, and the proved presence of universal but individual intelligence grouping itself into form. That such facts do not fit into the creative assertions of the old theology is not the fault of the facts, but the misfortune of the inspired revelation which had denied them. There are no intelligent men and women of to-day whose religious belief is as narrow and limited as that of their ancestors. The very churches are to-day altering or suppressing their old creeds or expressions of belief, to harmonize themselves with the newly discovered facts. Such has been the result of discoveries that could be verified again and again till it was absurd to deny them. So man's original enquiry as to his own past is at last in a fair way of receiving something of an intelligent answer. We must remember it is only ignorance which falls back upon so-called "revelation." That which a man knows he does not need revealed. Man has been asking questions, and by his own discoveries has been answering them for himself, therefore he is ceasing to seek, or to ask for revealed truth.

So much has science done towards answering man's question concerning his own past, but the spirit of enquiry which seeks information concerning the future of the human race is not so easily answered. The telescope, the microscope, even the spectroscope and the X-ray cannot follow a man after he is dead. Science can tell us much of manhood before it is born, but after a funeral the most learned student can only return to his laboratory and his chased microbes, without a word of comfort for the mourners. Months or years before birth, and during mortal life science could more or less shape and ennoble manhood, but its knowledge and power was exhausted at the crematory. The learned brotherhood accepted this as a fact without dispute, and therefore roared with derision when a whisper ran around the world that the buried man was not as dead as he had been supposed to be. The scientist was not disinclined to investigate but he could not find an instrument such as he was accustomed to. When he has himself made a discovery he has called in his neighbors and shown them that with a similar instrument, and in another laboratory, they could each repeat the experiment. But the only instrument by which this asserted new discovery could be authenticated was a human sensitive, who was, by nature, utterly incapable of satisfying conditions demanded by the man who was seeking truth in the old approved way. These sensitives were themselves untrained in any scientific school, so naturally mistook phenomena that belonged to the abnormal side of the mortal for intercourse with spirits. Clairvoyance, telepathy, and the psychometric sense were offered as certain proofs of spirit return, and so accepted by enthusiastic but equally ignorant crowds. Another great obstacle to scientific investigation was that it was almost impossible to get absolute verification and identification of any returning spirit. Even granting that it might be a case of genuine spirit return, the intelligence would make contradictory statements through different sensitives, and could rarely exhibit a satisfactory control of the human instrument he was using.

In a word, the evidence that satisfied the untrained investigator that his loved one had returned was rejected by these adepts in evidence as unsatisfactory. They did not necessarily impute fraud to the sensitive but invented a new word which left that question open. Evidence was said to be "veridical" if it could be proved true, and "unveridical" when open to serious doubt.

At last certain students combined. They formed themselves into a society which should receive, gather and weigh all asserted cases of the abnormal immortal life. Through their efforts the Society for Psychical Research has done a work worthy of Science, and has already proved that the normal mortal has powers and faculties practically unknown and unclaimed before. The officers of this society have taught their fellow members to distinguish real evidence, and to reject every reported phenomena that was not carefully substantiated, and if possible by several witnesses. This society has been welcomed and aided by men and women of great intellectual gifts, but determined to take nothing for granted, nor permit an assumption not really warranted by the evidence. When facts are reported and found worthy of belief the society has done its part, and leaves its members to believe or reject inferences and conclusions.

So the explorer finds a great work already done in the realm he would explore. Just as the sun is now proved to be hurling his coronal flashes out into space, so is every mortal outstretching his form limit, and wielding faculties unknown on mart and exchange. These faculties are such as have been rarely recognized as ever belonging to mortal man, and have been viewed with suspicion all along human history, unless credited to the gods. It has been a real advance when the Society for Psychical Research has thus, to a great extent, reduced these faculties to the law and order which dominate the common-place experiences of every-day life.

The first result to the intelligent believer in spirit return has usually been to share his belief, and make him doubtful of the evidence which had converted him. Or realizing that the return of his loved ones was doubted by others as intelligent and more experienced than himself, he has kept silence, and deemed his communion too sacred for public discussion.

All this should be of great interest to the student reader. The very extension of mortal faculty so demonstrated invites him to explore and see if it extends upward and outward to vibrations amid which immortal man may dwell and manifest.

It is obvious that the intelligent student reader will not be satisfied with phenomena which cannot be discussed and investigated, because sacred to himself alone. It is useless for explorers to collect striking but solitary cases of phenomena which, not having been verified by experts in evidence, will be viewed with suspicion by every trained mind. So, for our present purpose, it will be quite sufficient to examine and analyze the experiences recorded in Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, of February, 1898, and succeeding numbers, in which certain phenomena are accepted as veridical by its numerous and influential members.

We are there introduced to a sensitive who has, for many years, been guarded, protected, and supported by officers of the Society, who have satisfied themselves that she has never attempted or practiced any deceit. Her powers have been exercised under the most favorable conditions, but always subjected to every possible scientific test. Certain intelligences, speaking or writing through this sensitive (Mrs. Piper) have welcomed these conditions, and have apparently endeavored to satisfy the scientific requirements by acceding to every reasonable request. For the purpose of the present explorer it matters not what effect has been produced on the minds of officers or members of the P. R. S., either as denial or belief in the supra mundane source of the phenomena under investigation. Mrs. Piper's chief control purported to be a Frenchman, who had practiced as a physician in his native country during his earth life. I may say, in passing, that Dr. Phinuit, as he calls himself, has failed to give any satisfactory evidence that he is really a deceased human being. Much less has he established his claim that he was a French physician, unless the first qualification of a French doctor be almost total ignorance of the French language. He cannot even offer proof that he has ever studied anatomy, physiology, or therapeutics. He has, however, apparently satisfied the officers of the Society that he is an intelligence apart from that of Mrs. Piper, but all else remains woefully uncertain. Still for several years he has often astonished visitors by giving them remarkable tests in the name of some deceased friend.

In 1892 a young man, who had been interested in these investigations, suddenly passed out by an accident, and four weeks later became prominent as an invisible visitor at the seances of Mrs. Piper. The sensitive, however, continued to be dominated by Phinuit, as a sort of commander-in-chief, who still did most of the talking. It was not long before Phinuit was startled by discovering that the hand of his medium had been writing while he himself was using her vocal organs, and talking with his customary unlearned pomposity. The writer was, or purported to be this young man, now known as George Pelham, who it seems had promised Dr. Hodgson, the master of ceremonies at these seances, that if he died first, and found himself still alive he would "make things lively" in proof of that interesting fact.

There are herein two most important points to be noted by the student reader. The first is that Phinuit did not at first know that the hand of the sensitive was writing while he himself was talking. The second, and yet more startling assertion is that George Pelham did not himself know he was writing. The exact words of the careful and experienced Dr. Hodgson are these: "It would seem, moreover, that until instructed in some way, the quasi-personality that guides the writing is unaware that he is writing." The apparent explanation in the mind of the doctor is that the intelligence merely THINKS his thoughts through the hand of the sensitive.

Messages from others than George Pelham were presently written through this hand; and it was not long before the other hand was also used. There were thus three independent intelligences expressing themselves at one time through the one mortal organism. There certainly seems no reason, from the standpoint of these experiments, why each finger and toe, and down, if you please, to each hair on the head, might not thus embody the thought of the visitor, however imperfectly it might be able to express it.

It is such facts as these, never recorded, and rarely observed by the unscientific investigator, that are all important to the equipment of the intelligent explorer, as we shall presently discover. But we are not going to ramble all over the ground thus chartered by the Society, and call ourselves explorers. Those who wish to examine the record of the experiences which have gradually convinced the skeptical Dr. Hodgson, the clear-headed F. W. Myers, the society's president, and many other members, that "spirit return" is the most rational explanation of their experiences, can study the published "Proceedings" for themselves.

We must remember there are two very distinct questions to which these investigators were seeking replies. One was "have we any proof of spirit return?" The second concerned the identity of the returning spirit visitor. To our scientific friends the question of identity seemed all-important, as involving a direct answer to their previous doubt of human immortality. Yet to us, as explorers, this question of identity will demand our investigation from quite another standpoint. Herein is involved the whole question of the existence and permanence of spirit memory.

As a most interesting illustration, throwing light on this subject, which has aroused so much comment and fierce opposition from certain of my critics, the student should note the apology by George Pelham as made to a sitter. It seems that a gentleman present claimed acquaintance with spirit George, but was not recognized. He then recalled himself to recollection by some mutual experiences. It was then that Mr. Pelham apologized for his forgetfulness, giving as his explanation that he would have remembered such incidents when he first passed over, but was "further away now."

I will here, for the present, leave the student reader to ponder over that apology and explanation that he may realize its importance to the explorer.

OUR STANDING! OUR STATE! WHICH IS IT?

To the Editor:—The Progressive Thinker, like the herald of light, life, and liberty, is so fraught with valuable instruction, and basic principles, intended for the development of human character and the unfolding of the latent powers of the soul, that this article, though written with good intent, may to many of your readers seem superfluous, and emit only the rays of a rush-light when compared with the brilliant sheen from the mental fires which glow and burn upon its pages. Yet we hope, by the exchange of views, to advance a step along the line of spiritual progress.

All do not view life and its responsibilities from the same standpoint. All are not impressed with the same thoughts, but we are all in the same race, and all hope to arrive at the same goal—peace and happiness in the second sphere of existence.

To acknowledge our "standing" or "relation" to the spirit world as taught by spiritual philosophy, and thus attract the attention of those who oppose our views, and fail to use the means for molding our lives into harmonious condition with the spirit forces, places us in a false position. The results will be moral weakness and spiritual poverty. There are two factors or agents in the system of modern Spiritualism, when united under the standard of spiritual progression, or soul development, are a unit of powers exerted by the ministering agencies who are present with mankind to elevate and establish the mental and spiritual constitution of man upon a basis as firm and enduring as eternal truth.

The first for consideration is physical phenomena, or the "kindergarten" of spiritual knowledge.

Doubtless the range or scope of such manifestations begins with the light and gentle "rap," and passes through all intervening marvels of astounding manifestations, reaching the climax of power in materializing the full forms of our so-called dead friends.

To deny these facts would be folly in the extreme, seeing that the most illustrious scholars and thinkers of the present age declare them to be demonstrated through the natural laws of the universe.

With the vast majority of people physical phenomena are the pole-star of their hope of immortality.

Now, it is evident that the physical manifestations during the past fifty-two years have laid the foundation of a system of philosophy which will shed its light upon this and all succeeding generations of men. Still it is and will remain the "foundation." It is not the beautiful "spiritual building." It is not the temple of souls, in which burns the unquenchable shekinah of spiritual truth. While modern science declares these manifestations to be probable, possible, yea, certain, still in all their varied complex operations present one general fact, that is, they reveal to us our "standing" or "relation" to immortality.

While it is a truth of great value, that many begin to build up spiritual manhood and womanhood upon this sure foundation, still the superstructure is always in accord with the philosophy, which has grown out of the facts embodied in the manifestations.

Physical phenomena to the mortal, is the mental seed, the germ of a new life, so to speak, while spiritual philosophy is the shower and the sunshine, which produces the flower and the fruit of spiritual truth—soul power.

The sublime and lofty themes of spiritual truth which has moved the world of thought to determined action, did not flow through the channels of physical mediumship, and the experience of fifty-two years ought to convince the thinking individual that we need not now look for the event.

Physical manifestations are of great value. Our senses are brought into immediate touch with that which our souls long to realize, viz.: That those who have passed into the unseen world are still alive and in a "state" of progression to higher planes of thought and activity, and that unspeakable possibilities lie in their onward and upward pathway.

The ever-increasing light of spiritual knowledge which illumines the brain and inspires the souls of our wisest teachers and authors, has its origin in the exalted intelligences of the realms of light and life, whose thoughts are impressed, or projected, not upon the mentality of the physical medium, but the brain, heart and soul of the inspired worker is aglow with the quenchless fires of life-giving truth.

As a verification of the spiritual science we so highly prize, we cannot dispense with physical phenomena. Yet it is a sad fact, and a sad hindrance to the spiritual growth of our people, that many persons of marked attainment in their field of labor as physical mediums, are so engrossed with the desire to get the dollar, that they have little, if any, regard as to the means employed to obtain it.

While many, very many, are definite in their work relative to our "standing" or "relation" to the realm of spirit—but are sadly deficient in their instructions as to our "state" or spiritual condition. And not only so, it does not seem to be within the power of returning spirits, through physical mediumship as a rule (there are exceptions) to convey the required information that will develop the soul and elevate it in strength and vigor, and lift it into the mental and moral atmosphere which our spiritual "state" requires.

'Tis true our friends bring messages of love and consolation to many despairing souls. Their words are always seasoned with admonitions for our improvement, but the absence of any definite line of action characterizes nearly the whole volume of such communications.

What seems most prominent in all who anxiously seek the service of the physical medium is, to establish, yea, re-establish in the mind the fact of their "standing" or "relation" to immortality.

When doubts assail those who depend upon their senses of sight and hearing, the readiest means to allay their fears seems to be in an appeal to physical manifestations.

It is rare that such anxious doubting ones turn to the clear and definite principles as are set forth by our broadest and deepest teachers and thinkers, and thus learn the cause and cure of their doubts and fears.

There is now a vast ocean of spiritual literature, with broad and deep streams of spiritual truth flowing into its basins, whose waters are intended by the spirit forces, who have unsealed the crystal fountain, for the healing of the peoples, and preparing them to enter more fully into the blessings of their true spiritual "state" as candidates for citizenship in the realm of exalted immortality.

The near future may reveal the fact that physical phenomena will be partially if not altogether withdrawn.

This great boon to humanity has not been used with the sacredness it merits. It has become too commonplace. It is received too lightly by thousands who seek after it, a desire to gain knowledge relative to "stock jobbing" or "options" on the Board of Trade, of how and when to buy goods cheap and sell them at great profit, what horse will win the Derby? Anything and everything which contributes to the depraved appetites and sensual desires of erring humanity are sought at the private seance with the physical medium.

Will not such prodigality in the use and waste of spiritual gifts bring darkness, poverty and a dearth in true physical manifestations?

Not that physical phenomena will cease—but that which is reliable will become rare, as the unreliable is encouraged.

There are millions of undeveloped, and hence untruthful spirits who will continue to communicate with mortals through selfish and untruthful mediums. We do not think that those two classes will withdraw from the field.

To the Spiritualist who can claim the experience of years in spiritual truth, the well attested fact of spirit return should be sufficient to induce the individual to move along a line of higher aspiration in search of truth upon a loftier plane, from whence alone flows the light required by each and all to ascend in safety the rugged steps of the "Spiritual Alps," whose clear and bracing atmosphere brings to the soul harmonious conditions and a healthy spiritual "state."

While words of recognition, messages of love and consolation, with the endorsement of the spiritual philosophy, yet it has not been—it is not now—and one is impressed with the thought that it never will be, the proper channel for soul development.

The entire family of mankind stand in the same plane of "relation" to immortality—but all do not move in the same plane of moral and spiritual action. So let us endeavor to distinguish between "standing" or "relation," and "state" or condition.

Our state or condition depends altogether upon the quality of the mental impressions received and acted upon, because every mental, moral and spiritual impulse will either mar or beautify the soul—our future spirit body.

There is no condition or circumstance between the cradle and the grave which can in the least particular affect our "standing" or "relation" to immortal life. The true meaning of the term "Spiritualist" pertains to any individual who is in pursuit of truth which exalts the soul and spirit into the atmosphere of spiritual thought and harmony with spirit intelligences who develop and strengthen the forces of the soul.

This does not imply "living in the clouds," as some assert, or "one world at a time," as many say.

Now, if we think correctly, from what has been demonstrated, we will find that there is but one world within the compass of our thoughts or "relation," and it is governed by spiritual law, enforced by spiritual agencies.

We cannot in the nature of our "relation" to immortality receive any other life than that we now possess! It is true that that life can be developed upon a higher plane of action, and the crudities of mental and moral environments, which often dwarf and defile the latent forces of that life, can be removed by the light and power of spiritual truth. The life thus purified is strengthened and beautified, but it is one and the same life, acting in harmony with the laws of the one spirit world.

The second factor or agent of power in modern Spiritualism is worthy of careful and earnest consideration, and lies within the mental grasp of all, both rich and poor. It is the "Philosophy of Spiritualism."

Its source lies at the fount of man's life. A knowledge of its simple yet potent principles opens the rich mines of spiritual treasure. To follow its lead turns the human soul from the darkness of ignorance, and its light delivers mankind from the power of sin, and translates them into the light and liberty of eternal truth.

Its searching energies penetrates all barrens, which entomb and bind the soul in superstitious fears, and mental and moral slavery. It is the emancipator, the savior of mankind. It is the spiritual "sun of righteousness" with healing for body and soul upon its white wings. There is nothing mysterious or superstitious within its vast compass, nothing which causes doubt to darken the receptive soul; but if we expect to reap the benefit of this thoroughly reforming and purifying agency, we must look well to the interior selfhood, to our "state" or spiritual condition.

This peerless philosophy has its deep and eternal foundation in demonstrated facts. It does not rest upon the dicta of councils, manuscripts, nor ancient traditions. It treats upon facts pertaining to the development of body, soul and spirit—and not only so, but it opens the way from the lowest stratum of human society, in its sufferings and failures in earth life, even to the peaceful homes, and exalts centers of spiritual wisdom, love and power in the realm of immortality. The brilliant fires of inspiration, which burn and glow in the brain and soul of our worthy and talented teachers and writers, is to-day reflected in the loves of millions of men, women and children, whose interior has been illuminated, renovated and beautified, thus bringing them into the atmosphere which pulsates in harmony with the exalted intelligences who project their thoughts upon them, and aiding them in making conditions to improve the spiritual "state."

As Spiritualists, the question of immortality, or our "standing" or "relation" to the spirit realm should have no place in our faith or hope—because it is a veritable fact.

But the vital question which enters every human soul should be deeply pondered, and the house wherein dwells the immortal selfhood should be "set in order," not that "thou shalt die and not live," but because we shall live and not die.

We are moving rapidly onward to a country densely populated by billions of human souls, who once lived and suffered here, some of them our own friends. They are awaiting our arrival. Are we in a spiritual "state" in which we would feel at home there?

Have we studied the ethics of spirit society sufficient to make us presentable? Has the aura emanating from the interior selfhood been sufficiently purified from the dark bands of selfishness, and the red lines of depraved passion, to attract the pure, the wise and the good who now stand upon the plane of spiritual progression?

It will not be a question as to how much we know of the complex laws which produce physical phenomena. But what are we in moral and spiritual manhood and womanhood?

Have we, so far as we had opportunity, sought the truth in its proper channel? Have we laid aside the "weights" and "besetting sins," and dug as deeply into the rich mines of spiritual truth which lies open and inviting in the pages of spiritual books and papers?

Or, are we floating along with the tide of liberal thought, exulting in the fact of our "standing" and neglecting our duties and obligations which pertain to our present moral and spiritual "state?"

SCIENCE OF THE SOUL

BY

LOREN ALBERT SHERMAN.

Sets forth the Philosophy of Existence, with detailed evidence. It appeals to Christians and Spiritualists alike, as it demonstrates the truth of the spirit manifestations of Jesus Christ, upon which the Christian religion is based, as well as the actuality of modern spirit manifestations. Its title page claims that the book is

A SCIENTIFIC DEMONSTRATION of the Existence of the soul of man as his conscious individuality independently of the physical organism; of the CONTINUITY OF LIFE and the ACTUALITY OF SPIRIT RETURN.

The first eleven chapters are devoted entirely to manifestations of the soul incarnate, with a clear exposition of the psychic philosophy.

The succeeding four chapters set forth the philosophy of the Infinite.

The last twenty chapters are devoted to an exposition of spiritual philosophy, with evidence in detail, much of it being personal experiences of the author.

The price of the book is $1. For sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker.

WE call special attention to The Next World Interviewed, one of our special premiums. We are enabled to furnish it to our readers at the price announced in our premium list, from the simple fact that Mr. Horn donated the plates of the book to us. We have sent out thousands of copies of this book, and it has been well received everywhere. It should be circulated by the millions among all classes of Spiritualists. The seven books that we are offering to Spiritualists as premiums contain a large storehouse of useful knowledge on Spiritual and Occult subjects. You should have them on the shelves of your library where you can have access to them at any time. Read carefully our premium announcement.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require. Every item sent to us for publication, should contain the full name and address of the writer. We desire to know the source of every item that appears. This rule will be strictly adhered to.

The Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature holds services every Sunday evening at Nathan's hall, 1565 Milwaukee avenue, corner Western avenue, at 7:30. Mrs. M. Summers, pastor.

Rev. J. O. M. Hewitt, quite widely known as a Unitarian minister, an able speaker and cultured gentleman, is open for engagements by Spiritual societies, or for funeral or other services. He may be addressed at 498 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill.

Mr. and Mrs. John Lindsey, of Grand Rapids, Mich., write: "We will be at 51 Olga street, Chicago, next Friday. We have just finished the work we had in view, returning here from Waukesha last Monday. Our appointments were so interfered with on account of the rainy weather that much anticipated work for our cause had to be cancelled, but taking it all together we can safely call our efforts a success."

The Omaha Daily Bee of August 27 has the following: "West Point, Neb., August 26.—Miss Mattie Hayes of Wisner, has been under examination by the Board of Insanity this week. Her malady seems to be hallucinations on the subject of Spiritualism. She is an unmarried woman, a school teacher and the owner of a valuable farm. She has predicted various fires and other calamities, which have taken place precisely as she has foretold. Insanity is hereditary in the family. She is 44 years old. She was adjudged insane and will be sent to Norfolk on Monday." It will be in order for the Spiritualists of Nebraska to investigate this case. If actually insane she would not be able to make such wonderful prophecies.

Will C. Hodge reports a successful season, and a splendid camp at Delphos, Kans. He is visiting friends in Rockford for a short season, when he will return to Chicago. Can be addressed for engagements at 40 Loomis street.

H. J. More can be addressed at 2979 Walnut street, Chicago, for engagements, during October, November and December. He and Mr. Hilles will travel together.

Peter Anderson, of Tacoma, Wash., sends us a club of subscribers from that city, and is thus doing a good work for Spiritualism.

Mrs. Amanda Coffman's engagements are as follows: Lake Brady, Aug. 29 to Sept. 2;the last four Sundays of Sept., Toledo, Ohio; November and December, Watertown, N. Y. Address through September, 603 Nebraska avenue, Toledo, Ohio; permanent address, 173 N. Union street, Grand Rapids, Mich. Will answer calls to officiate at funerals.

H. L. Chapman writes: "It seems strange to me that so few of the Spiritualists take any Spiritual papers. I find well-to-do people calling themselves Spiritualists who do not take any Spiritualist paper. Why cannot Spiritualists interest themselves everywhere in securing subscribers. It will surely assist the cause and educate the people." Not one Spiritualist out of a dozen pays one cent towards supporting a Spiritualist paper. Even many mediums themselves do not even subscribe for a Spiritualist paper. Hundreds of them in Boston, New York, St. Louis, Cincinnati, and other large cities, do not pay a single cent to support the Spiritualistic press, although they are extremely anxious to have their names mentioned in the same.

Helen Wilmans appropriates the whole of "Size of Man," for her paper, "Freedom," without giving the author, Charles Dawbarn, any credit. No doubt it was an oversight.

The annual business meeting of the New England Spiritualist camp-meeting association was held in the temple, Judge Dailey presiding. The reports of the clerk and treasurer were read and approved. The treasurer's report showed a decrease in the debt of about $1,400. Action was taken to raise money to still further reduce the indebtedness of the association, committees being appointed for that purpose. Considerable sums have already been subscribed. It is anticipated that there will be a substantial reduction of the indebtedness during the current year. A proposition was made to lease the old auditorium for a term of years for theatrical purposes, but the project did not meet with the approval of the association, leading members being apprehensive that it would detract from the attendance at the lectures and other entertainments of the association, and would bring to the grounds an undesirable element, thus resulting in serious injury to the place. It was suggested that in the near future the temple be enlarged, whereby a stage with necessary conveniences to accommodate such attractions would be in order, under the supervision of the association. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Vice-presidents, H. A. Budington, Mrs. A. S. Waterhouse, F. B. Woodbury; treasurer, Byron Loomis; clerk, A. P. Blinn; directors, A. H. Dailey, D. P. Barber, Mrs. A. E. Barnes, K. D. Childs, Miss M. A. Westcott, L. F. Crafts, W. W. Lee, H. S. Streeter.

Moses Hull passed through the city last week to fill engagements at Wheaton, Minn., Seattle, Wash., and Nanaimo, B. C. He will give them a rich intellectual feast.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Here is a story from Buffalo that seems to be difficult to duplicate for heathenish business: An organist in a certain Buffalo church is said to have had a contract with the church trustees whereby he gave the congregation the benefit of his services for a certain sum. When his year was up they owed him $37.50. Being unable to collect it in any other way he brought suit for the amount. The church was defended by a lawyer who, among other defenses, set up the fact that the alleged work was performed on Sunday, that it was neither necessary nor charitable, and that consequently under the State law the plaintiff could not ask for a judgment. It would be well for the shepherd of that estimable flock to collect his modest stipend strictly in advance.

E. W. Sprague and wife, speakers, platform, message and test mediums, are open for engagements for the last two Sundays in September and the Sundays of October and November. Address them at Lloyd, Ohio, care of Bessie Woodward, until September 9; after that time, and until September 16, at Middlefield, Ohio. Their home address is 618 Newland aveune, Jamestown, N.Y., from which point mail will always be forwarded to them.

T. S. Russell writes: "The meetings of the Englewood Spiritual Union, 420 West Sixty-third street, have continued to grow in interest with each succeeding meeting, and while many of our people have visited the different camps the reserve force at home have pushed ahead in the work. Since last writing you we have had excellent platform work done by Harry J. More, S. P. Cady, H. C. Andrews and other earnest speakers. We are highly pleased to note the recent development of one of our own sister members, Mrs. Riley. Her tests from the platform are equaled by few, and the Thursday meetings of the Ladys' Auxiliary under her and Mrs. Harrington, are the best weekday meetings we have ever attended. We take this opportunity to advise with all earnestness every society to start a weekday meeting. You will find that people that go to some church on Sunday will be glad to attend these meetings. Many women whose husbands are too creed-bound to go to hear the truth can find this weekday opportunity a blessing to them while their narrow-minded liege lords are down town. Try it, and you will be surprised at the happy result. Mrs. L. N. Claman begins a series of services with us again September 2. A lawn social will be given at 6250 Wabash avenue, Saturday evening, September 8. Admission free. Good music, entertainment, refreshments, readings, tests, etc. Come and have a good time."

The Chicago Times-Herald says: "Dr. Hoffman, who has been constantly in attendance since yesterday morning, says that Edward E. Balch, assistant cashier of the Omaha National Bank, who was so mysteriously assaulted and robbed of $50 in money and two drafts for a like amount while sleeping in a Pullman car en route over the Northwestern from Chicago to Omaha early yesterday morning, will live. The mystery surrounding the case has not been dispelled. Balch has not been able to tell a coherent story of the assault. The attending physician will not permit him to talk. A remarkable phase of the case was disclosed to-day. At the moment when the train was passing Grand Junction, a station east of Boone, Mrs. Balch awakened with a start from a hideous nightmare, in which she had dreamed that she saw her husband struggling desperately in the grasp of armed men. She heard the cries for help, but was unable to assist him. She rubbed her eyes and looked fearfully about. The dream had been horribly real. Above the roar of the train she caught the sound of a groan coming from the berth opposite. The frightened woman caught the curtains back, and the next moment a shrill scream of terror rang through the car, arousing the passengers from their slumbers and bringing the porter and the conductor from the smoking apartment. Miss Redington, a passenger, said she was awakened by a man thrusting a dark lantern into her face as she lay in the berth."

Mrs. Juliet H. Severance, M. D., whom the old workers in the spiritual cause will remember as a brilliant speaker and hard worker for humanity, has been confined to her bed for the last two months. She wishes to thank the friends who have given her help and sympathy at this critical time. Her daughter was obliged to give up her business in New York to attend her. She can be addressed at 6118 Drexel avenue, Chicago.

Mary Burrows writes from Detroit, Mich.: "A corrected list of the coming dates for the balance of the union course of summer lectures at Occult Temple, is as follows: September 4 and 5, Carrie E. S. Twing; September 9, W. V. Nicum; September 23 and 25, Georgia Gladys Cooley; October 21, Dr. A. B. Spinney."

J. W. Kenyon writes: "Mrs. J. W. Kenyon lectured and gave tests at Hopkinton, Mass., in Claftin's grove, July 24. She was greeted by large audiences and gave many tests. The audience was mostly composed of Christians who had never before been to a spiritualist meeting, and to them the tests were given, so that a deep impression was created. The management re-engaged her and Mr. Kenyon for August 19, on which occasion there was a very large increase in the numbers present. Mr. Kenyon lectured for an hour on 'What Immortality Implies' in the forenoon, and 'What Good is Spiritualism' in the afternoon. Following each lecture Mrs. Kenyon gave tests—all fully recognized. In the evening Dr. Monroe's parlors were crowded, in Milford, Mass., and for two hours tests and messages were given that filled all hearts with great happiness. Mr. and Mrs. Kenyon serve the same society September 2. They have had large meetings every evening in Phyllis Hall, and many have been convinced of the truth of Spiritualism. The number of circles held here nightly have been legion, but the work of the mediums of most of these have not been convincing, but puzzling to the seeker after spiritual truth. If only good mediums came before the people in public our cause would spread more rapidly and greater happiness result therefrom; but there seems no way to control the work. Spiritualism is so grand a truth that it seems able to maintain itself against great odds. Societies can address Mrs. J. W. Kenyon, a public test medium and lecturer, at Onset, Mass., Box 166."

We keep a standing notice on this page that every item sent here for publication must contain the full name and address of the writer, otherwise it will not appear. That accounts for "your" item not appearing this week.

May F. Ayres, of Lansing, Mich., writes: "The eighth annual convention of the Michigan State Spiritualist Association convened at Briggs Park Camp, August 14, continuing over the following Sunday with a mass convention. The prominent speakers present who assisted: Dr. A. B. Spinney, Lyman C. Howe, Mrs. M. C. Lincoln and Mrs. Lee Norie Claman taking charge N. S. A. day. Mrs. Jessie Stockton, of Lansing, a talented elocutionist, gave a fine entertainment. Complimentaries were given to two hundred veteran soldiers from the Soldiers' Home. Officers elected for the ensuing year: President, John Hutchinson, Jackson; vice-president, Martha E. Root, Bay City; secretary, May F. Ayres, Lansing; treasurer, C. A. Clement, Lansing. Trustees, W. R. Alger, Flint; A. E. Steygall, Owosso; and Nellie S. Baade, Detroit. Delegates to N. S. A., Dr. B. O'Dell, Paw Paw; May F. Ayres, Lansing."

The Democrat, of Muncie, Ind., says: "There is no new State Spiritualist Association organized, regardless of the newspaper stories to the contrary. According to reports that have been filling the air, Captain Dave Kilgore was to be the head and shoulders of the new association and its grounds to be located in a grove on his farm. Captain Kilgore is in Anderson to-day and was questioned about the matter. He had not heard of the proposed new organization only in a sort of general way. Captain Kilgore said he is a member of the present association and expects to remain with it. He told some people who were talking about the needs of a new association that he had a splendid grove that could be utilized for camp grounds. That is as deep into the transaction as he has ever delved."

W. M. Smith writes from Toledo, Ohio: "The Independent Association of Spiritualists, having procured a charter as a religious body from the Secretary of State, will open the season on the 9th of September, with Mrs. Amanda Coffman, of Grand Rapids, Mich., for September, to be followed by Mrs. Julia Steelman Nichols for October. Since my last communication two of our old Spiritualists and workers have passed to spirit life, Sisters Eshenroder and Jonson, both of whom will be greatly missed by the Spiritualists of Toledo. We hope to duplicate the success of last season, both financially and spiritually."

The Grand Rapids (Mich.) Press says: "The closing exercises of the Spiritualists' camp-meeting were held with an audience of about 250 persons present. The summer meeting was not successful from a financial point of view and the management is out something in the neighborhood of $900, it is said. The main reason assigned for this loss is that the meeting lasted too long to hold the interest of the paying public. The exercise yesterday morning and afternoon consisted of lectures by Lyman C. Howe, of Fredonia, N. Y., and Mrs. Cecil Lincoln, of Buffalo. In the evening all the mediums in camp united in a grand test seance. The management states that another camp will be held at Briggs Park next year despite the poor financial outcome of the camp just ended."

J. E. Dura writes from Michigan: "The premium books arrived safe and in good condition. I feel very proud of them, and consider them very valuable to any one who is seeking knowledge of a future life. They cover the ground completely, and are quite easily understood by any one. Spiritualists who do not take advantage of securing these very valuable books at so low a price, are making a great mistake."

Fred L. Hayden writes from Washington: "A few days ago I received the three volumes of the Encyclopedia of Death all right and in first-class condition. I want to thank you, but my vocabulary is too limited to express in words my appreciation, for when looked at through physical eyes and from a financial standpoint, there is nothing in it for you, and it seems to me you must be losing money by it. I am deep in the first volume. I expect a spiritual and intellectual treat in those books. The spiritual philosophy is comparatively new to me, but I think it a natural, reasonable and beautiful philosophy."

Wm. Dorman writes from Caldwell, Idaho: "Hon. A. B. Richmond's lecture is a good one to send to my Methodist friends. Your Progressive Thinker and those wonderful spiritual books that you are sending out will do more good to instruct man in the truth than all the priests, monks and preachers combined. Why is it that Idaho is so neglected by our mediums? A good, honest lecturer and test giver could do a great deal of good here and make more money than in the East."

Mrs. S. E. Wood writes: "We would like the world to know that although Spiritualism in this vicinity has for years been subjected to the ridicule and persecution of its Christian adversaries, it still lives and its prospects were never brighterthan at present in Northeastern Ohio. The Spiritualist Union Society of Ashtabula county held a two days' meeting at Luce's beautiful grove, Kingsville, Ohio, August 25 and 26, at which they were privileged to listen to the profound logic and matchless oratory of that prince of Bible scholars, our honored brother Moses Hull. May he long be spared to fight in the cause of truth. The good he has done shall 'live after him.' His discourses were followed by fine psychometric tests and character delineations by that refined and gentlemanly medium and psychometrist, Mr. Victor Wyldes, of England. These two gentlemen held the strict attention of the large audience, and should they ever visit us again we predict for them a much larger attendance, for they have aroused public thought in this vicinity."

Dr. B. O'Dell writes: "They had a very successful camp at Grand Ledge, Mich., with good attendance, with assurance that they will have a better array of talent and a larger attendance next year."

The Boston Herald says: "The National Spiritualists' Association held its annual meeting at Onset Camp, and it was largely devoted to raising cash subscriptions for the Mayer fund for a national home. The methods of Dr. Simpson at Old Orchard Beach were emulated in part by H. D. Barrett, the president of the National Association. There was a large audience, as the camp ground is full of people, and enthusiasm over the object to be attained was high. Mr. Barrett explained that Mr. Mayer had offered to devote a $12,000 lot and building for the proposed national home for decrepit Spiritualists, with the proviso that $10,000 should be subscribed in cash by the Spiritualists of America for the maintenance of the home. He described how $9,000 has been raised of the necessary $10,000 during the past year, and said that it is necessary to raise the balance between now and October 1. President Barrett announced that the necessary $671 will undoubtedly be raised during the next week, as he expects to visit several camp-meetings after leaving Onset Bay, and he has great expectations of success among the Spiritualists of Maine, whence he will go from here."

B. B. Hill, a prominent Spiritualist of Philadelphia, was in the city during the recent G. A. R. encampment.

Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, whose influence and personality have been so marked in every convention of the National Spiritualists' Association, was in the city last week enjoying the wonderful sights of a crowded city that was under the control of the G. A. R.

Emma M. Nutt-Moore, trance speaker and medium, is open for engagements for the fall and winter months. Address her at Chesterfield, Ind.

The Bangs Sisters have returned home from their summer trip and will be pleased to see their friends and patrons at their home, 654 West Adams street.

John W. Wray, a prominent lawyer and Spiritualist, of Fort Worth, Texas, has been in the city on business. He is one of the leading lights of our cause in Texas.

Mrs. Lilly LeSieur writes: "The euchre party given by the Band of Harmony, Thursday evening, August 30, at their rooms, 608 Handel Hall Building, was well attended, but owing to the hot weather, our party was not as large as usual, but sufficient for eight tables. Our next Band of Harmony, Thursday, September 6. We have an interesting programme, besides a letter from Ouina that will be read. Mrs. Richmond will be with us the following Band, September 20, the third Thursday of the month."

There have been thousands of prophecies from mediums and others that President McKinley will be re-elected. There has also been the same number of prophecies from a like source that Mr. Bryan will be elected. Astrologists have predicted the election of both. None of these prophecies are worthy of mention from whatever source they originate.

Kate Wheeler writes: "I wish to call attention to Baryton, Mich., as a good field for some good medium or lecturer. I am the only one here who takes a Spiritualist paper. A year ago a man came here, claiming to be a materializing medium, but he wanted each one to pay a dollar before he would do anything. He did not give any satisfaction to the people."

Mrs. and Mrs. M. Buchanan send to this office under date of September 1, the following dispatch from Marshalltown, Iowa: "Good opening for materializing medium here. Can do well. None at camp. Deliver this message to Mrs. Tripp. Would like her to come at once." We do not know where Mrs. Tripp is located, hence could not deliver the message. Will some good materializing medium respond?

Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Perkins write: "The friends and general public will notice that we have changed our location to 884 West Madison street, cor. Leavitt street, where we have ample accommodations for private readings, developing, etc. Test circles Friday evenings. We desire to organize a developing class for Tuesday evenings, also Thursday afternoons. Our regular Wednesday evening meetings, Larrabee and Garfield avenue, will continue. Our Sunday evening meetings will be during September at our residence. Let us hear from every one desiring our services, at once."

The indefatigable worker, Will C. Hodge, sent us a large list of subscribers from the Delphos camp.

Mrs. Emmliss Blake writes from 369 S. Division street, Grand Rapids, Mich.: "I am open for engagements for the fall and winter months to give platform tests. I have just closed a successful engagement at Briggs Park camp."

Mrs. M. A. McHatton writes from Texas: "With much pleasure I acknowledge the receipt of the three volumes of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, you so kindly sent."

Letter from Lyman C. Howe.

Camps are closed in these parts, and those I have served, six in all, have seemed in a healthy, growing condition. The Briggs Park meeting can hardly be called a camp, for there is nothing to make it permanent. But the people are permanent institutions. Even death does not change the great reality. The people may select new ground and establish a camp that will live and grow.

Dr. Spinney made a splendid speech the day I arrived, and the mediums usually did well.

Grand Ledge is a model of good work, good folks, and good will. It is a growing testimonial for all that is best in Spiritualism, and has the sympathy and co-operation of the town. A new apartment house is planned and $600 were pledged to build it when I left. It is to have sixteen family apartments, where the occupants can keep house, and a whole family be made happy during the camp season.

The week preceding August 20 was said to be the most prosperous in the history of the camp.

At Island Lake also a new deal and new awakening are in evidence. Hon. J. H. White is now president, and he has done much to establish the camp on an enduring basis. Cottages increase and are of a creditable character.

Prof. Hudson's music is a great attraction. He was a pupil of James G. Clark, and a companion with the Hutchinsons, and his music sounds more like that of J. G. Clark than any other I have heard.

I read with much interest the article by Lucretius in the last Progressive Thinker and may have something to say of the ideas advanced later.

Lilian Whiting's letter is full of interest and suggestions. Some themes she sets forth strikes me as open to doubt. But facts are obstinate. Of course she and others who have been so favored by Mrs. Piper, regard her as about the only reliable medium. But we have had scores of others as good, since Spiritualism dawned.

The Psychic Research Society has done much good, and I am in full sympathy with its exact methods.

Truth has nothing to fear from critical examination and thorough sifting.

Lily Dale closed Sunday evening with a rousing love feast. Many got their first lesson there this year, and went away rejoicing.

I am open to calls for society work this fall and winter.

VOLUME 1 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World treats of the "Mythical Origin of Death;" "A Magdalen's Passage to Spirit Life;" "Impressive Communications from the Spirit Side of Life;" "Death Considered by the Spirit Lucretius;" "Oddities in Reference to the Dead;" "Death from a Vibratory Force;" "The Day After Death Beautifully Illustrated;" "Sensations of the Dying;" "A Birth Out of Dark Conditions;" "After Death Experiences of an Avaricious Man;" "A Special Visit to the Spirit World;" "Fragrance at a Child's Death Bed;" "The Varied Experiences of a Humanitarian Spirit;" "The Impressive Testimony of an Exalted Spirit;" "Indications of the Process of Dying;" "The Idosyncrasies of Death;" "Life and Death Thoughtfully Analyzed;" "Signs in the Process of Dying," etc., etc. In fact this volume is a mine of valuable infor-

Summerland, California.

The Spiritual Association of this place commenced its yearly assembly meetings at Liberty Hall, Sunday, Aug. 26, and closed Sunday, Sept. 2. The program was well arranged and carried out and gave general satisfaction from first to last. Mrs. Spring, chairwoman of the association, presided at each of the sessions with her usual good judgment and grace, and harmony and good feeling prevailed.

The opening discourse was delivered by Prof. J. S. Loveland, and his lecture was a masterly effort. His lecture treated of the present condition of the times, and the crisis pending politically and religiously, closing with a grand peroration, eloquent and sublime. Prof. Loveland has no peer in the spiritual ranks as a speaker or writer, as his published works show, and the societies which employ him have reason to congratulate themselves as having an able advocate for scientific and philosophical Spiritualism. Los Angeles camp-meeting has secured him for its coming camp-meeting next September, the first Sunday in that month, and this shows the good results of his work done there last summer, notwithstanding the cry from the pseudo Spiritualists there that his lectures were too materialistic in tone and treatment.

The speakers here during the assembly were Allen F. Brown, of Texas; Mrs. E. R. Nickless, of Chicago, and both did excellent service as speakers and psychometrists. Mr. Brown is comparatively new in the work, but if his efforts here is a sample he has a great field of useful work before him.

The Children's Progressive Lyceum was one of the leading features of the Sunday's exercises, as conducted by John C. Darling, and their well-drilled exercises in calisthenics and marching with silken banners was a picturesque scene never to be forgotten by those who for the first time witnessed a Spiritual Sunday-school. The hall was completely filled with flowers, vines and palms, and presented a scene of a woodland bower. All praise is due to the untiring labor and skill of the society ladies, who seemed never to tire in the good work. God bless the ladies.

BISHOP A. BEALS.

Island Lake Camp, Mich.

D. P. Dewey came and greeted us with his smiles, poured out to us of his eloquence and spiritual thoughts, and left behind him many lessons we can ponder over long after the camp closes. A more practical, spiritual lecturer never came out of the ranks of materialism. We are confident that wherever he goes, good practical lessons will be left behind him. On the 24th the campers gave him a god-speed.

To-day ushers into our midst those magnetic workers, Mr. and Mrs. Kates, who commence to-day and give us of their best thoughts and spiritual unfoldment until the 30th, when Carrie E. S. Twing will be with us until the close of the camp on the 3d of September. The time between lectures is filled up with lively discussion at conferences, circles and dances.

The Ladies' Auxiliary is now putting forth its best efforts, and is well organized for a good winter's work, with M. St. Omer Briggs at their head.

One new cottage has been erected, and will be dedicated this evening. Others are in embryo awaiting the coming of next spring. No cleaner spot with its magnificent lake and groves, good water and fresh air, can be found for the building of a summer home, where the physical can be restored to health, and spiritual unfoldment combined.

J. W. BRIGGS.

Franklin Camp, Neb.

The fifth annual camp of the Southwest Nebraska and Northwest Kansas Spiritualists Association was attended with very great success. From very small beginnings this camp has gradually grown into public favor and considering its remote distance from any large city the attendance is remarkably good. The few scattered adherents to the spiritual philosophy have reason to be proud of the result of their struggles in endeavoring to plant the seed of true Spiritualism upon the western prairies. This year's camp was pronounced by all visitors the best in the history of the association and the promoters are to be congratulated..

The workers present who contributed to the success of the meeting were quite numerous and as we do not believe in singling out any particular ones as greater than the rest, we will simply give the names and special phases of mediumship. Mrs. Laura B. Payne, of Topeka, Kans., inspirational singer, musician and speaker. Mrs. Clara Ferris, of Lincoln, Mrs. M. J. Bonney, of Blair, and Mrs. Annie Gillette, of Omaha, all good test mediums in their varied forms of giving messages, etc. Prof. Dunton, of Lebanon, Kans., a veteran speaker and test medium. C. H. Moody, of Otego, Kans., James Campbell, of Havelock, Neb. Paul S. Gillette, of Omaha, D. W. Hull, of Norton, Kans., each one in his own way sowing seeds for future growth. Then we had a good lecture by the worthy secretary of the camp, C. H. Simpson, of Franklin. Harry Davis and Mr. Shelburn, Jr., of Atlanta, gave discourses on Young People's day, which has been previously reported. Mr. E. F. Barrows, test medium and Mr. Louis Dunton, healer, both of Lebanon, Kans., were present and did good work. As to myself, I was called upon to preside on several occasions, also gave some lectures and a few tests in the morning circles which were a feature of the camp. Mr. C. H. Davis, of Franklin, Neb., gave valuable assistance in some of the circles, and took charge of the refreshment stand.

The very best of music was furnished by the Reeves family, of Asherville, Kans.

Last, but not least, we must mention the genial president, Mr. Shelburn, of Atlanta, who was frequently on his feet defending the principles of our cause. A new feature at the camp this year was a medium for materialization and slate-writing, W. W. Aber of Spring Hill, Kans., who was accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Sallie Aber. These workers were the first physical mediums who have been engaged at this camp. As far as we were able to see every worker present was strictly honorable in the practice of their sacred trust, and all had the best interests of Spiritualism at heart while working in their various lines of mediumship. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson, of Franklin, had charge of the dining tent and catered to the hungry with general satisfaction.

Mr. D. L. Haynes and wife were always on the alert looking out for the comfort and convenience of the campers.

The dances three times a week were the means of bringing numbers of young people to the camp who would probably have been absent had it not been for the amusement provided.

THE N. S. A.

Amendments and Other Important Matters.

To the Editor:—Fraternal greetings to you and your constituents from the N. S. A. We thank you for your continued courtesy to this association, and trust that the utmost of recognition of your service to humanity in every way will be accorded to you at all times.

The forthcoming convention at Cleveland in October, promises to be a great meeting for the Spiritual cause, and we assert that all who attend will be thankful that they did not remain away. I call the attention of those who intend to be present to the importance of securing railroad tickets on the certificate plan, and urge all to do so, that we may satisfy the special agent who will be at the convention the 19th, to sign the certificates. I also request the friends to apply to the stations in their localities, in time to give the agents opportunity to procure the certificates for them, if they are not kept on hand.

The headquarters of the convention will be at the Forest City House, a handsome, and well-kept hotel, where every attention will be given the guests.

The special rates of two dollars per day, each person, is a concession well appreciated.

The Mayer fund is slowly increasing; we trust that all who have pledged to it, will send in the amounts as soon as possible; we also are to raise about a thousand dollars to fill the fund, and it is desirable that this be done by Oct. 1. All donations thankfully received. We have on sale several hundred copies of "Violets," the pretty booklet of poems; they are well worth the price of 25 cents per copy. Each copy sold aids the Home fund. We also have a very few copies of a photograph—cabinet size—of Katie Foy, and her two little sons. The mother and one son have passed from earth, the other son still lives; he, too, is a fine medium, inheriting the powers of his mother and her family. We will sell these pictures at 50 cents each.

The letters we receive on the Mayer fund are cheering and encouraging. One from Comanche, Tex., containing a second generous donation, has the following. "I am going to try and contribute as much as ten dollars a year to the National Association. It strikes me that if we as Spiritualists expect to accomplish anything, we must have organization. We must begin at the beginning and work systematically and persistently. The N. S. A. was certainly a move in the right direction; it meets my hearty support—approval. We want to sustain it, and as our cause grows, and gains strength and momentum we can organize and sustain State and camp-meeting associations, send out literature and missionaries. Our Spiritualist papers, I regard as very important factors, they deserve much better patronage than they get."

Before closing, Mr. Editor, kindly allow me to emphatically state that the N. S. A. is the true friend of mediums, that it recognizes mediums as the open doorways between the two worlds; and mediumship as the base of Spiritualism. It denounces fraud, of course, but upholds true mediumship, and respects every honest worker in the world. The N. S. A. does not claim that nine-nine per cent of so-called mediumship is false, nor does it presume to say that the medium who does not meet the spiritual need of one or more of its officers, is unable to do honest work for others and for the cause. While it will not shield fraud, neither will it dictate to the public what medium is to be considered worthy and which is to be condemned. We are careful not to recommend tricksters who come to the ranks for selfish purposes, but we also stand by true mediumship at all times.

With greetings of love to all,

MARY T. LONGLEY,
Sec'y. N. S. A.

Proposed amendments to the Constitution and By-laws of the National Spiritualists' Association, to be acted upon at the eighth annual convention, in Cleveland, Ohio, October 16-19, inclusive

Article IX, by substituting "biennial" in place of "annual conventions," thus making the convention meet every two years instead of annually.

Amend Constitution by adding:

"Any good Spiritualist paying one hundred dollars into the treasury of the National Spiritualists' Association shall be entitled to a life membership in the association, with a right to vote in all of its business transactions."

Amend Constitution:

"To allow honorary or lay members the privileges of delegates; also that provisions be made for five-year members, with convention privileges, for the sum of twenty-five dollars."

Article XI, Section 2, of the By-Laws, by inserting after "local associations" the words "holding State charters."

WE WILL MEET AGAIN.

Happy thought! again of greeting
Loved ones of the long ago,
Who so sad and lonely left me,
In this darksome vale below.

Happy thought! that we together
Soon will be united there,
In the bright and blest forever,
Free from earthly ills and care.

I am weary with the trials
And the tolls of mortal life;
Weary with its ceaseless struggle—
With its turmoil and its strife.

And my soul is sorely hungry,
For the food of angel love—
Sore athirst for living waters,
From the holy fount above.

And I'm happy in the dreaming,
Of that upper world so fair—
Of the bright and blissful beauty,
Of the mansions "over there."

I am happy that the ending
Of the valley now is near;
And am watching for "the boatman,"
Who I know will soon be here.

And will pilot me safe over,
To the green immortal shore,
Where all sorrows and affliction,
Will have ceased forevermore.

He will ope the pearly portals
To the "many mansions" bright,
There to meet my loved arisen,
In the realms of endless light.

Rending the Vail: This volume is a compilation by J. W. Nixon, of psychic literature, most given by spirits through and by means of full form visible materializations, at seances of a certain Psychic Research Society, known as the Aber Intellectual Circle, the medium being William W. Aber. 507 pp. octavo. For sale at the office of The Progressive Thinker. Price $2.

The new song-book, The Golden Echoes, by S. W. Tucker, has found its way into many homes, and its beautiful songs have cheered many sorrowing hearts, which they are sure to do when heard and sung. They should be heard in every home in the land. For sale at this office. Price, 15 cents; $1.50 per dozen.

Destroy the Germs; Cure the Disease!

The above illustration shows how the E. J. Worst Scientific Catarrh Inhaler sends the medicated air into every air passage of the head. Nothing but air can penetrate these fine air cells and reach the homes of the living germs that cause disease.

No snuff, powders, douche or spray can possibly reach them. Don't be deceived—make no mistake—apply common sense, and you will find that is the only instrument that will give you quick return for a small outlay, and perfect satisfaction as a Cure for Catarrh, Colds, Pains and Roaring in the Head, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Headache, Partial Deafness, and all Diseases of the Air Passages.

E. J. Worst's Catarrh Inhaler

SPECIAL OFFER.

For a short time I will mail to any reader, naming this paper, one of my new Scientific Catarrh Inhalers, with medicine for one year on three days' trial, free. If it gives satisfaction, send me $1.00; if not, return it after three days' trial. Could any proposition be fairer?

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
--OR--
DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the Formation of Circles and Cultivation of Mediumship

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

A Parent, Brockton: Q. How should a child like the five-year-old James Clayton, who delights to torture younger children and animals, and has in some instances nearly caused their death, be treated?

A. Parents who in their ignorance bring such degenerates into the world assume a fearful responsibility, and yet considering the circumstances bearing on the pre-natal child the wonder is why there are not more savages born. The persistency of nature makes constant struggle to produce the best, for in most cases the better influences are superior to the degrading. The child "conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity," cannot be otherwise than a degenerate. When heedless ignorance and selfish passion bring such children into being, we may pity and have charity, yet we should not forget justice. As a beast of prey cannot be allowed its liberty, so these reversions to barbarism cannot be allowed freedom, which to them would mean the privilege of injuring others. They should be confined—not in a dungeon, but in a comfortable home where they should be educated. All that is possible for their education should be done, especially to rouse the moral feelings. Corporal punishment, exciting only fear and hatred would intensify the brutality of character.

Peter Keller: Q. What is the population of China?

A. There is nothing more accurate than the estimates which have been made by various statisticians. The value of these is not great, for they vary from 200 to 550 millions. The Chinese empire contains four million square miles. A census never was accurately taken even of China proper, and recently efforts have been made to greatly reduce the estimates. On the contrary it is probable that the highest estimate is too small. More than one-third the population of the globe dwells within the limits of this great empire.

Wm. Chippendale: Q. If spirit communication be a fact, how do you account for the total absence of any intimation from the world of spirits, of the fate of Sir John Franklin and his crews? He, his officers, and several hundreds of men were dead in the arctic regions, while for years efforts were made to ascertain what had become of them and where their remains were lying.

A. The foundations of the spiritual philosophy are so firmly laid that no seemingly conflicting fact can shake its solid walls. To those who have given thought and study to its interpretation the period of doubt has passed. Not that such facts are to be ignored, but met with the certainty of explanation. It must be admitted that the foregoing question with kindred ones are among the most difficult to answer.

Why do not our friends constantly come to us? Sir John Franklin was no dearer to his wife, than the millions of husbands who pass into the shadow of death are to their wives. Every day, according to human wisdom, for the good of the living it is almost imperative that the dead return, and yet there is silence.

This question was answered in a past number of The Progressive Thinker, in its general bearing. A portion is reproduced, for in its simple language it makes clear the befogged atmosphere.

While enjoying the hospitality of Capt. D. B. Edwards, at his home at Orient, L. I., he pledged me that after his departure he would return to me and give positive evidence of his identity. He seemed greatly pleased with the idea and repeatedly spoke of it. He was a distant relative, living near the premises purchased by John Tuthill (Tuttle) from the Indians just ten generations ago. He had been captain of sea-going ships until 70 years of age when he retired. He was one of the most unselfish, sympathetic and spiritual men I ever met.

Nearly six months passed after his death, and not a sign from him. Constantly I thought of him and his pledge, and wondered why he did not fulfill it. I cannot say I doubted, but I was perplexed.

The night after Christmas I sat at my table writing after midnight, and almost overcome with weariness, arose to retire. Then suddenly I was conscious of the presence of this precious friend, and he wrote a lengthy message, the beginning of which I here introduce as touching the present subject:

"My Dear Brother:—I at last am able to come to you and express my thoughts and wishes. How ardently have I longed for this moment! How anxiously! I thought I knew all about spirit communion, and when I was ill and suffering, I thought when I was free at last from my old body, my first effort would be to come to you and tell you how I found my new life. You were perplexed that I did not keep my promise and let you know, as a test, before anyone else could give you the news. You did have a dim intimation, which you referred to fancy. Well, I was myself surprised. I did not for a long time awake to the reality. After so much pain I felt at once peaceful rest—such blessed, peaceful rest. I did not wish to wake from it, nor make the least exertion for fear the reality would come again. I know that dear spirits were near me—They would not let me take the journey alone. I was so glad it was all over—Now I have awakened. I am again myself, though not myself. I came to you and again I was surprised and disappointed. I expected to come at once into your sphere, and I thought, 'Why, yes, there will be no trouble or difficulty in making you understand, just as I did when on the beach or in my sail-boat. How strange it was that while others came I could not. I did not know how. I had to wait to learn. Those near would have aided, but I would not allow them to come between you and me. Time after time I came and always had to remain at a distance, I did not know how to approach. By this you will understand why it is that others you desire to hear from do not come in answer to your prayers."

The number of spirits who have learned the method of correctly communicating is comparatively small, and these, too, often find the obstacles interposed on the earth-side insurmountable. It may be truly said that the vast majority of the spirit world do not know that communication with earthly friends is possible, and if they were informed would not know how to transmit their thoughts.

H. G. Purinton: Q. Webster defines spirit as the soul of man, and soul as the spirit of man. What is soul or spirit, and what survives after death?

Man is composed of a physical body and a spiritual intelligence or mind. The two latter are inseparable. The word soul in the vocabulary of Spiritualism as exactly equivalent to spirit, and should be discarded as its use leads to confusion of ideas.

The spiritual body, or "celestial" as St. Paul terms it, including the intelligence, survives the death of the body.

Nebraska State Camp.

The second annual camp of the Nebraska State Association was held in the Sunday-school assembly grounds at Crete, Neb. It commenced on Friday evening, August 27, one day later than advertised, on account of a heavy rain and electrical storm which left the grounds in a very wet condition. The camp was carried through under a series of difficulties, the principal one being too short notice; the next one a prevalence of heavy storms at frequent intervals in many parts of the state which deterred many from coming by wagon who would otherwise have done so. The next unfavorable condition was the general make up of the community in Crete and surrounding country which is largely Bohemian and Catholic. Notwith standing all these obstacles, however, it was by all odds the most harmonious camp-meeting I ever attended.

A remarkable feature of the camp was that every speaker and medium present were residents of the state of Nebraska. Mrs. Goodwin, of Beatrice, and Mrs. Bonney, of Blair, gave lectures and tests. Mrs. Goodwin is a trance speaker who promises to become a good worker.

Mr. Pethoud, of Beatrice, a well-known trance speaker, also gave one good lecture. Mr. Bledsoe and Mrs. Etta Seaman Bledsoe, of Lincoln, gave some very fine inspirational lectures. These workers have lately taken up their residence in Lincoln and we welcome them to Nebraska. Two young speakers, Mr. Harry Davis, of Franklin, also Mr. Jones, of Exeter, gave us some good addresses, and we hope both will continue in the good work. Mr. C. H. Simpson, of Franklin, gave some very thoughtful lectures from a Biblical standpoint. Mr. James Campbell, the worthy and self-sacrificing president, as usual came out with very advanced ideas on spiritual and social questions and was always well received. Mr. Campbell's Spiritualism is of the right kind because it takes hold of questions pertaining to every-day life as well as looking foward the life of the future.

Miss Myrtle Klock, of Lincoln, presided at the organ throughout the meeting.

A pleasant feature of the meeting was the regular morning circle which brought out some very beautiful messages, symbolical visions and tests.

The dining hall was under the supervision of Mr. and Mrs. Stahl, of Crete.

Mr. Stahl gave a few hypnotic experiments on the auditorium platform. H. B. Austin, of Beatrice, assisted materially in taking care of lights, grounds, and speakers' pavilion. The general opinion among the visitors was that everything considered the camp was a precursor of better times for Spiritualism in Nebraska, and all expressed themselves as highly pleased with the intellectual and spiritual food provided. Everybody seemed to be in harmony, and went away with a hope of having another camp-meeting during the coming year.

Mrs. Bonney is rapidly developing as a test medium and gave many convincing proofs of a continued existence. My own work consisted of lectures and occasional tests in the shape of full names given during the morning circle.

Mrs. Bonney and myself will stay in Lincoln for a time and can be addressed for engagements, lectures, circles, funerals, etc., at Room 41, 1416 O street. W. E. BONNEY.

IF DEATH ENDS ALL.

If death ends all, my doubting friend,
Our rainbow dreams are vain;
To comfort you we must descend
And meet you on your plane.
Why should the dread of death annoy?
Sweet sleep, what were more blest?
For next to life's eternal joy
Were death's eternal rest.

Suppose annihilation true,
Why should we fear it so?
The same contented rest we knew
A hundred years ago.
A lotus land, devoid of pain,
Without a sin or care—
Why should world-weary souls disdain
That slumber-laden air?

Dear hands close folded down in death
Are free from toil and pain,
And lips devoid of mortal breath
Will never sigh again.
Those ears grown deaf to words unjust,
Earth's discords cease to fret;
The dead weep not—no heart of dust
Has ever broken yet.

Why mourn so deeply for the dead
We soon must cease to miss?
The path they took we soon must tread,
Join them in rest or bliss.
And if no waking comes at last,
Why, then we shall not weep,
Content as in the ages past
Of prehistoric sleep.

Although I hold the larger hope,
That death's a gate that swings
On fairer lands that upward slope
To heaven's diviner things,
I am content believing this:
Whatever is, is best;
And next to life's eternal bliss
Were death's eternal rest.

DELPHOS CAMP, KAN.

Will C. Hodge Gives His Impressions.

This camp situated in the Solomon Valley, two hundred miles west of Kansas City, has had a most successful season, closing August 26. While the attendance was not greater than on some former occasions, yet judged by results it has proved one of the best, if not the best camping seasons in the history of the association. The weather was of the typical Kansas variety, for the most part exceedingly hot, but relieved occasionally by gentle Kansas zephyrs common to that section, causing trees to sway and in some instances assume a horizontal position and thoroughly frightening a portion of the campers not accustomed to the playfulness of a genuine Kansas windstorm.

Speakers engaged for the season were Will C. Hodge, Chicago; Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale, Fort Worth, Tex.; Mrs. L. A. Mabee, Mrs. E. E. Hammon and Laura B. Payne, Topeka; and Mrs. A. L. Lull, of Lawrence, Kansas.

Special days were assigned as Woman's, Young People's and Temperance days on which occasions special programs were arranged.

Exercises on Woman's Day were under the direction of Mrs. Hoffman, of Enterprise, Kans., a very earnest worker in the cause of equal rights, regardless of sex, color or nationality. Short speeches were made by all the speakers above mentioned and by Mrs. Eva Bishop, of Glasco, and Mrs. L. H. Bellman, of Howard, Kans., the principal address being delivered by Mrs. Anna L. Diggs, of Topeka, who has a national reputation as a reformer and worker for equal suffrage for the whole people.

The Young People presented a creditable array of talent and judging by their initial effort, Young People's Day will become a fixture in forthcoming programs at Delphos camp.

The discussion on temperance was a lively one, as it embraced temperance in every relation of life, and while there was decided difference of opinion, especially regarding prohibition, each respected the opinion of others and no inharmony was engendered.

Prof. Hoffman, of Enterprise, was on the program for the last Sunday, but owing to the number of speakers was limited to twenty minutes, to the great regret of many who would gladly have listened for a whole hour or even longer. Laura B. Payne added to the interest of the camp by her fine rendering of songs of her own composition, and the instrumental music of the Reeves family was as usual, a feature of the camp. They must have been born under a musical star as the whole family take to music as naturally as a duck takes to water.

One funeral was held during the camp. Grandma Bishop, who tented on the ground last season, passed away at the ripe old age of ninety-two years. Funeral services were held in the Universalist church, which was filled with a large concourse of relatives and friends of the deceased, the writer officiating.

The mental phases of mediumship were well represented by Inez Wagner, of Eskridge; Mrs. Hammon, of Topeka; Mrs. Lull, of Lawrence; Mrs. E. M. Hull, of Ionia, and Mrs. Hinsdale, of Ft. Worth, Texas. These ladies were kept busy with private readings and all gave excellent satisfaction.

Public tests were also given by Mrs. Lull, Mrs. Hammon and Mrs. Wagner, with good results, the only complaint expressed was, the audiences being a hungry crowd, could not get enough of the phenomena.

Independent slate-writing was well represented by Mrs. Mott-Knight-Connely, of Kansas City. She did most excellent work and was kept busy during the entire camp. Her new phase of oil painting on canvas is attracting much attention, deservedly so judging by the specimens on exhibition which certainly were artistic productions.

W. W. Aber, of Spring Hill fame, the medium through whose agency was written by materialized spirits, that wonderful book, "Rending the Vail," represented the phase for form manifestations and gave a number of very satisfactory seances.

I had the good fortune to attend one of these seances, and it is my opinion, as well as the opinion of all who were present, that the manifestations occurring in the presence of Mr. Aber are unmistakably genuine. The writer took pains to interview many who attended these seances, comprising old-timers and new investigators, and there was not a dissenting voice from the above opinion.

The complete harmony of the camp socially and among the workers as a whole was notable, and to this fact is probably due the unqualified success of the camp the present season.

The annual election of officers resulted as follows: President, Jas D. Reeves, Asherville; vice-president, I. N. Richardson, Delphos; secretary, E. S. Bishop, Glasco; treasurer, Miss Rosa Blanchard, Delphos.

Eastern camps will have to look to their laurels as the Spiritualists of the "wild and woolly west" are progressive and up-to-date, and while they may not have the crowds attending some of the more noted camps, the attendance is uniformly good, while on Sunday, Aug. 19, the gate receipts showed an attendance of more than two thousand.

I am resting and recuperating for a few days with friends in the beautiful city of Rockford, Ill., and am open for engagements in any locality and for the camping season of 1901. Address, 40 Loomis street, Chicago, Ill.

WILL C. HODGE.

Summerland Beach Camp, O.

Summerland Beach Camp opened very promising on Sunday, August 26, with very good attendance at all three meetings. Mrs. A. E. Kibby, of Cincinnati, O., gave beautiful lectures at all the services. She was followed at all sessions by Mrs. S. E. DeLong, of Columbus, Ohio., who gave positive proof of spirit return by the very convincing tests she gave.

Mrs. Zetta L. Else, of Galion, O., and Miss Jennie DeLong, of Columbus, will both do their part of entertaining the visitors at the camp by their beautiful music.

Mrs. M. E. Clemens, of Columbus, O., was also on the grounds, and gave some beautiful communications.

Mr. McClade, of Ashley, a trumpet medium, is on the ground to give seances every evening.

Besides the ones mentioned above we expect to have with us Mrs. Kratz, of Indiana, as a speaker, and Mr. Reynolds as a healer.

The grounds are beautiful, the weather delightful. As amusements between the services, there are boating, bathing and fishing to be enjoyed every day.

The hotel is all that can be desired, the rooms pleasant and the board good.

It is a good place to come for recreation of body and education of mind.

Come one, come all, and help Mr. Woolley to make a camp that will be long remembered. The camp extends over three Sundays, September 9 being the last. SEC'Y PRO TEM.

Haslett Park Camp, Mich.

Monday evening the campers assembled at the hall for the purpose of a fact meeting, otherwise an experience meeting, and what made them Spiritualists; some very interesting facts were given by mediums and speakers.

Tuesday morning, conference, with a good house and we discussed "Obsession." Afternoon, memorial services. The Auxiliary Society bedecked the house with flowers of every hue, the pond lily predominating. Brother Kates opened the meeting with memorial remarks. It seemed as though every one could not do otherwise than to be assured of the life hereafter! Such remarks are a consolation to the most broken hearts. Not a moyein the house during his remarks. We then passed a few moments in silence, which seemed to bring the spiritual atmosphere around us. Mrs. Kates then rendered a solo entitled, "Life, Beautiful Life," which carried our souls to the beyond; then came the reading of names of our departed ones, by the writer, after which resolutions were tendered to Mrs. Haslett on the death of her aunt, Mrs. Titus, who passed out April 19, 1900.

Mrs. Titus was a member of our board for four years, when her health failed her, we then made her an honorary member of the board. She was one whom all campers will remember.

Mrs. Kates then spoke on life and death, and the passing out of the spirit. She remarked that as the spirit took on its spirit form, then death came as a release for both the spirit and the body, and the death to the body was a happy repose to both, therefore in the hour of death we were in the highest grades of life.

Wednesday morning, conference as usual. The people are quite warmed up over them and take an active part. Afternoon, Mr. Kates read a poem entitled, "The Good Time Now." He then went on to state the purpose of truth. We should always give our thoughts to the highest things of life. Truth should always be the first to enter the mind. We should always give our voice in the ethics of life to the ever living now.

Thursday was Pioneer Day, and at 10:30 all gathered at the hall, which we found bedecked with bright, blooming flowers and the sunflower our motto of of life. Our worthy president addressed the friends in his mild, congenial way, stating what to him would be his life in the other world. He described it as a beautiful home, and with him he had no fears. He was ready and waiting for the loved ones to come after him; his boat was ready to row his spirit over the river. Brother Kates then gave remarks on the works of a pioneer, and their travels the past year, which were highly interesting.

At 2:30 we opened with the good old song, Auld Lang Syne, which all joined in singing. The time was then taken up by different ones, on the cause. Mrs. Kates gave one of her grand lectures, full of loving thoughts, highest aspirations and good teachings to all, after which her control, Margaret, gave some of the finest of tests. Our president gave an inspirational poem of his own composing.

Evening, Mrs. Kates gave a public seance. The house was well filled with starved people, all asking for a word from their loved ones. She gave twenty-seven tests, when she rested for a song, and then she arose and gave more. It was wonderful the work she did.

Friday morning, again conference, spicy with different thoughts on the question of Practical Prayer.

Afternoon meeting closed the work of Brother and Sister Kates, then came the final farewell. All were sad at the parting, yet we hope to meet again.

Saturday, Conference conducted by our brother, Dr. Peebles. The question of prayer was again taken up, with the same diverse opinions as to what it was. Afternoon the Doctor gave a short opening address on the meeting of old friends.

Sunday morning exercises opened with music, a poem by Mrs. Claman. Our speaker then spoke on Trance and what it is.

Saturday evening Mrs. Claman gave one of her lectures, with stereopticon views, which was a fine piece of work.

MRS. O. H. SOULE.

Vicksburg Camp, Mich.

The camp-meeting held at Fraser's Grove, Vicksburg, Mich., after a four weeks' session, closed on Sunday, Aug. 26. We had as speakers during the session A. E. Tisdale, O. A. Edgerly, Marian Carpenter, Carrie E. S. Twing, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley and Mrs. May Cecil Lincoln. The Progressive Thinker has already published a detailed account of the work of our speakers until the 15th of August, so I will simply report what has taken place since that time.

Thursday, Aug. 16, was designated as Temperance Day. The discourse was delivered by Mrs. Twing, and was greatly appreciated by our people. Our rostrum was also occupied by Mrs. Twing on the 17th and 18th.

Sunday, August 19, in the forenoon, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley was our Speaker. This being Mrs. Cooley's first appearance on our rostrum, we can truly say that the audience was charmed by the sweet eloquence of her discourse, and satisfied by the sterling quality of her convincing tests. In the afternoon the rostrum was occupied by that embodiment of eloquence, A. E. Tisdale, the blind medium. Mrs. Cooley's engagement concluded on August 22. In all she gave four of her masterful discourses.

On Thursday, August 23, Mrs. May Cecil Lincoln, of Buffalo, N. Y., gave her first lecture at our camp. She remained with us until the close of the camp, giving the closing lecture on Sunday, August 26. We can truly say, judging from Mrs. Lincoln's work here, that we consider her one of the most gifted workers on our rostrum to-day.

The lecture in the forenoon on Sunday, Aug. 19, was given by the guides of Oscar A. Edgerly, and was considered by our people as a masterpiece of eloquence, logic and instructiveness.

While the numbers in attendance have not been quite as large as last year, still we consider our camp a success in view of the work that has been accomplished.

Drs. M. E. and R. G. Conger have accomplished a good work in their classes, as has also Mrs. Lincoln in her classes in occult science. Joseph King, the materializing medium, has done a very satisfying work during the meeting.

We owe a word of praise to Mr. J. M. Troxell, the manager of our grounds, for the excellent work he has done in keeping everything neat and in order. But above all do we credit the success of our camp to the tireless efforts of Miss Jeannette Fraser, who is really the prime mover in every good work accomplished here. REPORTER.

VICKSBURG CAMP, MICH.

W. F. Jamieson Makes It a Visit.

On Sunday, August 26, daughter Agnes, her husband William Campbell, their children, Miss Aby and Master Hugh, took a delightful carriage drive of 16 miles to attend the camp-meeting of Spiritualists. We passed through two towns, Schoolcraft and Vicksburg. Close by the latter place was the camp, with its cottages, tents, pavilion and glorious woods. "Michigan, my Michigan," abounds in groves and lakes.

Mr. Edgerly, of Boston, was discoursing to a packed pavilion when we arrived, on Evolution, Heredity, and cognate themes. If a Scotch Presbyterian could believe the statements he would drop his Calvin creed like a hot potato before he got "over there." I feel much comforted from the fact, if it is a fact, that the scientist and agnostic, who died before his pious "brother mine," and supposedly gone to hell, was discovered by the Calvin disciple when he, too, "passed over," in one of the spheres, brightly shining, a star of the first magnitude, so to speak; a lustrous spirit, whom the misguided Presbyterian mistook for his Lord and Savior, and before whom he prostrate fell.

I want to call Moses Hull's attention to this: It will be no use for him to scare me any more with the notion that I will find myself in a dark sphere on account of my "materialism." I am glad we went to Vicksburg.

In the afternoon the speaker was Mrs. May Cecil Lincoln, of Buffalo, N. Y., a pretty name, and a pretty, graceful, sweet-looking woman. She had a crowded auditory, insomuch that one lady fainted and was married out. Mrs. Lincoln g ve an almost perfect lecture. It was compact, finely constructed and splendidly delivered. Its logic was without a flaw as far as I was able to discover.

The lecturer took an "occultist" view of the universe and things, and by a delicately turned period she impressed many of her hearers, especially Spiritualists, that she somewhere in her subliminal consciousness nurtured the harmless conceit that she is but a little lower than the angels. As there is considerable gallantry in my nature I was prone to believe it. All would have gone as "merry as a marriage bell," had not Mrs. Lincoln deftly given her listeners a peek-a-boo glimpse, from an occult point of view, of the unspiritual condition of the rank and file of Spiritualists. Indeed, she assured them that phenomenalists are materialists—"the unkindest cut of all." One would hardly have thought the sweet little woman would have done it, but she did—bravely. In felicitous phrase she pictured the benumbing influence of prejudice, the need of mental breadth, the necessity for culture. After adroitly weaving a garment of that texture she proceeded to skillfully fit it to Spiritualistic shoulders, confidentially imparting the unsought thought that they needed to grow! that they are a great deal lower than the angels!

It was all done so captivatingly that I was charmed. True, my materialism was badly hurt—it often is—but the Spiritualism of fifty years was so much worse stabbed in the "house of its friends" that I could smile feebly when Brother Tisdale, who pleased us with his music, arose, under cover of announcement of collection, and pithily punctured some portions of the little lady's address; that is, he did not agree with it—and if that is not to puncture, what is? Johnson says, "A lion may may perish by the puncture of an asp," but May Cecil Lincoln is no lion. Mr. Tisdale is no asp, but a rather fine-looking gentleman; yet, when he, at the close of her discourse, announced to a waiting world—a small part of it—that he denied certain portions, he was clearly "out of order." He betrayed his lack of confidence in the triumph of truth. The time was hers. She had a right to impress her thought upon her listeners, to convert every one of them if she could. She replied to the gentleman's "condemnation." He responded with the explanation that he "had a right to his opinion." A lady in the audience "spoke out in meetin,' "We don't want to hear it!"

True, Mr. Tisdale has a right to his opinion, but not to express it anywhere or everywhere, in season and out of season. I am fond of debate; but let it be agreed upon if there is to be one, and let the audience assemble for that purpose, to listen. Even pugilists agree to rules, and would scorn to "strike below the belt." Metaphorically this is what Brother Tisdale did. It was not fair. Would it not be better, more truth-loving, more manly (and womanly) for Spiritualists to seek the open field, challenge the "world, the flesh and the devil" to open combat?

But the tactful Mrs. Lincoln's knock-out blow was a revelation, and amusing. How do you suppose she did it? She replied to his second speechlet in her benediction! She would not have been a woman if she had surrendered her prerogative, the last word. She won it in a benediction that bristled with quiet, forceful argument.

Texas, Mich. W. F. JAMIESON.

Maple Dell Camp, O.

Jennie Hagan Brown, of Fort Worth, Texas, was the chief speaker for Sunday, August 26. She made an eloquent plea that this camp may never become a pleasure resort carried on for commercial gain, but that it may ever be kept as the Mecca of Spiritualism for educating the world in spiritual matters. She emphasized the fact that the spirit world is the invisible part of the infinite universe of nature, and that all the forces which govern it are natural forces. She is to be the speaker next Sunday, as well as during the week. Her young friend, Miss Ault, received the applause of the audience at the close of her fine violin solo.

Among the mediumistic attractions of the camp, Mr. Monough, a slate-writing medium, is conspicuous. His work is praised on every hand. Other mediums are present and doing good work.

Father Tom and the Pope,

Or a Night at the Vatican.

Written probably by Sir Samuel Ferguson. From Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine. This is a humorous account of a rollicksome visit to the Pope of Rome by Father Tom, an Irish priest, armed with a superabundance of Irish wit, two imperial quart bottles of Irish "putteen," and an Irish recipe for "conwounding" the same. "What's that?" says the Pope. "Put in the sperits first," says his Riv'rence; "and then put in the sugar; and remember, every dhrop of wather you put in after that, spoils the punch." "Glory be to God," says the Pope, not minding a word Father Tom was saying. "Glory be to God!" says he, smacking his lips. "I never knewn what dhrink was afore," says he. "It bates the Lachymalohrystal out of the face," says he—"it's Necthar itself, it is, so it is!" says he, wiping his episcopical mouth wid the cuff of his coat. Paper, 25cts.; cloth, 50 cents. IMMORTALITY,

...OR...

FUTURE HOMES AND DWELLING PLACES.

BY DR. J. M. PEEBLES.

AN INVALUABLE WORK!

This admirable work contains what a hundred spirits, good and evil, say of their dwelling-places. Give us details—details and accurate delineations of life in the Spirit-world!—is the constant appeal of thoughtful minds. Death is approaching. Whither—oh, whither! Shall I know my friends beyond the tomb? Will they know me? What is their present condition, and what their occupations? In this volume the spirits, differing as they may, are allowed to speak for themselves. No man is better qualified than Dr. Peebles to place a work of this kind before the people. He treats of the Mysteries of Life; Doubts and Hopes; The Bridging of the River; Foregleams of the Future; Testimony of Saints; The Growth and Perfection of the Spiritual Body; Is it the Soul or Body that Sins?; Clothing in the Spirit-world; Our Little Ones in Heaven; The Personal Experiences of Aaron Knight; The Red Man's Testimony; Evil Spirits; Testimony of Physicians in Spirit-Life; The Homes of Apostles and Divines; The Friends and Shakers in Spirit-Life; Spirit Homes of Bruno and Others; Many Voices from the Spirit-Land. Many other matters are treated, too numerous to mention. Price, cloth, $1; paper 50 cents. Postage 12 cents. For sale at this office.

ENCYCLOPEDIA
...OF...
BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM
...OR...
A CONCORDANCE

To the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism;

Together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible.

BY MOSES HULL.

Much that is in this book appeared in an abridged form in a series of nine full pages of The Progressive Thinker. These articles were prepared at the call of hundreds of Spiritualists who felt the need of some kind of document for ready reference. They only seemed to whet the appetite for more; hence the publication of this work.

The author, Moses Hull, has written many volumes on Spiritualistic and other themes and each one is full of careful study on the subject chosen. Mr. Hull, in his introduction of this work says:

"Hoping that this book will serve to lead the people out of the wilderness of doubt and despair; and that when Spiritualism shall have wrested the Bible from its 'sanctified' enemies, it will not 'spike' it, but will use it to batter down the walls of Christian superstition and ignorance, I send it out on its errand of enlightenment with the humble prayer that it will prove a divine benediction to every reader."

The Encyclopedia of Biblical Spiritualism contains 885 pages, beautifully printed on good paper, contains a full-page portrait of the author and is handsomely bound in cloth. Every Spiritualist should have this work.

Freeville, N. Y.

I have had a most delightful summer. Since closing a six months' work in Syracuse, N. Y., I visited Freeville camp-meeting. I arrived July 28, and continued through the season of their camp which closed August 13. L. B. Robinson, M. D., is the president of this young camp association, and A. C. Stone is secretary. The latter can be addressed at Freeville, N. Y., the first at McLean, N. Y.

We had with us that veteran worker, J. W. Dennis, who presided as chairman in the absence of the president. His sincerity in the facts of spirit return was an incentive of great good to those who could fully come en rapport with the wealth of experience he unselfishly gives forth to aid all true mediums.

We also had Dr. Peebles with us, and he gave us most soul-stirring lectures about his travels, and right living. Many a heart beat with gratitude for this privilege of hearing and seeing this pilgrim through many lands. As he bade us good-bye tears glistened in many eyes.

Brother Grumbine gave some very beautiful lectures.

Mr. Grimshaw did most excellent work, his discourses were spiritual and highly edifying.

Mrs. Lizzie Brewer is a recent convert to Spiritualism, and as a medium and speaker is fast growing into recognition in her good work to advance our cause. Her heart is alive with earnest zeal for the general welfare of humanity.

Your correspondent, as usual in all her labors for more than a score of years, did try to do her very best, as lecturer and platform test medium, if only claiming the approval of her own conscience, always satisfied when on each night on retiring she can truthfully render up the account, "I have done the best I could to-day."

The Music was of a choice character; under the supervision of Mr. Green who was ably assisted by others, and his musicales and literary entertainments met with the highest approval.

The camp grounds are well shaded with many trees and has a fine and commodious auditorium. The artificial pond—with a boat upon its waters—is supplied from two flowing fountains of living mineral water, sparkling and bright. Many express the benefits they derive from imbibing this cool, thirst-quenching draught, and we learned that it was the intention of this association to make many needed improvements, such as building a sanitarium, rooming-house, boarding-house, cottages and hotel.

The residents of homes at Freevilee have kindly opened their accommodations to all who have visited this Mecca, at most reasonable terms, and expressed satisfaction in looking forward to the coming of the season of 1901, when again we would be welcome guests to their hospitalities.

The Ladies' Auxiliary ably assisted in the sales at their bazaar this summer. Mrs. Aying, of Rochester, N. Y., is president. It was the means of putting more than one hundred dollars at the command of the association, with quite a stock left for next season.

Many letters are reaching me from secretaries of societies and camp associations to open engagements for the remainder of the season of 1901, and for the coming season of 1902, which I will reply to as early as I can arrange my yearly programme consistently with engagements already closed. Address me at my home, Fulton, N. Y., Box 116.

MRS. MARY C. VON KANZLER.

Nebraska Association.

The Nebraska State Spiritualist Association's second annual camp-meeting, held at Crete, Neb., has, like all things material, come and gone, and we are positively sure that the work accomplished has done much good, and will redound to the lasting benefit of Spiritualism through the state, and more especially in the immediate vicinity of Crete,

The meeting was fairly well attended, all things considered, and the workers and managers were in fine condition, and fully awake to their duties and responsibilities and to the needs of their visitors and the requirements of a successful camp. Every thing was agreeable, everybody happy and a grand, good time was enjoyed by all. The Chautauqua Assembly grounds upon which the camp was held are said to be the finest in the state. It lies just across the river from the residence portion of the city, and about three-quarters of a mile from the railroad depot and the postoffice. It is a beautiful place, with natural forest that gives abundant shade, ample boating facilities upon a small river picturesque and beautiful. The grounds were formerly owned by the State Sunday-school Association, which by the unsparing aid of art and money, made it a veritable paradise, but to them a paradise lost, for it has through mismanagement, been lost to them.

Three sessions were held daily, morning circle, afternoon and evening lectures. Managers and workers as well as the audience seemed equal to the occasion, and the program was fully carried out. And we are happy to say, without that disturbing element of jealousy so often manifested between speakers and mediums. Harmony prevailed, and not a ripple marred the perfect spiritual feast so bountifully supplied.

The philosophy of Spiritualism and kindred topics were most ably expounded by the following lecturers: Father Campbell, president of the Association, Mr. and Mrs. Bonney, Harry Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Bledsoe, Mr. Jones and one or two others whose names I do not now recall. Tests were given by Mrs. Mary J. Bonney, while some beautiful visions were seen and described by Miss Baldwin, who, for the first time, essayed to tell what she saw. Other mediums also treated us to a spiritual feast long to be remembered.

At the breaking up of camp, plans were discussed for the purchase of the grounds which are to be brought before the State Association at its next convention in October. Four hundred lots are to be sold at twenty dollars each, which will furnish money enough—$8,000—to purchase the grounds. The grounds contain 110 acres of the finest land in the state. The improvements consist of one large hotel, two cottages, a pavilion, a large dining-hall, bowling alley, shooting gallery, another large building, a commodious auditorium and outbuilding, bridges across the river and board walks leading from the city to and through the grounds. There are besides ample farm buildings. Three or four good wells which furnish an abundance of pure water, and seats sufficient to accommodate at least two thousand people. Six thousand dollars would not replace the improvements.

As soon as plans are perfected, Father Campbell will begin the work of raising the funds for purchase of grounds by sale of lots and otherwise. The plan is feasible. The money will be raised. The grounds will be purchased, and another Cassadaga will be established.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, near Pennville, Ind., on August 24, 1900, Mrs. Flo Brown, wife of L. B. Brown, aged 40 years. This noble soul was a living example of the pure and exalted teachings of Spiritualism, and although she was an invalid for many years and knew that the transition was liable to come at any moment, she never wavered, and passed out in the full triumph of spiritual victory. Services were conducted by the writer at West Grove Chapel, on the 26th ult., before a large assembly of sympathizing friends.

OUR PREMIUMS.

There are many Spiritualists who know a good thing when they see it. There are others, however, who do not seem to realize what is going on around them, and therefore miss many chances to enrich their minds and enlarge their understanding. Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World is furnished to our subscribers at less than cost, and should be in every family in the United States, whether Spiritualists or not. Volumes 1, 2 and 3 constitute a wonderful magazine of thought on Death in its multifarious phases; in fact you can not find in all the libraries of the world as valuable information in regard to Death as you will have presented to you in these three volumes. They are nicely printed, neatly and substantially bound, and are an ornament to any library. Volume 3 is furnished at 25 cents, much less than the actual cost to us, and the three volumes, when ordered in connection with a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, only cost $1.10. The aggregate cost of the three books to the trade is $4.50. At this price, these three books ought to be in every Spiritualist family.

The Progressive Thinker is the first Spiritualist paper to inaugurate the Divine Plan—a portion of the profits of the office returning to subscribers in valuable books.

VOLUMES 1, 2 and 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Art Magic, Ghost Land, The Next World Interviewed, and the Occult Life of Jesus (including the Hull-Covert Debate) constitute our premium list. Those seven books have been on sale, costing the buyer in the aggregate, $10.75. We, after paying the postage and expense of mailing, realize only $1.50 for the seven—far less than cost to us. We desire to form the nucleus of a library in every Spiritualist home, hence this remarkable offer. By subscribing for The Progressive Thinker, you then have the privilege of purchasing these books at the premium prices. See terms on another page.

THOUSANDS CURED!

Marvelous Has Been the Success of This Well-Known Healer in Curing Chronic and Obstinate Cases.

J. M. PEEBLES, A.M., M. D., PH.D.

If Sick Read His Liberal Offer, Then Consult Him and Be Healed.

Half a century spent in successfully treating chronic diseases and the unsolicited testimonials from thousands of those whom he has cured, after the best local physicians had failed to give permanent relief, have gained for DR. J. M. PEEBLES a reputation that extends from ocean to ocean, as the most successful practitioner and healer in AMERICA.

This eminent man, whose life has been devoted to the relief of suffering humanity, is not only a graduate of the best medical colleges of this country, but he has counseled with the best medical men in every country on the globe, and his study and research after knowledge that would enable him to benefit those around him who are suffering from chronic diseases, has taken him three times around the world, and to-day his advice and counsel is sought after not only by chronic invalids who have learned his ability to cure these troubles, but also by many physicians as well.

This great and true Healer was one of the pioneers in the study and investigation of the Psychic Science, one of the greatest and most wonderful of all the sciences, and one which is destined to do more for the sick and suffering than any other agency ever discovered. He has made a study of this subject for over half a century, and is to-day considered by the advanced students of this grand science the greatest Psychic living. You should read his late essay on this subject, entitled, "The Psychic Science in the Art of Healing," which he will send you free of cost with the diagnosis if you desire it. Learn for yourself of this wonderful power the human body like an open book. All Dr. Peebles' diagnosing is done by the aid of this occult science. All that is necessary for you to do to receive a complete and accurate diagnosis of your case is to write the Doctor a plain honest letter in your own handwriting. If you will do this, he will send you a diagnosis free of all cost and special advice concerning your case, also his essay spoken of above and other literature ever performed, including hundreds of testimonials showing some of the most remarkable cures

Thousands of sufferers are treated by physicians who do not know positively where the seat of trouble lies. They experiment for weeks trying to hit upon the right point. The result is that instead of getting relief, the patient gradually grows worse and the case becomes, as they term it, "chronic," and at last the poor sufferer receives that awful sentence, "Your case is hopeless." With Dr. Peebles there are no hopeless cases. His life has been devoted to conquering disease, and the tens of thousands of lives he has saved, the thousands of so-called invalids he has made healthy men and women, and the countless number of homes in every part of the world his wonderful skill has brightened are testimonies of his ability to treat all kinds of chronic diseases.

Remember that Dr. Peebles does not cure by Christian Science, Mesmerism, or any other "ism," but uses mild magnetized remedies in connection with his Psychic treatment. "These Psychic treatments," says one of his patients, "seem as if they would almost raise the dead." Every effect has its cause, and if the cause is seen and removed the effect will cease—health will ensue. What is your condition? It is within your power to know. If he can tell you the exact cause of your trouble, he can bring relief and without doubt a cure. This he can do, and it will cost you not one cent to test it. In order to inspire confidence in those who have been given up beyond hope, he will diagnose all cases free of charge. All that is required is for you to write the Doctor an honest letter, giving in your own writing your name, age, sex, and leading symptom. If you will do this, he will return your diagnosis at once and will also give you special advice concerning your case. A letter of advice from this great and true physician, whose life has been devoted to relieving the suffering of his fellow-men, drives back the cloud of despair and comes like a ray of sunshine into the chronic invalid's darkened sky.

Remember that it costs you nothing to write the Doctor and learn your true condition. Write to day and learn your exact condition, and also ask for literature that will give you a full knowledge of this wonderful method of curing disease.

"Human Culture and Cure. Part First. The Philosophy of Cure. (Including Methods and Instruments).' By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A very instructive and valuable work. It should have a wide circulation, as it well fulfills the promise of its title. For sale at this office. Price 75 cents.

"Harmonics of Evolution. The Philosophy of Individual Life, Based Upon Natural Science, as Taught by Modern Masters of the Law." By Florence Huntley. A work of deep thought, carrying the principles of evolution into new fields. Cloth, $2. For sale at this office.

"The Gospel of Buddha, According to Old Records.' Told by Paul Carus. This book is heartily commended to students of the science of religions, and to all who would gain a fair conception of Buddhism in its spirit and living principles. Spiritualist or Christian can scarcely read it without spiritual profit. Price $1. For sale at this office.

The Commandments Analyzed, price 25 cents. Big Bible Stories, cloth 50 cents.

"The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism. A Menace to American Civilization." By Prof. W. M. Lockwood, lecturer upon physical, physiological and psychic science. Demonstrator of the molecular or spiritual hypothesis of nature. Scholarly, masterly, trenchant. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

"Talmagean Inanities, Incongruities, Inconsistencies and Blasphemies; a Review of Rev. T. DeWitt and Rev. Frank DeWitt Talmage's oft-repeated attacks upon Spiritualism." By Moses Hull For sale at this office. Price ten cents.

"The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. Prof. Lockwood is recognized as one of the ablest lecturers on the spiritual rostrum. In this little volume he presents in succinct form the substance of his lectures on the Molecular Hypothesis of Nature; and presents his views as demonstrating a scientific basis of Spiritualism. The book is commended to all who love to study and think. For sale at this office. Price, 25 cents.

"Origin of Life, or Where Man Comes From." "The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter Through Organic Processes, or How the Spirit Body Grows." By Michael Faraday. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

"Poems of Progress," By Lizzie Doten. In this volume, this peerless poet of Spiritualism may be read in her varied moods, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." It is a book to be treasured and richly enjoyed by all who love genuine poetry, and especially by Spiritualists. The volume is tastily printed and bound. Price $1.

"Heliocentric Astrology or Essentials of Astronomy and Solar Mentality, with Tables of Ephemeris from 1830 to 1910." By Yarmo Vedra. For sale at this office. Price, $1.50.

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Camp-meetings and Other Spiritualistic Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. For sale at this office. Price 10 cents.

"Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Cloth $1. For sale at this office.

"The Mysteries of the Formation of the Earth, the Rising and Sinking of Continents, the Introduction of Man, and His Destiny Revealed in God's Own Way and Time." A work of deep interest, given through the mediumship of Mrs. M. T. Longley, by an advanced band of ancient spirits. Price $1. For sale at this office.

"Never-Ending Life Assured by Science." By Daniel Kent Tenney. A strong and conclusive argument from the basis of science. For sale at this office. Price 6 cents.

"The Watseka Wonder." To the student of psychic phenomena, this pamphlet is intensely interesting. It gives detailed accounts of two cases of "double consciousness," namely Mary Lurancy Vennum of Watseka, Ill., and Mary Reynolds of Venango county, Pa. For sale at this office. Price 15 cents.

"The Bridge Between Two Worlds." By Abby A. Judson. This book is dedicated to all earnest souls who desire, by harmonizing their physical and their psychical bodies with universal nature and their souls with the higher intelligences, to come into closer connection with the purer realms of the spirit world. It is written in the sweet spiritual tone that characterizes all of Miss Judson's literary works. Price, cloth, $1; paper, 75 cents. For sale at this office.

"Principles of Light and Color." By E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D. A truly great work of a master mind, and one whom Spiritualists should delight to honor. The result of years of deep thought and patient research into Nature's finer forces are here gathered and made amenable to the well-being of humanity. Medical men especially, and scientists, general readers and students of occult forces will find instruction of great value and interest. A large, four-pound book, strongly bound, and containing beautiful illustrative plates. For sale at this office. Price, postpaid, $5. It is a wonderful work and you will be delighted with it.

CLUBS!

CLUBS CLUBS

We want ten thousand clubs formed in every part of the United States, for which we present inducements never before offered by any Spiritualist paper. These clubs must consist of ten subscribers, and each one will get Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death; or if they would prefer it, they can have the Next World Interviewed. They can have their choice of the two. Each subscriber in order to avail himself of this offer must pay $1.15. The fifteen cents is to pay expense of postage and mailing, and the books sent out are practically a gift. They are not cheap affairs; they are nicely and substantially bound in cloth, neatly printed in clear type and are ornaments to any center table. The contents are indeed valuable, such as every Spiritualist family should have. The aggregate price of these two books to the trade is $2.75. To each of our club subscribers one of these books is a gift, and when they receive the one of their choice they will be delighted with it, and will wonder how we can afford to do so much for them. The one who gets up the club will be entitled to The Progressive Thinker for one year, and Vol. 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit Spirit World, and also the Next World Interviewed. He will not only get The Progressive Thinker for one year, but both books. He gets what is equivalent to $3.75 for his trouble. There should be no difficulty whatever in getting up hundreds of clubs.

Volume 3 of the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World will not only interest Spiritualists, but church members will be attracted to it. The Rev. M. J. Savage, a leading liberal divine of New York, leads off with several of his masterly productions, treating Death from an advanced standpoint. He is followed by leading Spiritualists who treat of Death in a philosophical and fascinating manner.

The Next World Interviewed is also a very excellent work. The plates of this book were donated to the office of The Progressive Thinker by Henry J. Horn. It consists of communications from the spirit side of life from leading minds there. Fifty-five communications are given by prominent personages, among them Prince Albert, Harriet Martineau, Judge Edmonds, Horace Greeley, Lord Lytton, Fanny Fern, Dr. Livingstone and the Czar of Russia.

RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.

BY S. WEIL.

Cloth, $1.25. - - - Paper, 50 cents.

This is a work of great value, written by one of the keenest, most powerful and most truly religious minds of the day. It is particularly a work which should be put into the hands of those who have freed themselves from the dogmas of orthodoxy and from the dogmas of materialistic science, for it will strengthen the conviction of the free mind that mind and senses are not the whole of life.

The chapters reveal a new method in psychic and spiritual research. They show vivid glimpses of a stupendous moral cosmos that will supersede moral confusion; that only verifiable tenets can survive, and the childhood period of faith and fancy will be superseded by knowledge and facts. TWO IN ONE,

A COMBINATION OF

"The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books complete at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 462 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

Is a careful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its moral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, read expressed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRAST

consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend Spiritualism, or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.

The Other World and This.

A Compendium of Spiritual Laws. No. 1, New White Cross Literature.

BY AUGUSTA W. FLETCHER, M. D.

In this volume the author, in the thirty-nine chapters, discusses a wide variety of subjects pertaining to Spiritualism, from a spiritualistic standpoint. She evinces the powers of a trained thinker, both in matter of thought and fine literary style, and capability of thought expression. The subjects are well-handled with conciseness and yet with clearness. It will prove a rich addition to any Spiritualist's library, and a most excellent book for any one seeking information concerning Spiritualism and its teachings.

SUGGESTION CURES.

Its Results Are Most Remarkable.

TREATS MANY PATIENTS—SOME STRANGE EXPERIMENTS IN THE PRESENCE OF A COMPANY OF BROTHER MINISTERS — HOPES FOR THE FUTURE.

The Rev. Howard B. Cutten, a center rush on the Yale football team when he was a student in college, and now pastor of the Howard avenue Baptist church, New Haven, Conn., is obtaining some astonishing results in his hypnotic experiments. He has devoted his efforts chiefly to victims of the liquor and tobacco habits, with signal success, but may be induced to widen the scope of his work.

By far the most interesting of his experiences during the week were those of Wednesday, when two subjects were treated for the purpose of curing them of the liquor and tobacco habits respectively, in the presence of a large company of New Haven ministers who had been invited especially for the occasion. The usual operating room is a small, cell-like place, fitted with electric lights and double padded doors. This room was discarded for these experiments in favor of the large lecture room of Professor Scripture, head of the department of experimental psychology.

MANY VOLUNTEERS ATTEND.

Two subjects had been provided before hand, but even if they had not been there need have been no delay. Several times during the morning the demonstrator was interrupted by the arrival of persons who besought him to accept them as patients. One man who had read of Mr. Cutten's wonderful hypnotic cures had come from Bridgeport, hoping that he might induce the clergyman to try to cure chronic neuralgia by hypnotism.

None of the volunteers, however, was accepted, the two subjects selected already being deemed sufficient. Both were inebriates, one middle-aged, the other somewhat younger. The latter had used liquor since he was 14 and had chewed and smoked tobacco for about the same length of time. He was hypnotized first on August 10, and now is nauseated by tobacco, though he still has a slight taste for liquor.

Both patients looked what they were said to be—physical wrecks—but each declared he felt better than for years.

"You men are warm and perspiring from your walk, but after your sleep you'll be refreshed. Now J——, take this chair," said Mr. Cutten.

The elder man, lame and weak, mounted the platform and seated himself in a cushioned chair. The experimenter held a watch in one hand and with the other stroked the eyelids of the patient gently.

"Go to sleep; that's right; you're pretty tired, I guess. One! Two! Three! You're dozing. Now, then, don't wake up until you're called," was repeated several times, and in less than thirty seconds the man sat sleeping in the chair.

"Move to this chair by the wall," was the next command, obeyed as speedily as the patient could, Mr. Cutten guiding him.

SERMON OF THE HYPNOTIST.

The younger man was next summoned to the seat where he had seen his companion doze off. It took only a few more seconds to put him to sleep. The sermon began thus:

"You men have seen the seamy side of life. You are tired of the life of sin and dissipation. You want to turn from it and be clean men. There must be no more drinking, no more using of tobacco.

"Do you hear that (calling each man by name), and do you realize what it means? Stop! Stop it! You're not the men I take you for, you're not men at all—unless you cut off the terribly destructive habit.

"Now, if you stop using it, the fumes of whisky and beer will make you ill, the smell of tobacco will cause you nausea.

"You are through with whisky and rum for good! They'll make you sick, sure," said the athlete preacher, with emphasis, repeating and repeating it.

Addressing the older man, Mr. Cutten asked.

"How did you get along yesterday? Did you take strong drink?"

"No, sir; not once."

"Did you see me?"

"Once; on the street only."

"Did you have any invitation to drink?"

"An old tool-maker who used to work with me asked me in."

"Did you drink anything at all yesterday?"

"Yes; I went to the pump on the green several times for water."

The responses were given in nearly inaudible whispers. One needed to be close to the platform to understand.

The other patient went through a course of questioning also. He said he had no strong craving for liquor to-day, and that tobacco nauseated him.

A photographer touched off a flashlight during the conversation between Mr. Cutten and the sleeping men. The flash aroused the younger man, as Mr. Cutten had said it would, but he was promptly put to sleep again.

CALLS FLASHLIGHT LIGHTNING.

As neither of the men had seen the photographic apparatus, nor had known that a photographer was to be present, the experimenter was asked to question the man on what awakened him, to determine the genuineness of the surprise.

"A flash of lightning," was the reply.

To make sure that the men would not wake up while Mr. Cutten convinced the victim of neuralgia, who had come from Bridgeport, that he could not treat him, Mr. Cutten stroked both men's eyes again, telling them to "sleep soundly." The spectators in the room were cautioned to keep quiet.

In order to demonstrate how powerfully the men were under the hypnotic spell, upon his return to the room, Mr. Cutten bade them in succession to make a number of movements of hands and fingers and a variety of other motions.

But the most interesting was the exhibition of "post-hypnotic suggestion," in the case of the older patient. Mr. Cutten said to the spectators:

"You see I am wearing neither coat nor waistcoat in this warm room. I shall tell this man that on the coat which I am supposed to wear is a great sunflower, covering half my shoulder. When he wakens he'll see it and speak of it."

This is what followed:

"On my coat is a great, bright flower. It's a fine, big sunflower. When I call you to awaken tell me what you know about such flowers. Come, wake up."

The man stretched out his arms and yawned. His eyes were brighter than when he came into the room and he seemed happier. He glanced at Mr. Cutten as the latter took a chair facing him. A smile grew about his lips and he walked over to the clergyman.

THINKS HE SEES SUNFLOWER.

"Gee whiz, that's a whopping sunflower. Do you like 'em? When I was a kid I used to dry 'em, big ones, you know, and pull out the seeds to make my initials. That's a fine one you've got, sure enough."

The other patient, who saw no sunflower, looked at his companion in amazement. Leaning over to me he asked: "Say, mister, what's he talking about? He's got no sunflower."

The men were dismissed with the admonition that they were expected to return on Saturday morning.

Mr. Cutten was asked by a spectator why he used the same method of inducing the hypnotic spell on both men and what were other methods. He replied:

"These men are comparatively easy to work with now. It took forty minutes with the younger man the first time and briefer periods at each successive trial.

"I try to study the patient's mental and physical makeup at first. Now, with you, for instance, I should try the bright bead methods."

There is no end to the application of the Rev. Mr. Cutten's theories if they are successful. Though confining his attention to inebriates and victims of the tobacco habit, the Rev. Mr. Cutten admits the possibilities of his treatment in athletics.

POSSIBLE USE ON ATHLETES.

"Supposing it was the night before a big college athletic event," he said. "The athletes are keyed up and perhaps overtrained. A hypnotic sleep would do what no power has been able to do for them heretofore. But I do not care for this feature of the work. I want to know if hypnotism is a cure for moral ailments, evil temper, vicious beliefs. Then I can use it as an adjunct to my church work. I have everything to encourage me. Out of all my cases I have lost but one, you might say. He was an epileptic.

"All the slaves of liquor and tobacco I have tried have stopped. I cannot yet say they are cured. Ken, the acknowledged authority on the subject, has made some experiments. He says a cure cannot be effected in less than five years. I think two years sufficient. One of my patients, who smoked tobacco for twenty-two years, has not used the weed since I treated him on August 10. Before that he would pick up cigar butts in the street and smoke them. After I discourse to them in the hypnotic sleep they are sickened by the use of tobacco or liquor on the next trial."

Asked to analyze the power and how it operated to cure, the Rev. Mr. Cutten said:

"I cannot. It is by suggestion. When hypnotized I tell them not to smoke or drink. When the subject returns to the normal state the desire is gone. That is all I can tell you.

"I have so far treated about twenty men, some for the tobacco, others for the alcohol habit. All have stopped their indulgences. It is too early yet to say that complete cures have been effected. Authorities say that it takes five years to establish a cure.

"One of my patients used tobacco for twenty-two years. He was so much a victim of the habit that he would pick up old cigar stumps and smoke them. He has not used tobacco since I first hypnotized him, on August 10.

"The boy I took from the Calvary Baptist Home has not smoked cigarets since March. His reformation seems to be complete. The other cases are much the same. The treatment acts similarly upon all. They do not care for the tobacco or liquor, and the sight or smell of either makes them sick.

USE BY PHYSICIANS.

"Physicians understand that the application of the placebo in medicine is really a form of hypnotism. Hypnotism is really therapeutic suggestion; the inducing of a state of hypersensibility.

"One grave danger of hypnotism in the hands of a quack or evil-doer is that bad impressions, frightful, hideous, and tormenting ideas, and shocks that do damage to the nervous system may be given. But chloroform and ether may also be abused.".

Asked to tell how he came to take up the investigations, and particularly to choose inebriates as subjects, he said:

"I have been studying psychology at Yale for four years, under Professors George T. Ladd, E. Hershey Sneath, George M. Duncan, and Edward W. Scripture. For my thesis for the degree of Doctor of Psychology I chose the subject, 'The Psychology of Inebriates,' having become deeply interested in men whom I met in my pastoral work.

Previously to this I had but infrequently used hypnotism. The first time was to try a classmate who was ill with a peculiar malady. I cannot state further what that was. Never have I made use of hypnotism for any purpose save to benefit some one physically or as a matter of scientific research."

COMING OUR WAY.

Rev. R. Heber Newton on Immortality.

Rev. R. Heber Newton is rector of All Souls' Protestant Episcopal Church on Madison avenue and Sixty-sixth streets, New York, one of the most fashionable places of worship in the city, and his position among the clergy of New York is one of great prominence. Dr. Newton has been very liberal in his ideas for some time. Dr. Savage and Dr. Newton are great friends, as many of their theological views are the same in common, although one preaches from a Unitarian pulpit and the other an Episcopal pulpit. Dr. Newton is ranked among the advanced thinkers and his opinions upon religious matters have carried weight, but his present article, entitled "The New Thought of Immortality," published in the August number of the magazine "Mind," has created a sensation in church circles in this city. In dealing with the problem of immortality, he stamps as untrue the orthodox conception of an after life, declaring there will be no general day of judgment, no resurrection of the body. In his opening paragraphs Dr. Newton says that from the time of Jesus to our own day there has been little or no development in man's faith concerning immortality. He credits Swedenborg with evolving the first really new conception of immortality, and the Spiritualists with keeping it alive. He describes the orthodox conception of immortality, and declares the language of this traditional conception still drawls in our hymns, still drones from our pulpits, still whines in our prayers. In presenting his convictions on the unseen world, he says immortal life must be conceived in accordance with the doctrine of evolution. He continues: "The life that is beyond is one and the same life that is here. There are not two lives, a present and a future, there are not two worlds, seen and unseen, there are not two states, a here and a hereafter—there is one life, one world, one state."

"Alas that we conservative churchmen, holding our venerable prayer-book in our hands, in the last sacred offices of the dead, should ever fancy ourselves obligated to repeat language that is archaic, obsolete and untrue, words ringing false upon our consciousness, offending our judgment and belying our faith. Death is no real break in life. It is a conjunction, not a disjunction, in the story of being. It is a stepping-stone from one stage of existence to another. It is a birth into the hereafter. Death is not a divorce between the soul and the body, needing to be annulled by the soul's reunion with the body. The belief in the resurrection of the physical body as a necessity for the clothing of the spirit is a pagan superstition that has lingered too long in Christianity. When life sheds one body it is but to grow another. The body always grows around the life. Each cell is an embodiment of mind, and is grown by that mind. The intelligence that grew it can grow it again in a higher form. Death then is the true resurrection. No other resurrection is conceivable. The body that we dwell in on the earth decomposes, and its materials pass into other structures innumerable. The archangel's trumpet, at the sound of which we are all to be changed in a moment, that is the splendid imagery of the apostle. He who dies awakens into consciousness—the same being as of old. He is conscious of his continued personal identity. He knows himself to be himself. The dead are therefore recognizable by one another and by the living, if ever communication is established. This follows inevitably from the continuation of personal identity. Death ushers us into no foreign world. We will be at home in the hereafter as we are at home here. The activities of our being on earth will be the activities of our being in heaven. Life's finest joys and highest ecstasies would be stolen from us in a heaven where there is no play for these powers. The occupations of earth must therefore shadow and type the occupations of heaven. In higher and nobler forms we must go on doing there what we are doing here. If homes are necessary here homes are necessary there—the centers of family life without which the truest bonds of man would be broken. The associations that group themselves naturally here must in higher and nobler forms group themselves in the hereafter. Death makes no break in the continuity of character. It works no miracle. A man is the same here and hereafter. He is the same intellectually before and after death. The thoughtful, studious man upon earth will be the thoughtful, studious man in the heavens. He that is silly and superficial here will be silly and superficial as he starts again in life there. The wise man before death will be wise after death. There are fools over there as here. The fingers that have been busy handling the croupier of our American Monte Carlo (Wall street, Dr. Newton means), which faces Trinity Church, cannot turn at a moment's notice to play harps in the New Jerusalem. There must be rewards and punishments in the life beyond if it is a real life. A man carries his heaven with him through death into the hereafter. A man carries his own hell with him through death into the hereafter. Heaven and hell are not located in space, they are located in mind. Heaven and hell are not shut off from each other as we traditionally conceive of them. Heaven and hell can mingle upon earth. Men living in heaven and in hell can jostle each other along Fifth avenue and crowd one another on Broadway. Hell then is no finality in the worlds beyond our earthly hells any more than in the world here and now. We have not yet learned to deal with sin, but we are beginning to learn."

This is only a portion of Dr. Newton's article, and shows how we are progressing when such able thinkers come out and take the stand they do. What

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

It Is a Remnant of Barbarism.

The story recently circulating in several papers, that somebody on his deathbed confessed to the atrocious crime for which Th. Durrant suffered the death penalty—though positively contradicted—cannot fail to bring back to every thoughtful mind the often discussed question, Is circumstantial evidence infallible, and has the jury a right to pronounce upon its strength a sentence of death?

In some parts of Europe an alleged criminal can only be condemned to death after himself confessing his guilt. He is put into prison for life, and it happened again and again, that an almost forgotten prisoner was released, the crime for which he suffered being confessed to by some other person. Had the victim been executed, it would have been "legal murder," and legal murders are far from being scarce. Any honest man may eventually run the risk of being convicted of some crime, circumstances coinciding to make the apparently impossible seem possible. And as for witnesses, who can look into the heart of man? The perpetrator of a crime will not hesitate to add perjury, if by so doing he can save his own skin.

Suppose that "monster" Durrant was indeed the innocent man he claimed to be, even at the moment when the hangman's noose already touched his neck! What a horrible supposition!

Some cold-blooded egotist—styling himself philosopher—might say in the vein of Socrates: "Would you rather die guilty than innocent?"

"No," I answer, "a thousand times no!" But why should anybody be deliberately sent out of this world before his time? Who has a right to spill another man's blood, even though he be a criminal? Can murder be atoned for by committing another murder?

"Ah," you say, "this is done in the name of justice and in the name of God, whose representatives are sitting on the judge's bench and in the juror's box."

Alas for crude and savage humanity! A man may seem excused for killing in self-defense, for he may indeed have a right to fight for his own life; but executing a murderer does not bring to life his victim; it is "legal murder" pure and simple, based on the savage instinct of revenge. It is a remnant of barbaric times, stored up in the Old Testament among a heap of similar remnants.

On what else, for instance, can we base that wild craze for lynching, that bloody stain on our much boasted of civilization, if not on man's instinct of revenge, on his lust of seing blood, firing his passions to such a degree, that he wrenches the criminal (and often perhaps the wrong one) from the hands of justice that would at least grant him a trial. So-called justice is too slow and lenient for savage, revengeful man; he is in a frenzy to dip his brutish hands in the blood of some miserable victim.

Ah! Do we march at the head of the world's civilization? Numerous other practices of wholesale violence might be mentioned as belonging unto the same category of eruption of man's brutish nature; but it would carry us too far. We cannot fight all the foes of civilization at once, but must attack one at a time, and the best to approach first will be the one that is shaky already.

Capital punishment has already been abolished in different countries, and also in some of our own states; and Spiritualism should be eager for the honor to inaugurate a general vigorous attack upon the tottering ruins of that blood saturated law—structure of bygone primitive ages.

More than one eloquent plea in this direction has graced the columns of The Progressive Thinker; but why confine ourselves to words? Such questions demand action.

Some months ago, in the city of Syracuse, N. Y., one lady tried to interest several influential members of society to bring into circulation a petition for the abolition of capital punishment in the state of New York; but she soon found out that "society" had few sympathizers in that direction, and therefore contemplated dropping the matter, when the spirit voice of a well-known champion of human rights and progress urged her to appeal to Spiritualists. Just then there happened to be at Syracuse the convention of the New York State Spiritualists. She hurriedly wrote an appeal to that convention, asking every member to start each a petition against capital punishment in their respective towns or cities. This paper she timidly presented to the officers of said convention, urging them to have it read; but they passed it over in silence.

And will the timid woman be silent also? Not as long as she can wield the pen and have her appeals printed by leading papers. She hopes cheerfully, that some prominent Spiritualists will summon energy enough to start a successful petition, be it only in one single state; every step counts in the march of progress. Spiritualist societies may form the nucleus of the movement, but if directed by the right persons, signatures would surely be gathered all over the country, as the movement is distinctly a humanitarian affair.

Why not begin at the different summer camps?

Allow me to wind up with a summary of unrefutable reasons why capital punishment ought to be abolished:

The law of capital punishment has never and nowhere prevented murder.

It is a remnant of primitive barbaric times, based on the savage instinct of revenge, and cannot claim a place in the code of laws in any progressive country.

Criminals are mostly creatures of low surroundings, creatures of existing social conditions; and society owes them a chance to improve. Imprisonment for life, with an opportunity for moral development, may yet fan to life the weak spark of a human soul, slumbering even in the most depraved.

And last, not least, one reason from the standpoint of Spiritualism. Each

ROMANISM.

Is Not History Repeating Itself?

To the Editor:—In the year of "our Lord" 1822, Rev. John Brown, of Haddington, England, published an edition of the Holy Bible. His introductory remarks filled 50 mammoth pages, from which I quote a few plain paragraphs:

"In the beginning of the seventh century, two principal enemies of Jesus Christ formally appeared on the earth; the Mahometan delusion in the East, which has ever since extirpated or oppressed the Christian religion in a great part of the world; and the long-predicted Anti-Christ in the West. The imperial seat had been long before removed to Constantinople. The western empire had been abolished, and ten motley kingdoms formed out of its ruins. Every shadow of Rome's ancient forms of government by kings, consuls, decemvirs, tribunes, dictators, emperors, heathen or Christian, was gone; and Rome itself, in A. D. 566, subjected to the exarch of Ravenna. These things had given the bishops of Rome an opportunity to extend their ambitious views. The clerical form of church government still wanted an imperial Lord over all, instead of Jesus Christ; and by promoting divisions, by encouraging appeals to themselves from the eastern and other bishops, by pretended deeds of councils in their own favor, and by unwearied struggles with the bishops of Constantinople, the Romish bishops had long and earnestly contended for the supremacy.

"About A. D. 606 or 608, Phocas, an absolute monster of treachery, cruelty, and everything horrid, had, by the inhuman murder of his worthy master Mauritius and family, become the emperor of the East. It seems the bishop of Constantinople disdained the friendship of this infernal wretch. But (Pope) Boniface III. of Rome, by his fulsome flatteries obtained his imperial appointment to be the Universal Bishop of the Christian Church. Deputies were immediately despatched throughout the Western churches to introduce the new Gregorian superstition, and to procure a formal submission to the Roman pope. The missionaries being extremely ignorant [just as they are to-day] of everything, or at least incapable of officiating in the language of the places to which they were sent, it is said Pope Vitalian, about A. D. 666, appointed their public worship to be everywhere performed in the now long disused Latin tongue. This at once concealed the ignorance of his missionaries, and became a standing badge of the church's subjection to Rome." [Just as it is in the 19th century.]

"Just five prophetic months, or 150 years, after the pope had obtained his spiritual supremacy, and 666 years after John had received his revelations in Patmos, Pope Stephen III., assisted by Pepin, King of France, who by the help of a former pope had treacherously usurped his master's throne, rendered himself a Civil Lord of the states of Rome, Ravenna, and Pentapolis; in consequence of which his cardinals, or privy counsellors, dressed themselves in purple and scarlet. [Just as they do to-day.] Several of the succeeding popes claimed an absolute power to dispose of, not only the Christian kingdoms and empires, but even of what belonged to heathens, everywhere in the world. [Just as they are doing in China, even while I am acting the role of a "scribble."] By deceiving or terrifying princes with their excommunications and interdicts, by decoying or forcing them to the holy war in Canaan, and by raising up traitors against them, they caused them to submit to their slavery.

"The ten kingdoms which had been formed out of the ruins of the Western empire, all submitted to the idolatry, superstition and clerical tyranny of Rome. [What else could they do, we ask?]

The haughty pontiffs even pretended to command the angels, whether good or bad, to do what they pleased: nay, they claimed an authority over Jehovah himself; in empowering their priests to create or divide the glorified body of his Son at their pleasure; in adding to his standard of faith and practice apocryphal tracts, human traditions, and decrees of popes or their councils; in founding the authority of his oracles on the will of their church, and contrary to his express command, debarring all but their clergy from the free perusal of them; in altering, reversing, or confirming his laws as they pleased; in making multitudes of persons and things his partners in worship, and in protection of the world; in appointing multitudes of holidays, in opposition to his law; and by pardoning men's sin, or indulging them in it, and cancelling the obligations of oaths, etc.

"Most dreadful were the scenes of wickedness against God and man which prevailed in the whole Anti-Christian body, but especially among their clergy. These, regular and secular, multiplied like locusts, till, by their delusions and oppressive exactions, they everywhere destroyed the souls of the people, enslaved their bodies, and ruined their estates. Under the different denominations of Augustinians, Benedictines, Franciscans, Dominicans, Carmelites, Jesuits, etc., huge armies of monks zealously supported the Romish bishop and his abominations. In the Benedictine order alone, before the Reformation, it is said there had been above 15,000 monasteries, 24 popes, 200 cardinals, 1,000 archbishops, 4,000 bishops, 15,700 abbots, who had been authors, and 156, 000 deified saints. While the pope and his clergy wallowed in every fleshly abomination and everywhere spread the most pernicious errors, gross idolatry, and superstition; by pretences to uncommon sanctity, and by magical wonders and pretended visions, they made their ignorant votaries believe what they pleased. By inhumanly excluding from trade, or even from their habitations, such as dissented from them; and by murderous inquisitions, massacres, and wars, in which millions of Waldenses and Protestants were slain; they

MEDIUM VS. PSYCHIC.

A Startling Prophecy, by Mrs. Lincoln.

IN WHICH SHE MAKES SOME STATEMENTS THAT ARE ABLY CRITICISED BY LYMAN C. HOWE.

At the Briggs Park Camp, Grand Rapids, August 19, Mrs. May Cecil Lincoln delivered a brilliant lecture. She emphasized the statement that she is a Spiritualist, and has always been one; was born a Spiritualist; but she charged Spiritualists with being selfish, and unprogressive! Why? Because they—many of them—were adverse to the acceptance of new ideas—such as reincarnation, and the assumptions of Theosophists.

She held that mediumship is an inferior attainment, and should be subordinated to the higher discipline of the "psychic." She claims to have advanced from medium to psychic, which she insists is distinct and superior. She narrows the definition of medium down to that of an agent or transmitter of messages; and this is probably the sense in which the majority use it. But my definition of mediumship includes all that she claims for psychic, for every medium is a psyche, with some functions available, which are not yet developed in the masses. It is not a new idea that mediums may gain much by self-culture, and the assertion of individuality, when it does not antagonize spiritual help. In fact, self-dependence, and the guidance of reason and moral sense, rather than abject submission to the dictates and control of any foreign agent, has been the pivotal idea in Modern Spiritualism from the first. It has been taught and emphasized from the platform, in the circle room, in our literature for over fifty years, but many are slow to heed the lesson. The old "rot" of superstition clings to human nature long after the new gospel has become the professed standard of righteousness.

Mrs. Lincoln claimed that 99 per cent of the lunatics in the asylums are simply victims of obsession! But she neglected to impress her audience, made up of a heterogeneous mixture of Spiritualists, church people, skeptics, and uncultured creedists of all sorts, who have little idea of Spiritualism and its teachings, that these lunatics are not, and never were Spiritualists, nor ever knew anything of mediumship. But she did impress them with the notion that mediums are special objects of obsession, and that four-fifths of all mediums are in imminent peril, because they are mediums, and therefore open to obsessing lunatics and excarnate scalawags. To escape this horror, she would have the world outgrow mediumship and substitute the "psychic." But what is a "psychic?" According to the latest lexicons, it is an adjective, and means, "of or pertaining to the human soul, spirit, or mind; psychological."

Prof. Wm. Crookes in 1871 gave the name of "psychic force" to "what he believed to be a certain hitherto unrecognized force, which produced the phenomena of Spiritualism." From this, probably a medium was called a psychic. If the word is to be used as a noun, and does not signify mediumship, what different is a "psychic" from any and all other persons? Are we not all souls? To cultivate the soul is one of the important missions of Spiritualism; and mediumship is, and ever must be, an indispensable factor in its evolution. But there are many pitfalls for unwary feet, whether mediums or not, and the probabilities are that if 99 per cent of all lunatics are obsessed, it is because they were not disciplined in the lessons of mediumship, as reputable mediums are! In fact, well conditioned mediumship is a cure for insanity, as it is for many other evils that afflict humanity.

I do not deny obsession, nor claim that all mediums are exempt, but I think, as a class, they are much less liable to insanity, and evil obsessions, than others are, all other things being equal. I have known many hundreds of mediums in private life, besides many professionals occupying public positions, and I have have never seen a single case of well-defined, unmistakable obsession. I have heard of a goodly number, and I credit the testimony, but that mediumship was the real cause of the evil is yet an open question. It may furnish conditions for it; but the cause (?)—well let facts and reason decide.

THE PROPHECY.

Mrs. Lincoln claimed to know, by some psychic processes, superior to mediumship(?) that there are yet seven years of probation, during which mediums may quietly pursue their calling, and—if they will—improve themselves, and become "psychics," occupying a table-land of spiritual exaltation that will be a protection against all the evils, obsessions, insanity, and lower world horrors that beset the lives of mediums.

But after 1907 mediums are to pass through (or into) a fiery furnace. They are to suffer the most excruciating tortures, and soul-harrowing conflicts with obsessing demons, and insane marauders from the lower world of spiritual darkness and disorder.

Whether this is to be perpetual and permanent, or only temporal, I did not learn; or whether it is to annihilate mediumship, and establish a reign of "psychics," or raise Theosophy to the throne of spiritual aristocracy, and substitute its metaphysical guesses for the demonstrations that have done so much to establish a scientific basis for immortality, I cannot say. But I can say that I have confidence in the sincerity of the speaker who made these hair-raising predictions. She unquestionably believes what she teaches. She thinks she knows that these things are true. She says she knows that she has lived in a former embodiment, and that reincarnation is a fact in nature. I feel equally sure that she does not know. Psychics are often deceived by their own experiences. Even our senses often fool us. I have had experiences that seemed to point to but one conclusion. But other experiences, and counter facts, with my reason compelled me to

CONSCIOUSNESS:

Physical, Intermediate, and Celestial.

When the seers of many and conflicting religious systems agree upon one point it is logical to assume that some common experience, even if not scientifically valued, finds expression in this unanimous voice. Now, regarding the gods for instance, there is only unanimity in telling of intercourse with beings of extraordinary intelligence. Neither about the number nor character of the gods do two seers agree, so we are justified only in assuming that the seers conversed with decarnate beings of intelligence superior to their own. It is another point upon which there has been practical agreement, that I want to discuss—the general division of consciousness into three states described as definitely by these terms as by any; physical, intermediate and celestial. We are not warranted in assuming any impassable barriers between; neither any clear dividing line, or the seer himself could not become aware of the general change in the conditions of existence.

In my early investigations a spirit described as my grandmother came to a medium bowed with all the infirmities of age. I inquired if that were her condition in the spirit world. The answer was: "I don't know, but I think she is only taking on the conditions temporarily of her late physical life." I asked the medium if she could find out the real status of that dear spirit in the decarnate world. She could not. I could not but reflect that if this were her real spiritual condition modern Spiritualism forces upon me the most lamentable intelligence possible. We are all in spite of every discouragement urged by irrepressible desire, by the "god within" to seek the fountain of immortal youth and if there be no rejuvenating forces at work, be it ever so slowly, that shall restore to her the vivacity, the energy, the capacity of active enjoyment equivalent to a renewal of youth, better a thousand times to sink into dreamless oblivion. After I had become somewhat mediumistic myself a spirit materialized in a public seance and both by the appearance and by private corroborating testimony the spirit was very probably that of "Granny." But here also were the same disabilities to prohibit much intelligence or the greatest satisfaction. I now ceased to wonder at the "shell" of theosophy, although then as now I regard the shell theory as a very misleading interpretation of such phenomena. But here was a spirit in what is described as the intermediate state or just near the boundary line between that and the physical. It is worthy of consideration that while many relatives (presumably) materialized with other mediums, she never appeared but through this one, who being an "old-fashioned" Scotch-Irishman would be naturally congenial to her nature. At another place where I was a stranger a female form gasped my first name. I took her trembling hand for a moment. She said, "God bless you." I asked if she could identify herself. She seemed dazed by the conditions and only said, "I'm so confused." I am thoroughly satisfied of her identity and that she appeared delightfully strong through another medium and another circle where the magnetic atmosphere was better suited to such a character. But in all my investigations although the intelligence varied with the magnetic conditions and sensitiveness of the medium, there has ever been what may excuse the shell theory and call for the assumption of an intermediate or purgatorial state.

With a considerable knowledge of Spiritualism as it is filtered through various mediums and private experiences that I am sure are uncommon, as the saying is "What I don't know would make a big book." Let me write a chapter of it.

Spirits as they manifest in various ways tell sometimes of living over and over again for an indefinite time the old earth life, and some think this experience a necessary atonement for the errors they committed in the flesh. A materialized spirit claiming to be Mary Stuart, told me of a long experience of this kind and being so attracted to the scenes of her earth life, but was happy in being released from that state and finding something better to exercise her mind. We may as well call this purgatory as not. No spirit in free possession of his or her powers is going to be thus chained to the past. They shall when fully awake or "resurrected" do as we do here, use the objective realities of their sphere to break the chain of unpleasant memories and choose what memory shall dwell upon. They are bound by no law of karma or retribution, but by an undeveloped state of the spiritual body to live in the past, and one of two great reasons why spirits so urge us to develop here is that we may shorten our stay or avoid altogether this intermedite state where the will is nullified because the undeveloped spiritual senses cannot appreciate the objective features of a refined etherealized universe of vibrating matter.

At death the undeveloped spirit becomes unconscious, relapses into coma. From this they pass into the intermediate state of somnambulism or what is often described now as the subjective state. Here they remain for a time varying in length according to the undeveloped condition of the spiritual organism, but it is not a permanent state, only comparing with that of the liberated or resurrected spirit as a picture may represent a reality. Gradually they emerge from that dream state into a clear consciousness and here is the second great reason why they want us to develop—they develop with us and we aid them while they assist us.

Now permanent happiness depends upon the recognition of principles eternal and unchangeable, but spirits from the intermediate state confuse us with contradictions regarding the necessary thing. In this subjective state the earth life is reflected and two spirits who have lived similar lives contradict each other. One does not suffer from the

WHAT DOES SPIRITUALISM INCLUDE, AND WHAT ARE THE DUTIES IT IMPOSES?

By Prof. J. S. LOVELAND, Summerland, California.

NUMBER TWO

In answer to the first clause of the above question, I submit the following concrete statement as a comprehensive definition of Modern Spiritualism, viz:

SPIRITUALISM IS THE SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY OF LIFE.

With rare, if any exceptions, all intelligent Spiritualists will endorse this proposition. But it is one thing to submit positions and another to demonstrate their correctness. In making this proof, I will pursue the scientific method.

At the outset, Spiritualism meets us with phenomena—with facts, which constitute the bed-rock of science, and that is the basis of all true philosophy.

The spiritistic phenomena are sometimes classified as physical and mental. This is not strictly correct, as both mental and physical elements are embodied in all forms of the manifestations. The primary physical phenomena were the concussive sounds, termed rappings, the movements of tables, chairs, stoves, elevating things and persons in the air, and many other uses of physical substances. And all these happenings are produced entirely independent of any muscular or mechanical energy. No mallet or hammer makes the raps, and no muscular force lifts the tables or moves other objects. It is in invisible force. The same is true when slates are written on, or pictures painted. And when we advance a step farther, where flowers, hands, and even some sort of a body is created temporarily, we are brought in contact with a force using a higher form of chemical combination than we have heretofore known. And in the various aspects of the so-called mental, embracing psychometry, clairvoyance and telepathy, we have all the weird and wonderful revelations of the trance state.

THE ONE GRAND FACT.

In carefully examining all these strange and varying phenomena, we perceive in the foreground of the numerous forms of manifestation, one ever-present fact—A Medium! Without the medium, none of these manifestations ever do, or can occur. Hence, the first thing which science must accomplish is an analysis of mediumship. Not a step can be taken toward a comprehension of Spiritualism only through the door of mediumship. It is the sphynx to be interpreted. Are we equal to the task? I think we are, so far as the main features of the case are involved. Witnessing the physical phenomena, we are at once struck with the self-evident fact that their production is due to a form of force which we have not heretofore comprehended. Careful observation discloses the additional fact that this force or energy issues from the organism of the medium. We have found its source, and the next step is to ascertain its character. A glance at its workings shows it to be one of the imponderable forces; but it is neither electricity nor magnetism though somewhat analogous to both these agents. It may be a distinctly different agent, or it may be only another instance of the transformation of energy. After protracted experiment scientists have made the following discoveries:

1. The human muscles, in violent use, develop a very slight electrical current.

2. The nervous organization evolves an agent analogous to electricity. It has polarity—attracts and repels.

3. That under certain conditions physical substances are moved by it with great force.

4. This agent is evolved not only by the nervous system but by magnets, crystals, the sun, stars and chemical action.

5. It radiates from the human system something as rays of light from a luminous body, and has been photographed in several instances. Hence it is an atomic or molecular entity and may properly be termed a force-substance.

6. Although primarily automatic in its motions, as much so as electricity or magnetism, its motions can be controlled by thought or will power. I made this discovery nearly fifty years ago. I suspend, with a thread, a gold watch from the end of my index finger. I hold it over the head of a woman. I am physically and mentally quiet. Any disturbance or excitement is fatal to the experiment. In a few moments, the watch begins to swing to and from me. When the pendulum motion is well established, I mentally command the watch to take up a transverse swing. At first, the watch seems confused, but presently commences the transverse motion. Then, I order it to swing in a circle and it obeys. I am master, to a certain extent, of the automatic energies of my organism.

We discover here a force producing motion of physical substances without muscular or mechanical agencies. History furnishes many instances of this form of motion, but they have always been regarded as manifestations of supernatural power; or the sleight-of-hand performances of the conjurer. We have found them to be neither. The producing energy inheres in the human organism. Its use, or mental control, we are not now discussing. As scientists we are interested in the mode of its evolution in the human system. As one form of its evolution is chemical action, we are led to the conclusion that vital chemistry is the evolving agent. Hence, physiology becomes a most important branch of science in this investigation. As this energy is, in man, a strictly nervous one, the perfection of its action being just in proportion to muscular quiescence, our attention must be directed especially to the nerve systems of man. The vast ramification of nerves pertaining to the special senses, and the sensor and motor functions of muscular action have nothing to do with our search so far as their action is concerned, for our phenomena is dependent upon their partial or total non-action. These nerves get tired and are compelled to rest, requiring from six to eight hours each day.

But there is another immense system of nerves, usually called the great sympathetic system, but I prefer the term organic, because its functions pertain specially to the organic life of the human system both physical and mental. These nerves never rest—never cease their action till death terminates physical life. They are distributed to every minute portion of the body. Wherever there is an artery an organic nerve is its inseparable attendant.

The efferent nerves of the other system are termed motor, as they induce motion of the muscles at command of the will. But the nerves of organic life produce continuous motion. The heart, liver, stomach, lungs, kidneys, etc., never rest. Cessation of their motion is death. The intellect and will have nothing to do directly with those motions. But the organic nerves have everything to do with it. The vaso-motor, a branch of the organic nerves, keeps all those vital organs in motion. The heart is the most powerful muscle in the body, but all the willing and thinking in the universe could not produce a single pulsation. But the vaso-motor keeps up its tireless beating. The action of the heart and arteries, controlled by this nerve, keeps up the blood circulation.

There are two main forms of chemical action in the human system. The first commences in the mouth when the saliva is mixed with the food. Then the gastric, bile and pancreatic secretions complete the process of digestion, and the finer portions are absorbed and emptied into the blood. The next process is completed in the lungs when the dark venous blood yields up a portion of its carbon, producing carbon dioxide, which is expelled by respiration, and absorbing oxygen (and perhaps something else from the atmosphere, inducing a chemical change, which makes the blood a bright, cherry red color, which is sent bounding through the arteries to every part of the body. But when it has reached the extremities another change has occurred. It has lost something. It has been robbed in two ways. It has left material for repairing the waste in the tissues, and it has had abstracted the substance which constitutes the nerve energy. This energy is as real a circulation through the nerves as is that of the blood through the arteries and veins. The nerve energy of heart and arteries is from the vaso motor nerves and they abstract that energy from the arterial blood, and carry it back to the solar plexus, and other centres of the organic nerves. They are the storehouses of the energy. They supply the entire nerve systems of the body. The chemical action of the digestive, and the circulatory systems evolves it, and it supplies the power for its own evolution as well as for all the mental and muscular work of man.

But the important fact found in this search is, that the evolution of nerve energy is one of, indeed we may say is the most occult of all the processes of life. It is life substance and energy itself. And the energy evolved by this process is the acting power by which all the mysterious functions of our physical life are carried on. And that same energy, which causes the heart to beat, the blood to circulate, and liver, stomach and other organs to perform their various functions, is what produces raps, tilts the tables and performs all the other motions which make up the physical manifestations. It may be objected that all the action in the human organism is purely automatic, while in the spirit phenomena it is demonstrably controlled by volition. This is conceded, but I have shown, in my experiments, that it is controllable by will. The contention between the Spiritist and the non-Spiritist is simply this: Is the directing mind, which controls the motions in or out of a physical body? The determination of this point settles the question. But it is not necessary to my argument to settle it now.

MENTAL MEDIUMSHIP.

Passing from the physical to the mental manifestations, the question is, are they connected with this nerve substance as palpably as in the material phases? The answer is emphatically in the affirmative, and the proof is, if possible, more demonstrative than in the materialistic phase. It is conceded without dispute that the mediumistic trance and the mesmeric are identical, so far as the physiological condition is concerned. Hypnotism is the term now commonly used instead of mesmerism, and some think there is a wide difference between them. The difference is this; the mesmeric trance is sleep plus rapport or sympathy with the mesmerizer; the mediumistic trance is sleep plus rapport or sympathy with a decarnate spirit; while the hypnotic trance is the mesmeric condition plus the will power of the operator to control the physical and mental functions of the subject.

Pure mesmerism is always automatic. Wherever will is exercised there is hypnotism, and real or attempted control of one by another. It is subjugation. Both are legitimate and right when knowledge and moral uprightness are possessed by the operator, and both are wrong when used by the bad and ignorant.

But what is sleep? What causes it? I answer, a changed nerve circulation. During the day, the special senses and their organs absorb and use, in connection with mental and muscular action, the larger share of the nerve energy. During this period of wakefulness and mental and physical effort, there is a constant waste of energy, and wearing out of the living tissue of the body. Hence when night comes on the outer senses, muscles and mental brain are tired. They gradually cease to attract the nerve energy which retires into the organic nerves and the person is asleep. Repairing the wastes of the day is now the natural work of the automatic force of the nerves.

In all conditions of sleep, the nerve energy is mostly transferred to the ganglionic plexi; and the nerves of special sense and of sensation and motion are in a state of partial insensibility. In the most profound mesmeric sleep they are entirely so. Teeth can be extracted, limbs amputated with no sensation of pain. Dreaming is one of the conditions of sleep. And, in many instances, there is a peculiar kind of dreaming. Some persons dream of what has happened, or is about to happen of which they have no knowledge whatever. They see the persons involved in the events and their relation thereto. These dreamers are the prophets of their neighborhoods.

But there is another sleep condition more wonderful than that of prophetic dreaming. It is where the person apparently is both asleep and awake at the same time. We term it somnambulism. Persons perform the most wonderful feats when in this state, with no subsequent memory whatever. The most intricate and delicate work is done in complete darkness, and the most dangerous places are traversed in perfect safety. There is sight but not that of the eyes. This phase of sleep approximates very nearly that of the trance. But this sleep, aswell as the clairvoyant and prophetic dream sleep, has never been explained by any of the old philosophies. Nor are the dreams of the entranced medium explicable by those methods. Science must furnish a new method, the result of new discoveries. The old philosophy taught us truly that there can be no perception, no knowledge without a prior sensation. But in the trance sleep the five senses are completely dormant, and yet the sleeper perceives, acquires and communicates knowledge, of which there was total ignorance prior to the trance. Nothing can be more perfectly demonstrated than that the trance sleeper does not use the five physical senses. What then? Simply this: We have more than five senses. Part of them are in the germ state with most of us, but are partially at least developed in the trance and other conditions of sleep, and we then have seeing without the use of eyes, hearing without ears, and various forms of feeling when all ordinary sensation is quiescent. The inner senses do the work of the outer ones. It is found that the thought of the operator is read by the entranced just as readily as the spoken word. But the exercise of the inner senses in the trance usually so develops them that eventually the sleep is not necessary for their use. A. J. Davis, in giving "Nature's Divine Revelations," was mesmerized by Dr. Lyon, but the Great Harmonia and other books were written by himself in what he termed the "Superior Condition." That is, the condition where the inner senses are awake without the outer ones being entirely asleep. Hence, we may expect to find persons, like Balaam of old, falling into a trance with their eyes open. And the number is constantly increasing.

Our analyses have developed the following propositions:

1. There is an energy evolved in the human organism capable, under certain conditions, of producing motion in physical substance.

2. This motion can be controlled by thought or will.

3. It also controls the functions and organs of organic life.

4. The mediumistic and mesmeric trance is the result of the secession of this nerve energy from the motor and sensor nerves, and its accumulation in the plexi and ganglions of the great sympathetic system.

5. That this reversal of the day system of nerve action to that of night or sleep condition evolves an interior form of sensation by which knowledge can be gained independent of the common method.

6. The thoughts and feelings of one person can be recognized by another without any outer sign.

7. The nerve system radiates an atmosphere of nerve aura, which is sensitive and has been photographed showing an atomic or molecular constitution.

We have, in these demonstrated propositions, the basis for psychometry, clairvoyance and telepathy. The latter, to be sure necessitates the assumption of the great fact and law of vibration. But this is so generally admitted and understood that I need not repeat the demonstration here, but simply present the respective positions of the Spiritist and non-Spiritist in the light of the foregoing exposition. In the vast mass of phenomena, who or what controls the motion of this imponderable energy which is liberated in the organism of the medium? A simple illustration will place the matter in the clearest possible light. The medium is a telegraphic Machine. Who fingers the keys at the other end of the line? That is the question to be settled. We can't see the operator of the medium battery any more than we can the telegraphic one at New York or Boston. We are compelled to reach our conclusion from the nature of the message and the conditions of its delivery so far as we can understand them. Our total ignorance of the power and possible uses of electricity would be no evidence pro or con. Nor does ignorance of the potencies and laws of the trance prove that a message does or does not come from the spirit world through the trance. But if, in the case of the telegraph, persons and things are described in New York, which we know, or ascertain to be correct, and of which we know the telegraphic operator here to be entirely ignorant; or if things, of which all present are ignorant, but which are verified afterward, are communicated, we are compelled to admit that there is a way of communicating with distant places very different from the old-fashioned mail coach.

The Spiritist submits his case thusly: In mediumship, we have a telegraphic apparatus, through which we receive communications, of which, at the time of giving, no one had the slightest knowledge. In some cases no living persons had any knowledge. For instance, here is a message signed by a person who died before the medium was born. It states that the proof of its statements can be found in some public records over fifty years old. A search among old documents, which had not been disturbed for years, brings the proof to light. Who sent that message and signed the name thereto, if not the one who letter by letter spelled out name and message through the rappings? Who controlled and directed the nerve energy of the medium, if not the man—the spirit who possessed all the facts? Who manipulated the keys? The non-Spiritist, so far has been unable to answer the question. The argument is in favor of the Spiritist's contention. He admits that there are many psychometric and telepathic manifestations which may or may not have personal spirit action behind them, but there are so many clear-cut manifestations like the one here given that no room is left for reasonable doubt in the case.

The Progressive Thinker one year and the seven premium books.	$ 3.35

These seven books, substantially and elegantly bound, and printed in the neatest style of the printer's art will be furnished to our subscribers alone for $2.35. But bear in mind that in order to secure these SEVEN valuable premium books for $2.35, the order must be accompanied with a year's subscription for The Progressive Thinker. The paper one year, $1.00; the seven books, $2.35. Total, $3.35.

The aggregate price of these seven books to the trade is $10.75. In order to assist in forming a Spiritual and Occult Library in every Spiritualist's home, these seven valuable books are furnished to our subscribers for $2.35, which is less by far than their actual cost. The authors make no charge for the vast amount of labor bestowed on these works, and which extended over many years. The publisher receives not a single cent for the great expense he was to, hundreds of dollars being paid out in putting them in type, and electrotyping the pages, and making them ready for the printer. That is why you are getting these intensely interesting books for almost nothing. We are only carrying out the Divine Plan, inaugurated only by The Progressive Thinker. There are thousands of Spiritualists who take no Spiritualist paper, and this inducement is offered, in order that they may commence forming at once a Spiritual and Occult Library, and thus keep in line with the advancing procession. The postage on the above books and expense of mailing is about 85 cents, hence you are almost receiving them as an absolute gift.

By taking 85 cents from $2.35, you will find that all we have left us for those seven books is only $1.50.

Postmasters.

We have been swindled out of a large amount of money by postmasters, who knowing a person desires The Progressive Thinker, sends his money, deducting a large commission. The Progressive Thinker is one dollar per year. The great rise in print paper renders it utterly impossible for us to give any commission to news agents or postmasters.

Bear in mind when making a remittance, that only one book, the Encyclopedia of Death, and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. 3, is furnished for 25 cents. You must not substitute any other of the premium books for that one.

COMING OUR WAY.

seems strange to me is, Why don't such men as Dr. Newton and Dr. Hillis, of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, step down and out from their evangelical pulpits and form liberal churches of their own. There would not be one single doubt but they would have enormous following. There is one class of gentlemen that I am sorry for at the present day, and they are the orthodox clergymen in our little towns and even cities through the country that really in their own soul and heart believe just as Dr. Savage and Dr. Newton, but they do not dare express their views because the bread and butter of their wives and children stand in the way. They have my pity. Spiritualists ought to feel very glad to see how things are coming our way very fast.

terrified others into a blind submission. Dan. 7, 8, 20-25; and 11, 36-39; 2 Thes. 2, 3-12; 1 Tim. 4, 1-3; 2 Tim. 3, 1-7, 13; and 4, 3, 4; Rev. 9, 1-11; 11, 2; 13, 17, 1-14, 17, 18; and 18, 12, 13."

The clergyman who drew up this indictment against the church, doubtless knew what he was writing about, and the scriptural references are intended, I suppose, to substantiate his assertions. Little wonder that Martin Luther startled the world with the Reformation. Is there not room for another step forward at the beginning of the 20th century now so near at hand? May it not usher in a new spiritual era; and is not the great American continent, with its expanded territorial acquisitions, fit soil in which to nurture the tree of Civil and Religious Liberty "for the healing of the nations."

While the allied armies of Christian soldiery were battering down the walls of the sacred city of Peking, methinks I hear the venerable Li Hung Chang defying the iconoclasts in smothered rage:

"Look on yon gloomy towers!
"Resistance now will but ope new founts of blood, to gush in foaming torrents on our heads!
"Look on yon towers! What can men do who groan beneath the lash of tyranny, and feel the strength of madness?
"Have we not swords?
"Are there not myriads of high-hearted Mongolians who only need a leader to be free?
"Even now we stand within the shadow of the Inquisition and tremble for the future of our race!"

Is not history repeating itself in China, in South Africa, and in the Philippines to-day? Yes.

"Like children in the dark we dare not face the shades that gather round us in the future."

In conclusion: If the Christian world, so-called, can gather any satisfaction from the situation, as it appears to-day, after all their "Christian Endeavors" in the last 1900 years, I do not envy them. Let them enjoy it to their heart's content. I cannot, however, submit without protesting against such gross injustice on the part of the "Christian world."

discount the first conclusion. I have never yet heard or read a single evidence of reincarnation, that seemed to me adequate to justify a conclusion. I know of no reason for thinking the dogma of reincarnation true. But I know very little of all that is, and I may yet find evidence to reverse my present belief. When I do—if I do—I shall accept the truth, whether agreeable to my predilections or not. But I hope this fearful prophecy of mediums will not fulfill.

CONSCIOUSNESS.

"worm" of scripture, because never taught that such a course was evil or offensive to God. In a thousand matters their conditions differ, but we will consider the simple act of dancing. Both have been dancers. One never thought it wrong and in the subjective state derives pleasure from the memory of it. Another danced while convinced it was very wicked. In the subjective state he suffers the "pangs of hell" until he either develops out of that hades or sinks again into coma.

Rising out of that subjective state, that is developing an intelligent consciousness of the objective spirit world, they learn that in all the universe the Infinite hath made the good thing pleasant and the way to avoid suffering in that state, if you must go into it, is to cease here polluting with an evil imagination the natural expression of human nature. You will surely find that it is "evil to him who evil thinks." The fall of man is from the sweet and pure innocence of childhood to the perverted religious condition of imagining everything natural to be iniquitous.

But "we shall not all sleep." There are some developed sufficiently to pass immediately at death to the celestial state, and I want to impress the fact that intercourse with those from the celestial world is a very different thing from those in the subjective or intermediary world.

A world-famous seer tells of witnessing at a deathbed the bright and joyous spiritual body of a young girl emerge from the withered and decrepit physical form of an aged woman. I can easily believe this possible in a particular case. Even these coarse and unwieldly physical bodies respond to the will in some degree under very unfavorable conditions, and reflect the cherished ideal of healthy manhood and womanhood. Much more will the plastic spiritual body or instrument respond. As two twigs bent and released will spring back to the original form with varying promptness so will two spiritual bodies emancipated from physical restraints respond with varying alacrity to the common ideal of fresh and vigorous youth according as it has been cherished in this life.

Continual intercourse with subjected spirits tends to establish an idea of the unreality of the things of the spirit world and make of it little else than a boundless lunatic asylum where each hugs delusions and yet knows the delusions of every other to be what they are. You ask an authority are their houses real—are the animals, the trees, the flowers, the music real? He tells you no, they seem to be the spirit real but are only mental pictures that they create with intense desire and so imagine to have subbstantiality. This would be pure lunacy. On this road we return to the conception of spirits as intelligent nothings floating in a vacuum, talking without mouths, walking without feet, playing on golden harps without gold or any other substance out of which to construct a harp or fingers to manipulate them; thinking without brains, hearing without ears, etc., until all the spiritual realms dissolve "and like the baseless fabric of a vision leave not a rack behind."

Wisconsin Missionary Work.

At a meeting of the Executive Board of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association held in Stevens Point, August 30, Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, president of the Association, was engaged at a salary and expenses by the association to prosecute the missionary work for the fall and winter months. She will solicit individual membership and local societies for charter, etc., and all moneys paid her are turned into the association treasury.

She will begin work about the 15th of the month, going from Stevens Point to Milwaukee, to Madison, to LaCrosse, to Eau Claire. Localities desiring her services will please correspond at once with the secretary of the association, A. A. McIntyre, Junction, Wis., for assignment of dates, etc. This route will occupy about one month and localities that can be reached easily from any point along the route will be assured of assignments if they get their correspondence in early.

Mediums within the state who have open dates will confer a favor by filing same with the secretary as soon as possible. And societies or localities desiring mediums can find engagements also in this way.

It is hoped that in this way the state association will become an aid to the workers as well as to the laymen. It can only be done by thorough and systematic effort on the part of local friends and mediums as well.

Let us hear from you quickly, that engagements may be arranged at least expense for railway fare and traveling expenses. Fraternally,

CAN MORTAL MAN HELP GOD?

If you behold a sinner sad and lone,
Assist him, not for God's sake, but his own;
God does not need your help however wise
And worthy you appear in your own eyes.

The thought of help denotes some sort of need;
Can mortal man help Deity, indeed?
Is He dependent on poor, puny man
For carrying out creation's primal plan?

If so, I'll have to forfeit Faith's reward.
He's not the Deity I've long adored;
My God needs not a parasite's support
To help him make or ornament His court.

He asks no help of heaven, earth or hell,
He's all in all, and doeth all things well—
Go help some sad-eyed seraph in disguise,
You cannot help the Sovereign of the skies.

PACIFIC COAST.

Notes from Los Angeles, Cal.

Los Angeles is destined to be the Hub of Spiritualistic influence of the Pacific coast in the not far distant future. No less than eight Spiritualist meetings were held in this city Sunday, August 26. It was a big day with the Harmonial Association, the largest and strongest society in Southern California, if not in the State. It was the last Sunday of Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie's engagement with the Harmonials, and the occasion of the return of Mrs. Maude L. von Freitag to her charge after a vacation of nearly four months. The Harmonial hall was packed to overflowing. The following testimonial was unanimously adopted, which sufficiently but accurately describes the work of Mrs. Gillespie while among us:

"At the close of an engagement of fifteen weeks, with the Harmonial Association, by Sister Anna L. Robinson-Gillespie, it is befitting as well as a pleasure for the members of this Association, and congregation, to give expression of their appreciation of the valuable services rendered by her, as acting pastor of this society. Her services have been very acceptable, because they have been earnest, efficient and meritorious, in every department of the work. In the Children's Progressive Lyceum, Mrs. Gillespie has proven herself to be an adept—a specialist. As a lecturer she is pleasing and instructive. Her tests and spirit messages are convincing, and of a sympathetic and spiritual trend, instantly subduing the spirit of frivolity and cavil. Socially she has been uniformly affable, cheerful, circumspect and conscientious, and we would emphasize the fact, that at the close of her ministrations, this society is in a very harmonious social condition, and when Mrs. Gillespie leaves Los Angeles, which will not take place until after her camp-meeting engagement is over, she can feel assured that our united good wishes will follow her as a benediction, and she will ever find a gracious welcome by the Harmonials, and all others who have met her, whenever she comes this way again."

The presence of Mrs. Gillespie and Mrs. Freitag, co-operating for the success of the meeting, and both at their best, made the meeting one to be long remembered.

The Harmonials and the Truth Seekers' Society hold no meetings during September.

The Southern California camp-meeting season begins September 2, at Sycamore Grove, Los Angeles. Several prominent workers are now here, ready for the camp work, namely, Allen F. Brown, of San Antonio, Texas; Mrs. Edith E. R. Nickless, lately from San Diego; Mr. and Mrs. O. R. Arnold, of Chicago, and the Brockway family. Of course Mrs. von Freitag and Mrs. Gillespie will be much in evidence at the camp, as a glance at the programme shows, and many other prominent speakers and mediums have signified their determination to be here during some portion of the camp season.

The Spiritualists of Southern California experience one great draw-back to the more rapid growth of our cause—the want of a local Spiritualistic paper, edited by some one who knows something about Spiritualism and less about the materialistic theories of the ancients and the agnostic tyrolistic speculations of modern times. Oh! the trash that is palmed off now-a-days as spiritual philosophy!

MYSTIC CURTAIN.

(Air: "Rock of Ages.")

Mystic curtain, raise for me,
Lift it high so I can see.
Shining spirit give me light;
Mingle with me here to-night;
Help my efforts, be my guide;
Teach me of the other side.

While in bondage here I dwell,
Held for time in Mortal hell;
Give me hope, remove all fear,
Make the future to me clear;
Such is now my daily prayer,
To my loved ones over there.

When my spirit takes its flight,
From the darkness to the light.
Come and meet me at the brink,
Help me weld the mystic link,
Open wide the portal door
To contentment evermore.

FOR a moment stop and consider. The Progressive Thinker is the one original dollar Spiritualist paper. It introduced a new era in the ranks of Spiritualism. Its success financially has been all that could be desired. Notwithstanding the rise in the price of print paper, it has still maintained its status as the only one dollar Spiritualist paper. Not only that, but it introduced the Divine Plan in its business with its subscribers—a portion of the profits of the office returning to them. Just think of the Seven Premium Books being sent out to our subscribers for $2.35. After paying the postage of these seven books, and the expense of mailing them, all that we have left is $1.50. You can readily see that we are furnishing them for less, by far, than the actual cost to us. We do this work in accordance with The Divine Plan, in order to assist in forming the nucleus of a library in every Spiritualist home. Read carefully our premium list, and you will certainly want to become a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker, if not so already, and obtain the books we announce.

SPIRITS GUIDE A TUG CAPTAIN.

Louis Groh Says They Help Him Navigate the Tug O. B. Green.

In the pilot house of the last brown-coated Dunham tug that plies up and down the Chicago River day after day, as set forth in the Chicago Tribune, rides a man who carries with him as passengers the spirits of his dead friends, and other departed mariners whose mortal bodies he never knew. The tug is the O. B. Green, the man her captain, Louis Groh. As he stands during the long hours with one hand on the straight steel lever that guides tug and tow he converses with these old and new friends as freely as with the members of the crew, and from them he obtains both information and advice about the river and the lake. For more than a quarter of a century he has been a master of tug boats on the river, and during that time has acted often on the advice of his spirit friends—advice so good that there are few men on this river or about the lakes with clearer records as careful navigators.

He is a short, thick set man, with steel-gray eyes and a pleasant face, browned and weatherbeaten by many years of exposure. Standing at the lever in the pilot-house of his tug recently he told of many strange experiences with the spirits.

"To begin with I am a Spiritualist from the ground up," he said. "And why wouldn't I be? I have seen many spirits as plain as I now see you, and so have my wife and my boy. Why, right here in this pilot-house I have seen them. It is many years since my uncle died. One night some one woke me up, telling me the tug was wanted. I saw a shadowy form in the door and ran to see who is was and there was no one to be seen. A few minutes later a call came from the office that I was to go out after a tow. A little later, while I was at home, my uncle appeared to me and told me it was he who called me. He has often done it since, coming in a few minutes before the tug is to be needed.

EXPECTS TO FIND CHICORA.

"Maybe you'll believe all this when I locate the Chicora for you. Yes, sir, now you look startled, and well you may. But I'll find it yet. I was visited one day by John Ericson. Didn't know him at first, for I hadn't seen him since he was killed in 1896. Knew him in a minute, though.

"'I'm a-goin' to find the Chicora for you,' he said.

"'How'll I know?' I asked.

"'Well, I'm coming back to see you again and locate it on paper. But if you pass over the spot before that I'll strike you with a chill and throw you to the floor of the pilot-house so you'll know it's the place.'

"We talked a bit longer and then he said Captain Johnny Ferguson wanted to talk to me, so he went away. That was at a trumpet seance, and I expect to go to another soon and hear from him again."

As all river men know, John Ericson was fireman in the tug T. T. Morford when the boiler of that vessel exploded in 1896. At that time the captain of the tug was blown clear over a bridge and dropped, still living, in the river. The engineer, Charles Dick, was blown to the deck of the steamer Ionia and killed; the fireman, Ericson, was killed and blown into the river, and John Ferguson, standing as Captain Groh stood at the steering gear of the O. B. Green, was killed by a fragment of the burst boiler which fell on the tug's pilot-house.

The steamer Chicora left Milwaukee in January, 1895, for St. Joseph, since when nothing has been heard or seen of it, save battered fragments of its upper works. Ed Stines was in command of it and had about twenty-four men under him.

"That isn't the first we have seen of Ericson since he died, either," said Captain Groh, "though the other time it was my niece that saw him, and not I. We couldn't find his body, until he came to her and told her he was in air-line slip and would come to the top if a steamer's wheel churned up the water. I backed the Chemung into the slip and sure enough its wheel brought Ericson's body to the top.

"From John Ferguson I have heard little, though he often calls upon me to pass a greeting. How do all these men appear? Why, just as they did in life. Often I'd scarcely know they were spirits if I did not know they had died. Just the other day I was coming up the river, and as I passed the Goodrich wharf there was old Captain Gilman standing there as natural as life, directing affairs. Dave Cockran was there, too. Now Gilman has been dead since last winter and Dave has been superintendent in his place, yet there was the old man, as real as ever. When I see a man with my eyes and hear him with my ears, why should I doubt he is there? I stood here in the pilot-house door and watched Gilman until we were through Rush street bridge.

TABLE RAISES IN AIR.

"It isn't only here on the tug I see these things, but at home as well. My wife, my niece, my boy, and I all see them and hear them. Sometimes when we are sitting at table or near it it will suddenly lift two or three feet in the air and move around. Often this happens during a conversation, and then we know the spirits want to say something. We ask them what it is and they write it in letters of fire right in the air so that we all, even the boy, can read it. Last winter my aunt died near Detroit. One night as we were talking about it a spirit called our attention and told us that my aunt had left us some money sewed in the bottom of an old rocking chair. I went to Detroit and found the chair, but some one else had cut it open and got the bag of gold.

"These spirits at home are our guiding spirits. Every one has one if he would recognize it. They are with us daily and are always willing to do anything for us. Why, my wife puts them to frequent use. When she mislays anything and cannot find it she asks the spirits. They write in words of fire just where it is, and sure enough there we find it. We put them to daily use thus in countless ways.

"Often my wife feels worried about me and wants to know just where I am and what I am doing. She calls upon her guiding spirit and asks the question. The spirit goes out and sees me and comes back and tells her, all in the twinkling of an eye. Sometimes even she wants to send a message to me and has no way to do so. She merely calls a spirit, asks to have me told and knows it is done. The spirit appears to me here and writes the message for me. Sometimes I can see just the hand, tracing the burning letters. I am used to these things and they do not seem at all strange to me, though they might to another."

While telling these tales of strange visitations Captain Groh was engaged in guiding his tug and its heavy tow through the narrow bridge draws of the South Branch. There was an earnestness, a conviction in his voice and manner that left no doubt as to his absolute sincerity. The listener was moved to cast an apprehensive look over either shoulder and turn quickly around lest one of the visiting spirits should be peeking over his shoulder.

DEAD ALWAYS NEAR HIM.

"There is really little popularly known about spirits and Spiritualism," continued Captain Groh. "As a matter of fact, the dead are all about us and are ready and willing to render us any possible service. My niece, who lives at my house, sometimes sees whole dozens of them in the room about her. These spirits she consults on every personal matter. Why, the largest dry goods merchant on State street is a Spiritualist, and always consults his spirit guide before undertaking any enterprise. Like many well-known society women he has a cabinet in his own home at which he holds private seances. Queen Victoria is a Spiritualist, and has a regular medium always in attendance, through whom she consults the dead Prince Consort whenever anything of moment is on foot.

"George Washington was a Spiritualist. His writings show it. So was Abraham Lincoln and so has been every other great man. The Bible is full of stories of Spiritualists. So it is not strange to me that I am able to see these things."

"Can a ship have a spirit, too, Captain?"

"What do you mean?"

"Well, when the Maine was blown up it was said by New England fishermen that the specter of the destroyed vessel manned by a spirit crew was often seen cruising up and down the coast from 'Quoddy Head to Boone Island light. It used to come along in a fog, and when it was abreast of a vessel the breeze would die out. A chill would come over the water and the vessel passed would seem to shiver as its sails hung idle. The specter crew stood at the guns and the fog-horn was moaning. From the masthead flew the signal, 'We cannot rest until avenged.' The schooner Ethel Merriam came into Booth Bay harbor white all over, though it had gone out black, and Captain John Newman could not be induced to take it out for weeks because he said he had seen the ghost of the Maine.

SPIRITS OF SHIPS.

"Then here on our own coast the lost Chicora has often been descried on a storm wind driving down the sea, with white ice all about it even in midsummer, and with the iceclad form of Captain Stines upon the bridge. Years ago the Thomas Hume sailed out of port one evening, and since then not a vestige of it has been found. Annually, however, on the date of its disappearance a specter schooner glides from under the lee of the northeast breakwater and moves off down the lake, regardless of wind. Once a tug captain followed it to find where it was going, but when it was off Grosse Point and about ten miles from shore suddenly the masts and sails tottered and fell and the hull lurched and disappeared beneath the glassy sea, while a terrible wail from the crew came across the water. Do you believe that these are really the ghosts of the ships, captain?"

Captain Groh looked with dreamy eyes out through the window of the pilot-house. He seemed hardly to see the bridge through which he was skillfully guiding his craft. He shifted the steering bar almost mechanically, now to port, now to starboard, now to steady. He seemed to be in communion with his "guiding spirit" at the moment. His visitor looked expectantly at the open air, thinking to see an answer there in "letters of fire" written by a spirit hand. If such there was none but the captain saw it. He spoke at last, without shifting his gaze.

"I should say rather spirit ships than spirits of ships. There's a vast difference. A vessel is not like a person. You think of it as alive, and yet it is not. When it perishes it perishes entirely. But if the spirits of mariners desired to do so, I see no reason why they should not build or call into being a spirit ship exactly like it. It would be as real to them as the original was to us. On such a ship they could cruise at will. I cannot believe the Maine's crew would be unable to rest until avenged, but I think it probable that they might have taken that means of urging the people on to war against the Spaniards who had destroyed them. So with Stines. He may be showing how he and his crew went to their death. I have often heard of these ships, and yet, strange as it may seem, I have never seen them myself.

TAKES SPIRIT PHOTOGRAPHS.

"A thing I have seen, though, and which proves that there really are spirits all about us, is spirit photographs. Some time ago when my wife was out in Iowa she took a number of photographs. When she came home and developed and printed these we found the spirits. In one picture she thought she noticed a face. She examined it closely and found not only that face but no less than thirty others, none of which had been apparent to her when she made the picture. Almost in the center was her sister smiling at her—her sister who had been dead for years. Since then she has made many others, and on nearly every one of them a spirit is apparent, and some are full of them.

"Sometimes I attend 'trumpet' seances. At such a meeting there is a big tin trumpet which floats about unsupported through the air and is used by the spirits to make their voices loud enough to be heard. Many spirits await their turn to direct the trumpet towards friends and speak through it. It was at such a meeting that John Ericson told me about the Chicora.

MAKE QUICK JOURNEYS.

"At another seance we called upon a spirit to go to my home near Detroit and learn certain things. He went and was back with the information in no time. Another spirit was sent to Sweden on a similar errand, and in twenty-three minutes brought the answer back. And that spirit, speaking through Max Hoffman, a man who had never been in Sweden, told all about Swedish customs and described in detail certain villages from which there were people present. The spirit who went to my home told me all about my people and what each one was doing.

"When I see and hear such things, what am I to believe? That my senses deceive me? Or that what the Bible tells about and what many wise people believe is true and that the spirits really are there, ready to aid and advise us?

"My wife is out at Clinton, Ia., now at a Spiritualist conference, and I promise you there will be strange things done there both through mediums and through those who are not."

Captain Groh and his strange beliefs are well known on the river. The O. B. Green is itself one of the best known boats on the stream and was noted for years as the possessor of the only siren whistle in port—a whistle so noisy and notorious that other sirens, as they were installed, received the generic title of "O. B. Greens." Whenever the tug moves along the river other captains point Groh out as the "ghost master." They lean from their pilot-house doors and watch curiously to see if any shadowy forms can be detected lingering about his boat. All their side remarks, however, cannot influence him to renounce his faith. Has he not the evidence of his senses? And with that he is satisfied and is always ready to argue for his spirit friends.

A Remarkable Manifestation.

When Queen Ulrike, of Sweden, was on her deathbed, her last moments were embittered by regret at the absence of her favorite, the Countess Steenbock, between whom and the queen there existed the most tender and affectionate attachment. Unfortunately, and by a most singular coincidence, the Countess Steenbock, at the same moment lay dangerously ill, at Stockholm, and at too great a distance from the dying queen to be carried to her presence. After Ulrike had breathed her last, the royal corpse, as is customary in that country, was placed in an open coffin, upon an elevated frame, in an apartment of the palace brilliantly illuminated with wax candles. A detachment of Royal Life Guards was stationed in the chamber as a funeral watch. During the afternoon, the outside door of the ante-chamber opened and the Countess Steenbock appeared in deep grief. The soldiers of the guard immediately formed into two lines and presented arms as a mark of respect to the first dame of the palace, who was received and escorted by the commander of the guard into the chamber where lay the body of her dear friend. The officers were surprised at her unexpected arrival, and attributing her silence to the intensity of her grief, conducted her to the side of the corpse, and then retired, leaving her alone, not choosing to disturb the expression of her deep emotion. The officers waited outside for a considerable time, and the Countess not yet returning, they feared some accident had befallen her. The highest officer in rank now opened the door, but immediately fell back in the utmost consternation. The other officers present then hastened into the room, and there they all beheld the queen standing upright in her coffin and tenderly embracing the countess! This was observed by all the officers and soldiers of the guard. Presently the apparition seemed to waver, and resolved itself into a dense mist. When this had disappeared the corpse of the queen was seen reposing in its former position on the bed of state. But the countess was nowhere to be found. In vain they searched the chamber and the adjoining rooms—not a trace of her could be discovered.

A courier was at once dispatched to Stockholm with an account of this extraordinary occurrence; and there is was learned that the countess Steebock had not left the capital, but that she had died at precisely the same moment when she was seen in the arms of the deceased queen. An extraordinary protocol of this occurrence was immediately ordered to be taken by the officers of the government, and which was countersigned by all present. This document is still preserved in the archives. —Translated from a German work, "Existender Geister und ihr Einfluss ouf die Sfnnerwelt," by Fr. Nork.

Haslett Park Camp, Mich.

Tuesday morning conference was conducted by Brother Claman; the subject, "Obsession." Afternoon, song by Mrs. Claman. Then our speaker A. E. Tisdaye, was introduced to the friends for the first time at Haslett Park.

Wednesday, as usual, morning debate, "Truth and Its Realities." Some solid thoughts were sent out. Evening, D. R. Daniels, of New York, gave one of his scientific lectures.

Thursday, conference. "Is Spiritualism Worth Supporting," which was decided yes, and to support it in the home as well as the camps.

Friday brought the friends to the hall to again listen to our speaker. He took for his text "Reason and Belief." Friday evening was our closing dance of the season. Masquerade was the pleasure of the people. There were sold one hundred and fifteen tickets at the door. It was the largest party ever given at this camp. The hall was filled to its utmost capacity.

Saturday afternoon we had a discourse on "War and Its Workings." Saturday evening we all gathered at the hall for a love feast and good time generally.

Sunday was the closing of the camp. People came in early and eager to get the last words given. Brother Tisdale came to the front and took for his discourse "The Building up of Humanity," which was a lesson each and all can profit by. He spoke two hours to an audience of some three or four hundred. It was said to be one of the best discourses ever given.

Our camp has been the pleasantest; all have enjoyed themselves to the highest. We had with us Mrs. Ruddick, of Franklin, Ind., slate-writing and trumpet medium, who is one of the best. Her slate-writing is given in the light and on top of the table.

MRS. O. H. SOULE.

ACROSTIC—THE SOUL.

Precious is the dream of sages,
Reaching down through vanished ages.
Over death to be victorious,
Gaining life, eternal glorious;
Reaching Hope's glad, full fruition
Escaping each low, vile condition.
Soul! serene, triumphant, give
Steadfast care how thou shouldst live.
In thy brief span upon the earth,
Value that which has true worth,
Earning thus the heavenly birth.

That which makes "our lives sublime,"
Holding sway throughout all time,
Is the spirit, soul, or mind.
Not to perish when this mortal
Kneels and passes through death's portal;
Entering but Life's wider sphere,
Raised from narrow limits here.

W. L. BROWN

Summarily Ordered to Leave Camp.

HIS SLEIGHT-OF-HAND METHODS FOUND NO FAVOR AMONG THE PROMINENT SPIRITUALISTS AT CHESTERFIELD CAMP.

Anderson, Ind., August 27.—The convention of the Indiana State Spiritualist Association ended this evening, after the most successful meeting in its history. The association is about $4,000 ahead financially and is now entirely out of debt. The total attendance was about 50,000. The directors this afternoon decided to make some extensive improvements for next year, and several cottages will be erected for rental purposes.

Prof. W. L. Brown, of Cleveland, was summarily ordered to leave the camp yesterday by the officers of the association. Brown and his wife were engaged to be present and give a series of seances. Brown responded, but was not accompanied by his wife. He soon appeared with a woman from Marion, Ind., but the board would not tolerate him upon the grounds. This is the only unpleasant feature that has marred the state meeting.—Indianapolis Journal, Aug. 28, 1900.

To the Editor:—In regard to the latter part of the above clipping, I wish to say that the man Brown, above mentioned, was not invited to our camp either by the committee on mediums or by the association, and therefore, of course, he was not offered the sum of two hundred dollars as reported by a leading daily, or any other sum:

He came here at the request of Charles Barnes and wife, mediums who were on the grounds and who had recently come from Lake Brady, where Brown was holding forth.

Brown came here and held two seances at which it was clearly demonstrated that he was an adept at sleight-of-hand, and plans were laid to expose the gentleman's practices, but on account of his hurried and sensational departure from Chesterfield camp, we were forced to forego the pleasure of a thorough exposure of his methods.

Brown's sleight-of-hand practices are very simple and it is one of the peculiar problems of human existence how any intelligent person could be duped by them.

In his light seances he sits in front of the cabinet and has one person sit with him on either side who are supposed to hold his hands. Then all three are covered over with a black cloth, leaving only their heads and one hand of each member of the committee exposed. Then the tambourine begins to jingle, a bell is rung, and a chair in the cabinet bounces around as if it were alive and immediately the curtain is raised and all three walk forth with hands still clasped, and the spectators are invited up to inspect the cabinet.

The way this trick is done is very simple. The medium selects his own committee and he places the "easiest" member on his right hand and the other on his left, then he instructs each of them to place their hand on his knee. Then he locks little fingers with the one on his left and takes hold of the little finger of the one on his right. Then when the curtain is being adjusted it is only the work of an instant to bring his knees together, slip the little finger of the person on his right into the free fingers and thumb of his left hand, thus leaving his right hand to show at the top of the curtain, ring the bells, write the messages and do the other tom-foolery which makes up his show.

In the latter part of his "seance" he sits alone and his hands are supposed to be securely fastened with a pair of handcuffs. But the handcuffs are his own and are the common trick kind which can be opened without a key, and he is no sooner in position, the lights turned down and the singing commenced, than his hands are out of the cuffs and appear above the curtain.

In the first part of his "seance" when his hands are supposed to be held by a committee, only one hand ever appears; that is, it is either all right hands or all left hands, depending upon whether the "easy" person is on the right or left hand; but in the latter part of his show when he sits alone both hands are used.

I desire to say in conclusion that there has never been held a more prosperous, harmonious and successful meeting on Chesterfield camp than the one just closed; and the policy of this camp in reference to phenomenal mediums is largely the cause of this harmonious condition which has obtained.

Genuine and honest mediumship can have no better or more favorable conditions nor can genuine and honest mediums find warmer or truer friends than at Chesterfield camp—but let fakirs beware! the very atmosphere of this camp would be poison to them.

F. J. MACOMBER.

Anderson, Ind.

We have been informed that this man Brown was an intimate friend of Benny Foster, one of the sleekest sleight-of-hand imitators of the spiritual phenomena that has ever been before the public in this city. Benny's conduct here was severely condemned by every honest Spiritualist.

This man Brown was at the camp at Lake Helen, Florida. He will not be wanted there again. His methods at Mt. Carroll, Ill., were such that Spiritualists there will not want his manifestations again. Lake Brady had him this summer, and if the officers employ him again, Spiritualists generally will avoid it.

The officers of the Chesterfield camp deserve great credit for the course they have pursued in expelling those from their grounds who employ sleight-of-hand in imitating the Spiritual phenomena. We predict a bright future for this camp.

Franklin Camp, Neb.

To the Editor:—In justice to the devotion shown by the officers of Franklin Camp, Neb., I present herewith a few of the most prominent features worthy of recognition:

Among those who were on the grounds before my wife and I arrived were James Campbell, Havelock, Neb., president of the State Spiritualist Association; C. H. Moody, Otego, Kans., lecturer; H. Davis, Franklin, Neb., a rapidly rising young speaker; Mrs. Laura Payne, of Topeka, Kansas, was a great acquisition to the faculty, more than being a speaker she is also a composing musician, many of her ballads are very sweet and touching. Mr. W. E. Bonney, of Blair, Neb., delivered a number of scholarly addresses, showing that peculiar scholarship arising out of intuition rather than reading.

Mrs. Annie Gillette, being exclusively under the employ of Franklin Camp as a platform test medium, did splendid work in the morning circles and benefit seances held in the interest of the camp. Many of her tests were of remarkable character, especially those given to a family of the name of Graff; the father was totally blind and the expressions of joy and sadness that swept his face during a description of his daughter's death by lightning were pathetic to the extreme. All were eminently satisfied with Mrs. Gillette's work on the camp's rostrum.

During the same seance Mrs. C. L. Ferris was doing very fine work among others present. Her work on the platform was remarkably correct and brought much favorable comment.

Mrs. Mary J. Bonney rendered faithful service at the circles and as a speaker on the platform.

C. H. Simpson, secretary of the camp, delivered a very worthy address on Biblical Spiritualism; it had the scholarly character of freedom from abuse.

The Reeves family furnished splendid music for all occasions.

This camp has stirred up such an interest in Spiritualism that the aversion which at first stood in the road is now swept away and the young people come for miles around to hear the lectures and tests and enjoy the dances that held three times a week during the camp. The story is told that in the first year of the camp the boys stood outside and shouted at the campers, either in derision or fear, but it now follows that where the orthodox churches have been turned into dwelling houses or deeply encumbered with debts, the cause of Spiritualism has thrived and enlisted the respect of the whole community. Much credit is due to its founder and devoted supporter, Father D. L. Haines, a true old Quaker.

When leaving I saw the familiar face of D. W. Hull, an able exponent from Norton, Kans. Mr. Hull is widely known, he needs no introduction as he has announced himself boldly like a brave old pioneer in the cause he loves so well.

E. F. Barrows and myself are among the uncelebrities of the occasion. He did good work, mostly in a private way, diagnosing disease by mail, and giving tests on the spur of the moment as they came to him. I delivered three lectures, 1, "The Progress of Spiritualism"; 2, "Character Sketches"; 3, "The Philosophy of Mediumship."

We hope to see another and greater camp next year.

This Remarkable Book.

The second edition of this book, "Death Defeated, or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young," has just appeared on fine cream-colored paper, revised and enlarged with Dr. Peebles' famous fifteen commandments—Moses had but ten.

This volume going to the foundation of things treats of heredity, conception, gestation, marriage, divorce, health, hygiene, the foods, vegetarianism, the foods of Pythagoras, Herodotus, Hesiod, Homer, Shelley, Graham, Thoreau and others, as well as revealing the secret of how to keep young. The press, secular, religious and spiritual, of one accord sound the praises of this all-important book.

The Banner of Light in reviewing it, said: "This volume of the venerable youthful 'Spiritual Pilgrim' is rich in facts, in historical references, and gives no end of valuable information upon psychic subjects. It is written in the author's usually clear, concise style, attracting the reader by its logic, its solid arguments and sometimes startling statements."

Dr. Peebles has a message to give to the world and he has given it in the happiest possible manner, thus adding another star to his literary sky. The book is incisive, outspoken, helpful, soulful and hopeful. Price of the same is $1. For sale by Dr. Peebles, Battle Creek, Mich., the Banner of Light, Boston, The Progressive Thinker, Chicago; the Light of Truth, Columbus, O.; the Religio-Philosophical Journal, San Francisco, Cal., and the liberal press generally.

A SONG OF THE DEPARTED.

This song was sung to me while asleep in bed, and was set to the sweetest music I think I ever heard. It was sung by my two children (a boy and a girl) who died eighteen years ago in their infancy. They stood by my bedside while they sang. Their features were as plain to me, as any person I ever saw in my wakeful state. They were full-grown persons, but the singular part is, that I knew them both, and knew them to be my children, Rosa and Adelbert Boyd.

She was fairer by far than the flowers of our valley,
Or the bright tiger lily that grows by the stream,
Her voice was like music, our tired
heart to rally,
While her eyes of blue azure so fondly would beam.

Now you miss your sweet Rosebud, so happy in glory;
We're watching your life as you journey along,
And Della beside is telling his story
Of how happy we feel while we sing
you this song. J. W. BOYD.

Volume II. 334 pages, beautifully printed and nicely bound. Original matter. Six portraits. Cloth bound, 75 cents.

Joan, the Medium.

Or, the Inspired Heroine of Orleans. Spiritualism as a Leader of Armies. By MOSES HULL. This is at once the most truthful history of Joan of Arc, and one of the most convincing arguments on Spiritualism ever written. No novel was ever more thrillingly interesting; no history more true. Price in cloth, 40 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

The Real Issue.

By MOSES HULL. A compound of the two pamphlets, "The Irrepressible Conflict," and "Your Answer or Your Life," with important additions, making a book of 160 pages all for 25 cents. This book contains statistics, facts and documents, on the tendencies of the times, that every one should have.

All About Devils.

Or, an Inquiry as to whether Modern Spiritualism and other Great Reforms come from His Satanic Majesty and His Subordinates in the Kingdom of Darkness. 60 pages. By MOSES HULL. Price, 15 cents.

Jesus and the Mediums, or Christ and Mediumship.

Careful comparison of some of the Spiritualism and Mediumship of the Bible with that of to-day. By MOSES HULL. An invincible argument proving that Jesus was only a medium, subject to all the conditions of modern mediumship. It also shows that all the manifestations throughout the Old and New Testament were under the same conditions that mediums require to-day; and that the coming of Christ is the return of mediumship to the world. 48 pages. Price, 10 cents.

The Spiritual Birth, or Death and Its To-Morrow.

The Spiritual Idea of Death, Heaven and Hell. By MOSES HULL. This pamphlet besides giving the Spiritualistic interpretation of many things in the Bible—interpretations never before given, explains the heavens and hells believed in by Spiritualists. Price, 10 cents.

The Quarantine Raised.

Or the Twenty Years Battle Against a Worker Ended. Price 10 cents.

Spiritualo Songster.

By MATTIE E. HULL. Thirty-eight of Mrs. Hull's sweetest songs, adapted to popular music, for the use of congregations, circles and families. Price, 10 cts., or $6 per hundred.

Joys Beyond the Threshold

A SEQUEL TO THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH.

BY LOUIS FIGUIER.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH was written to develop the idea of the principle of the permanence of the human soul after death, and its reincarnation in a chain of new beings, whose successive links are unrolled in the bosom of etherial space. "BEYOND THE TOMORROW" continues on the same lines, enlarging and expanding the idea by reasons and considerations drawn from science and philosophy; claiming that the certainty of a new birth beyond our earthly end is the best means of arming ourselves against all weakness in the presence of death, and that the help offered by science and philosophy to that end is far superior to that of any of the existing religions. From beginning to end it is interesting, entertaining, instructive and fascinating, and whether one accepts it all or not, much will have been learned and much pleasure enjoyed in its perusal. Price $1.25 For sale at this office.

The To-Morrow of Death.

---OR THE--- Future Life According to Science.

BY LOUIS FIGUIER.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY S. R. CROCKER.

A VERY FASCINATING WORK.

This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in addition to the needs of the general reader. The author is not a Spiritualist—he even mentions Spiritualists as "devotees of a new superstition," etc., etc., in which he manifests the usual animus of the "scientific class," yet he says again: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and he goes on to relate instances of fact in evidence. There is, to a Spiritualist, a manifest discrepancy in the author's ideas, but the well-read mind will readily select and arrange the pros and cons, and out of the whole will find not only good mental culture, but much valuable information. The author holds the theory of reincarnation. Price $1.25. For sale at this office.

By Andrew Jackson Davis. Something you should read. Price 50 cents. For sale at this office.

KAREZZA.

ETHICS OF MARRIAGE.

By Alice B. Stockham, M. D.

Karezza makes a plea for a better birthright for children, and aims to lead individuals to seek a higher development of themselves through most sacred relations. It is pure in tone and aim, and should be widely circulated. Price, cloth, $1.

ASTRAL WORSHIP.

By J. H. Hill, M. D. A valuable contribution to the current discussion of religious problems. The author by illustrations and a planisphere (a representation of the celestial sphere upon a plane with adjustable circles), traces most of the myths which lie at the base of Christianity to their origin in sun and star worship. The astronomical facts give to poems great value, the illustrations rare and curious. The book is bound in only one style—heavy boards. Price $1. For sale at this office.

Superstition in all Ages

Or "Le Bon Sens," By JEAN MESLIER,

A Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastoral service of thirty years in France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and asked God's pardon for having taught the Christian religion. He left this volume as his last will and testament to his parishioners and to the world. Translated from the French original by Miss Anna Knoop.

Post 8vo., 339 pages, with portrait. Cloth, $1.00; postage, 14 cents.

"The work of the honest pastor is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind that the last century produced. . . . Paine and Voltaire had reserves, but Jean Meslier had none. He keeps nothing back; and yet, after all, the wonder is not that there should have been one priest who left that testimony at his death, but that all priests do not."—James Parton.

Single copy	5 cts

REMITTANCES.

Remit by Postoffice Money Order, Registered Letter, or draft on Chicago or New York. It costs from 10 to 15 cents to get checks cashed on local banks, so don't send them unless you wish that amount deducted from the amount sent. Direct all letters to J. R. Francis, No. 40 Loomis Street, Chicago, Ill.

CLUBS! IMPORTANT SUGGESTION!

As there are thousands who will at first venture only twenty-five cents for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER thirteen weeks, we would suggest to those who receive a sample copy, to solicit several others to unite with them, and thus be able to remit from $1 to $10, or even more than the latter sum. A large number of little amounts will make a large sum total, and thus extend the field of our labor and usefulness. The same suggestion will apply in all cases of renewal of subscriptions—solicit others to aid in the good work. You will experience no difficulty whatever in inducing Spiritualists to subscribe for THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER, for not one of them can afford to be without the valuable information imparted therein each week, and at the price of only about two cents per week.

A Bountiful Harvest for 25 Cents.

Do you want a more bountiful harvest than we can give you for 25 cents? Just pause and think for a moment what an intellectual feast that small investment will furnish you. The subscription price of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER thirteen weeks is only twenty-five cents! For that amount you obtain one hundred and four pages of solid, substantial, soul-elevating and mind-refreshing reading matter, equivalent to a medium-sized book!

TAKE NOTICE!

☞ At expiration of subscription, if not renewed, the paper is discontinued. No bills will be sent for extra numbers.

☞ If you do not receive your paper promptly, write to us, and errors in address will be promptly corrected, and missing numbers supplied gratis.

☞ Whenever you desire the address of your paper changed, always give the address of the place to which it is then sent, or the change cannot be made.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The Progressive Thinker is furnished in the United States at $1.00 per year, the postage thereon being but nominal, but when it is sent to foreign countries we are compelled to charge 50 cents extra, making the yearly subscription $1.50. Please bear that in mind.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1900.

The Church Has a Flag of Its Own.

By every possible device the church is pushing its claims in every conceivable manner, and in its arrogance has no respect for the rights of those who oppose it. As a forerunner of putting "God in the Constitution," a church flag has been adopted. It is the invention of Bishop Coleman of the Episcopal Diocese of Delaware. The flag the Bishop has unfurled is over nine feet square, purple in color, and has a white cross emblazoned on its broad field. Of his flag the Bishop says:

"We all know the power of a flag. How it appeals to our better nature, and bestirs us to a lively remembrance and to heroic deeds. For ages the state all over the world has its flag of various hues and designs, according to race and nationality. Indeed, it is one of the first things which a new government adopts.

"Why should the church be without a flag? For some time I have been thinking over the matter, and at last, with the valued aid of two friends, who are experts in heraldry, determined upon a design which has been thoroughly well executed in bunting by a widely-known Philadelphia firm.

"I wanted something which, while it had a relation to our national flag, should have something essentially ecclesiastical. The cross in the white field is in shape what is known as a bishop's cross, its arms florented."

Is not the splendid National flag good enough for these preachers? It has given liberty to these churchmen, which enables them to plot the overthrow of the principles it represents.

Think of the petty churches flying their petty flags from the top of their steeples, or from a flagstaff in front of their doors? Yet why not? Is it not the "church militant," the fighting church? Has it not been a fighting church through the ages? Give it the power, will it not be a fighting church, which will as remorselessly, as in the past, strike down the free thinker?

There is no law against anybody so disposed adopting a bit of colored rag as an emblem, as long as they do not mutilate the national Stars and Stripes; it is a matter of personal taste. Yet few American would prefer any other than the glorious banner, which stands throughout the world for liberty and justice; for all that makes for the highest civilization.

Blessings That Follow the Flag.

"The New Voice," of New York, the recognized organ of the Prohibitionists, makes a woeful showing of affairs in Manila. Reports of the awful inroads of intemperance in our new possessions induced the publishers to send a special commission, in the person of Wm. E. Johnson, to visit the Philippines, study the liquor traffic from personal observation, and report his findings.

Mr. Johnson has just made his report, which is published at length in The New Voice. He says he found 1,100 places where intoxicants are openly and publicly sold in the city of Manila; that this does not include the innumerable resorts situated in alleys, "blind pigs," and other fraudulent devices to avoid publicity.

Says a prominent Republican journal, in quoting the facts which we have greatly condensed: "Such seem to be the 'blessings' of civilization that follow the flag."

Banish the Alcohol.

The British government, to increase the soldiers' efficiency, has deprived its army of every species of alcohol. Experiments demonstrated that grog enervates instead of invigorating those who use it. Alcoholic stimulants are more destructive in tropical climates than elsewhere. Temperance societies and workers, instead of making war on canteens should discharge their heaviest batteries at alcohol, then they will be sustained by the intelligence of the age. They should not mistake the vessel for its contents, and war upon the former.

The Pesky Mosquito.

Malarial fevers are traced by recent investigations, to minute parasites which gain access to the corpuscles of the blood through the action of a certain species of mosquito, bred in swamps and marshy districts. Nettings excluding these pestiferous creatures from injecting their spores into the blood is given as the best protection against the action of this little meddler in human affairs.

It has been known for years that the ordinary house-fly is a deadly agent in injecting poisons into the human veins; but the mosquito was not mistrusted as a source of danger until very lately.

The War-Cloud Enlarging.

Every breeze from whatever quarter brings accounts of war and bloodshed. National strife is no longer sectional, nor is it limited to the islands of the seas, but it is common to every continent, and every country is somewhat involved. Worse than all, the gloom is constantly becoming more profound.

Down there in South Africa the Boers, defeated in battles and overborne by numbers, their capital in possession of the enemy, and their president "in the brush," yet the fight goes on.

In the interior and along the West coast of Africa the British are trying to whip the natives into submission.

The latest news from Italy shows there is a state of unrest between the Vatican and the young king which may eventuate in bloodshed at any time. The Pope is ambitious, old as he is, to regain lost power. The Catholic world sympathizes with him and will gladly lend him aid.

The Kurds are again represented at war with the Armenians and the Sultan is ambitious to preserve peace; but antagonistic elements are against him. The Armenians are aggressive, and backed by Christians of other countries, they are unwilling to submit to Mohammedan rule. The Kurds covet strife, so collisions and slaughter are inevitable.

Our troubles with China have only just begun. It is now apparent the enemy retired before the allied powers in their march on Pekin, to collect their forces, with the intention of attacking them in front and rear, and overwhelming them if possible with numbers. The destruction and looting of the Chinese northern capital has aroused a spirit it will be difficult to crush.

But the great strife will come when the allied armies are no longer bound together by a common interest. Already there are heartburnings which cannot be suppressed. A few weeks and they may take form. We are in hopes our own government will stand aloof, and allow distant nations to settle their contention as best they can.

But oh, the horrors of war! Very few other than those engaged in it have any just conception of its debasing character. A duel in which two brave but misguided men meet in deadly encounter and deliberately murder each other, is terrible to contemplate. That between Burr and Hamilton, in which the latter, a nation's favorite, fell, was sad beyond expression, and will be memorable while the nation lasts; while that in 1838, fought between the two Congressmen, Cilley of Maine, and Graves of Kentucky, with rifles, in which the former was killed, shocked the world; but when powerful nations fall upon each other, in which the lives of perhaps hundreds of thousands are involved, and the resources of populous empires are wasted, no pen can describe, no tongue can express, no imagination can conceive the horrors of the event. The consequences, the pains, and agonies, and heart-aches are not limited to the battle field, or the hospital, but they extend to every house whence brave warriors come to do and dare, and die.

It was hoped the great conference of the so-called Christian powers, in late session at The Hague, looking to arbitration of national disputes, would eventuate in a long period of profound peace. Instead of that hope being realized, it only brought the parties together so they could war the more successfully against nations not represented on that commission.

To intensify the hate for war and scenes of slaughter we beg leave to make a brief extract from a letter from John McGregor Carlisle, of the 9th Infantry, who was engaged with his regiment in the capture of Tien Tsin, and who wrote his parents at length at Grand Rapids, Mich. It was published in the Chicago Journal, of the 28th ult. The writer closes his account of that destructive contest by saying:

"We ran out of ammunition, every man having fired 300 shots. Our guns would get wet, and when we kept them from touching the water they would become redhot. Our shoulders were also very lame from so much shooting.

"During the night we advanced with the Japs to the wall and blew it up with guncotton, and on the morning of the 14th the Stars and Stripes floated with the Japanese flag over old Tien Tsin. With fixed bayonets we slaughtered them. The streets are blocked with the dead and the river is filled with floating bodies.

"Many Chinese got on their knees and begged, but too late. We would jab the bayonet through them, give it a turn, and kick them off with our feet. When all was over and we had returned to our camp we were a sight to see. We were very tired and could see nothing but that battle. I would have given a world then if I could have been at home. I am truly thankful to God that I am living. We lost in all, killed and wounded, 175 men.

"I must close, as we are in a hurry. Mother, don't worry."

But there are other mothers, those in Chinese homes, who will "worry," and languish, and die, because of the loss of their dear ones, just as would the mother of this narrater of war's doings had her loved son been pierced by a bayonet and kicked from its point to be be thrust into other hearts.

Without regard to our respective religious prejudices, let us resist this war spirit which is rampant at this time, the young men making a rush to enlist in the army or navy, anxious to participate in the still pending bloody strife.

Women Must Wear Hats.

Rev. J. H. Quinn, rector of Holy Angels' Catholic church, Buffalo, N. Y., has settled the question for his church, which ruling it is presumed will become a precedent for all other churches of all denominations. He did not cite Paul, but struck right out from his own lips with words that burn, thusly:

"This is the house of God, and every respect should be shown to him by those who enter it. From this time on it is forbidden, at any time of day, for women, young or old, to come into the Holy Angels' church without covering on their heads. This applies also to weddings. There is no exception made.'

Nature's adornment, a nice covering of hair, will not suffice for women when they go to church; even the kidling with her curls, or the matron with silver locks, is not exempt from this requirement, so lovely woman must "stoop to folly" and wear a hat else be expelled from the church of the Holy Angels. And sensible women will quietly submit to this priestly dictation! But a question right here: Men are required to remove the covering of their heads when they enter the church, out of respect to God. By what law of ethics is the rule reversed which requires woman's head to be covered, when a man's head is bare?

Warned by a Spirit Voice.

It appears from the Philadelphia (Pa.) Record that Boston students of telepathy, theosophy and other occult sciences are deeply interested in and making a close examination of mysterious happenings in the household of Mr. and Mrs. George Jennings, of Temple street, Mount Washington, Haverhill.

Those who have hitherto believed partially in telepathy or the communion of souls have had their faith confirmed by the authenticated story of how a young girl saved her father from death while she was at a distance from him, while many of those who have placed no faith whatever in occult things have been compelled to assume a more tolerant attitude toward believers in the cult.

The established facts in this case, which is attracting so much attention among the seekers after the mysterious and the occult, are as follows:

Just before 10 o'clock last Saturday night the protective gates at the Washington street railroad crossing in Haverhill were lowered to allow of the passage of a shifting engine backing up with three cars. Coincident with the lowering of the gates there arrived at the crossing James Snee and George Jennings, of Haverhill. The gateman shouted at these men as they stooped and passed under the gates and started to cross the tracks.

The shifting engine and the cars were on the third track from the gate under which the men had passed, and nearing the crossing at a speed of 10 miles an hour. Jennings crossed the first two tracks, then suddenly turned and ran back. Snee reached the third track and was run down and horribly mangled by the engine and cars. Mr. Jennings was not injured.

The time at which this fatality occurred was correctly noted, both by the railroad men and the police, who came after the body with a patrol wagon. It was 9:42 p. m.

The house where Mr. Jennings lives with his wife and children, is a mile and a quarter from the scene of the accident. One of his children is a girl 15 years old. She has been seriously ill for some time, requiring the constant attention of her parents and the daily attendance of a physician. The girl was apparently getting better, and was not considered in any danger, but her mother was with her in her room Saturday night, sitting by her bedside. The girl was apparently half asleep, but she suddenly drew herself to a sitting posture in the bed, her eyes stared as though she was greatly frightened, and immediately she appeared to lose consciousness, sinking down to the bed.

Her condition alarmed her mother, who felt that her daughter was dying, and she called the other members of the family at once, one running for the family physician, Dr. George E. Goodwin. The doctor says that it was 20 minutes of 10 when he was called and three minutes later he was at the bedside of the sick girl, who had then returned to consciousness, and had several times cried out in a terrified tone of voice:

"Papa, do not cross the tracks. One is enough. You will be killed."

The doctor gave the girl opiates and gradually she became quiet, falling asleep.

Mrs. Jennings regarded the cries of her daughter as having been occasioned by her illness, which had affected her brain, and this belief was shared by the physician, who however, considering the ailment of his patient, had not anticipated any mental disturbance.

They were discussing the case together at 10:30 when Mr. Jennings, nervous and shaken up by the tragedy he had witnessed, and from which he had escaped by the narrowest of margins, arrived at his home.

In part he explained, as the believers in the occult assert, the cause of his daughter's outcry. He told in detail of his having approached the railroad crossing in company with Snee, and of attempting to follow him across the third tracks, when he was restrained from doing so by some power that he could not understand.

He had not seen the engine and cars coming, and he had not heard the cries of the flagman, neither had he heard the voice of his daughter, as the telepathists think he should have heard and been able to certify to, to make the case complete, but something, a force that he did not understand, turned him back from the death which confronted him.

The telepathists say it was the guardian influence of his daughter's mind which did it. They say that to even the most confirmed doubter of the theory that mind can bridge all distances and that there are soul waves which travel unseen and which maintain watch as guardians over those they love, and this incident must be admitted as convincing, for the facts are confirmed by most reliable persons.

The Jennings girl is getting better and stronger every day, but she cannot recall what she saw or what she said when she was in her apparently half conscious state screaming out a warning to her father a mile and more away from her bedroom.

Prayer Chain for McKinley.

Fremont, Ind., Sept. 4.—As a sort of offset to the W. C. T. U. prayer chain a woman of this city suggests a "Presidential prayer chain."

It is built on the same idea as is the W. C. T. U. plan and works the same way. Letters pledging the receiver to pray daily for the success of McKinley are sent to women thought to be in accord with the project, and each of them in turn sends out four copies to friends.

The proposal has been received with favor and is now being put in operation. A great number of letters will form the links of the "endless chain."

The above is from the Chicago Tribune. Here comes a "tug of war." The W. C. T. U. are praying to God that President McKinley may be relegated to the rear, while others equally as "good" Christians, are praying that he may be re-elected. One side, of course, will have its prayers answered. The whole thing looks ridiculous in the extreme.

Toughs in a Prize Fight.

Rev. J. D. Griffin, an evangelist, has come to Chicago in the role of "God's prize-fighter." He proposes a contest with the Devil, and expects to whip him in a few rounds. A good psychologist, he is sure to bring the sisters under influence, even if he fails in his principal mission, so forcibly expressed in one of his own songs:

"I can knock out the devil in twenty rounds,
Good-by, old devil, good-by.
Knock him down, way out of bounds,
Good-by, old devil, good-by.
By, devil, by, by,
Good-by, old devil, good-by."

IONS OF CREATIVE FORCE. A STARTLING THEORY.

Experiments With Chemicals in Propagating Marine Animals.

BELIEVES SAME PRINCIPLE CAN BE USED WITH MAMMALS—SCIENTISTS ARE INTENSELY INTERESTED IN CHICAGO MAN'S DISCOVERY.

To the Editor:—As set forth in the Chicago Chronicle, wonderful discoveries are being brought to the surface. A Chicago man of science has just demonstrated to the scientific world that the theory of parthenogenesis is applicable to more than one form of animal life. To anyone but a person thoroughly versed in the minutiae of biology the statement does not mean much, but the explanation contains revelations little short of startling.

It means that a persistent professor of physiology has discovered a mystifying process of producing young from the ovum or egg of female animals by making a combination of chemicals take the place of the male parent. The early experiments were with animals of a lower order of life, but the scientists declare they will prove the principle applicable to all animal kind, including mammalians, this being the generic term under which come human beings. The assertion contains an announcement of generation and production that is almost revolutionary, as the simplest reader can see the possibilities it involves.

PROFESSOR LOEB'S EXPERIMENT.

The theory of parthenogenesis, or the production of young by a single parent, has been a theme of lively interest for a good many years. Professor Loeb, head of the department of physiology and experimental biology at the Chicago University, has been the first to offer actual proof of its truth. Last year Professor Loeb conducted a series of experiments in the famous laboratory at Wood's Hall, Mass., which resulted in the hatching of unfertilized eggs of the sea urchin. Professor Loeb took the eggs before they were touched by the milt of the male. He applied the chemicals and placed them in sea water. Young sea urchins were produced.

These experiments proved that parthenogenesis holds good in the case of the sea urchin. They did not, however, indicate that the theory is applicable to all animal life. This indication was not given until this summer, when Professor Loeb again went to Wood's Hall laboratory and spent many weeks experimenting with a higher order of animal life. The starfish was the subject under observation this time, and the result was the same as that in the case of the sea urchin. Young starfish were as readily produced from the unfertilized eggs by the action of the chemicals as had been the young sea urchins.

ELEMENT USED SUCCESSFULLY.

Professor Loeb has just written to his associates at the university regarding these last experiments, which establish beyond a reasonable doubt that parthenogenesis is true not only of all marine animals, but also of the mammalians. R. W. Webster of the university biological department said yesterday that Professor Loeb has written frequently describing his experiments in a general way and stating that they have been gratifyingly successful. "Professor Loeb has produced young starfish just as he did urchins," Mr. Webster said, "and this fact pretty well determines that the theory will be found capable of general application. Professor Loeb believes that the young of mammalians can be produced in much the same way as the young of marine animals, according to the same principle, at least."

Professor Loeb's description of the remarkable experiments is intensely interesting. He has written: "In the course of repeated experiments with concentrated sea water and the eggs of the sea urchin I came to the conclusion that by making two changes in the constituents of the water the eggs might be made to produce perfect embryos without being fertilized. It seemed to me that all the milt of the male needed to carry to the eggs for fertilization were ions, or elements, to effect these changes. Actual trial showed this to have been a correct supposition. I have no doubt that this same principle holds good in the process of fertilization among many other, if not all, marine animals, and it is reasonable to suppose that what is true of the sea urchin is true of mammalians.

"It is possible that only ions of blood prevent the parthenogenetic origin of embryos in mammalians. It is not impossible that a transitory change in the ions may allow a complete parthenogenesis."

MECCA OF SCIENTISTS.

Wood's Hall, where Professor Loeb is working, is the Mecca of American scientists. The village is at the extreme end of the neck of land extending from the southeast shore of Buzzard's bay. The marine biological laboratory was established there in 1888, the idea of such an institution having been first proposed and carried forward by the American pioneer of science, Alexander Agassiz, in 1873.

Professors in the pure sciences in institutions of learning in all parts of the United States hold a rendezvous there every summer for the purpose of original research. For the last two years Professor Loeb has been the center of attraction, because his experiments with the chemicals on the production of young animals are vitally related to the chemical theory of life believed by most of the men who work at the famous laboratory.

THEORY OF CREATION.

These scientists contend that life originated on earth through the combination, in the course of the evolution of the world, of chemicals which compose the simple protoplasmic cells. They believe that these cells through the long course of countless centuries of growth have been modified and influenced by circumstances and changes in the world about them and have produced by natural means all that is alive to-day. They hold that the species has been differentiated by natural means and that the development from cell to man is but a steady and constant growth.

This is the theory. To establish it they have sought to produce artificially that combination which becomes instead of a mere combination, a unit, or cell, which has the power of moving itself, growing and reproducing itself step by step until the goal is reached. All the discoveries involving the creation of life by chemicals are of thrilling interest to these savants, and that is why Professor Loeb's work has attracted wide-spread attention.

We shall await with interest further discoveries along this line.

Spiritualism a Fact in Nature.

"'Tis true! 'tis certain, man though dead retains
Part of himself; the immortal mind remains.—Homer's Iliad, Book xxiii.

Spiritualists build their faith on modern revelations, and cite the reports of so-called mediums as evidence on which they base their belief; but if every trace of recent revealments was obliterated, and if the Bible which lends its authority, whatever it may be, to confirm the faith, was lost, still traditionary reports, universal belief, and the concurrent opinion of poets—alias prophets, philosophers, and metaphysicians of all periods of time, are uniform on this subject.

Homer, who is generally reputed to have lived and wrote between the 8th and 9th century before our era, is as clear as any person now living, in the belief that the spirit

"Subsists without the body's aid,"

All along the ages, as common to all people as to those who now accept the Bible as authority, or who build their faith on present spirit communion, this faith of an immortal life was taught and believed. The idea was inherent among Pagan nations as now among Christian nations. Prevailing among savage tribes, and even among American Indians when the country was first discovered, it seems just to infer the belief has a foundation in Nature.

Whether the Iliad was written so late as the 8th century of our present era, as some writers have maintained, or if the entire Bible bears no earlier existence than from the 10th to the 15th century, as some scholars insist, yet this does not affect the concurrent opinion of the world on this subject. The old Bactrians, the Chaldeans, the Persians, the Assyrians, the Babylonians, the Egyptians, and the Grecians, held to faith in an immortal life, and it was the central thought in every act pertaining to the disposition of the dead. Zoroaster inculcated this faith as did and do the Brahmans and Buddhists.

The prevailing philosophy of all the early ages was predicated on this grand thought that modern Spiritualism has confirmed, not brought to light. It would have survived the accidents of Time if Christianity had never existed, a Jew had never been heard of, or a Spiritualist had never held communication with the emancipated spirit of the loved dead.

We are in earnest and insistent in these opinions, and are prepared to maintain them as truths in Nature which it is idle to controvert.

We have credited to modern spirits the discovery of methods to communicate with those yet in the flesh, but it is very evident this condition has existed since the very dawn of civilization else the belief would not be so universal.

Each age has brought the two conditions of life nearer each other, and the promise seems to indicate that the race is destined to "turn all to spirit," as Milton represents Raphael predicting in his address to Adam.

Carlyle Petersilea.

Mr. Petersilea, of Los Angeles, Cal., is one of the best mediums now before the public. His letters in The Progressive Thinker were read with great interest by a large number of our subscribers. He is a refined and cultured gentleman, with high ideals, living such a life as attracts to him an order of influence of which any one might well be proud. He is also a musician of wonderful ability. In fact, as a man, he is a model.

A Circular From Li Po.

Inasmuch as the Roman Catholic and Protestant churches have deceived the spirits and destroyed the (teachings of) the sages, and are not obedient to the law of Buddha, eighty thousand spiritual soldiers will come in the clouds to sweep out the foreigners from abroad. Express divination has been made that, before long, swordsmen will come rolling down, and calamity will be on the army and the people. The Buddhist Volunteer Associated Train-bands are able to pacify the people and defend the empire. Upon sight of this, such persons as distribute three copies will avert calamity from one family, while those who distribute ten copies will avert calamity from a whole village. Those who, having met with, refuse to distribute, will be liable to the punishment of decapitation.

Unless the foreigners are subjugated there will be no rain.

If any persons have taken poison from foreigners, the following recipe is a specific against it:

I. Dried Plums 7 mace.
II. Euonymus Bark 5 mace.
III. Liquorice Root 5 mace.

AN EMPTY PLACE.

Within the chamber of this soul of mine,
Where once the loved and loving used to dwell,
Are now the scents of rue and asphodel
That round the pillars of my being twine.
The sacred place that once had been all thine
Is empty, now, save for their soothing smell,
And only God beyond us e'er can tell
The lonely thoughts that hover there, and whine.

The place that was your own is empty, love;
Yet not in bitterness I drape its bowers,
For pure and sweet, it waits God's coming guest,
Whose life, far sundered from my own, above,
Beyond, beneath, around, through faithful hours,
Is seeking me, the Finish of its Quest.

The Resurrection.

The following is extracted from a sermon of Mr. Codding, delivered at Lockport, Ill., in the early days of Spiritualism. For teaching such sentiments, church doors were barred against him:

This life, then, is man's chrysalis state, developing wings for celestial flight. It is the germ in the ground preparing to rise above the earth to look upon the sun and light, and feel the blessedness of vernal showers—the swelling bud expanding into the flower, to drink dew by the silent starlight, to open its petals to the morning sun, and shed moisture and sweet odors in the waste and thirsty places of the universe.

Then let no man be sad when he has arrived at the summer of his years, and marks signs of decay and death stealing upon the house of his outer tabernacle. These are kind and monitory voices assuring him that the soul is loosing her hold on the material body and preparing for flight to her spirit home.

Nature envelops the body, and the body the soul, and when she is completed and entire, she is born into a higher sphere where all right and noble tendencies shall expand and develope under fairer skies and more genial suns.

A funeral should be a season of subdued and hallowed joy. It is no time to sit by the streams of Babylon, to hang harps upon the willows. Away with the cypress, the sad bewailings, the haggard look, the awful tones and the gloomy words of the ghostly priest. Rule out of mind the King of Terrors, the cold damp tomb, the desolate feeling that you have lost a treasure.

When a natural body dies from the earth, a spiritual body is born into heaven. Hang, if you please, the hymenial altar with cypress, bewail if you will, the nuptials of your first-born; but let joy and gladness rule the hour your darling experiences the celestial birth.

Could the father, the mother, the child, the husband, the wife, the lover, who has lost the dear one and stands freezingly gazing into the cold grave just receiving the lifeless form of his dead, or experiences the horrid thrill of agony as he hears the hollow sound which the clod makes upon the coffin lid—could, I say, the friend have his spiritual eyes unsealed, and could he gaze, just above him, upon the beauteous body of his loved one, his own (but oh, how much more beautiful), attended by other celestial beings, and could he at the same time realize that by cultivating all good and beautiful affections, the departed shall be able to communicate to him divine thoughts, sweet solace, pure associations even here, and soon shall lead him through the fields of light and glory, his sweet instructor, how would his sad bewailings be turned into a chastened joy? Alas! how unbelieving, how unspiritual, how earthly we are.

Let me say to the honest poor, struggle manfully against the frowns of fortune, learn the truth, do the right, the battle will soon be over; the wealthy fashion-seekers, whose latchets you are hardly permitted to unloose, will soon be at your feet, begging for instructions touching the fashions of the spirit land, and how they shall attain your social position in that land of the blessed. Then shall you sweetly and condescendingly instruct them that are teachable.

IS GOD AN IDOL?

A Strange Question Asked and Answered.

"A strange question to ask," says one. "Sacrilegious," says another. That depends wholly upon how or from what standpoint the question is considered. I am led to ask the above question from reading a late article in The Progressive Thinker and casual remarks of various writers, both in secular and religious literature. One in The Progressive Thinker writes a very interesting article relative to obtaining information from the imprisoned legations in Pekin. He stops in the middle of his account to write: "I do not abandon my faith in the omnipresence and omniscience of an allwise and overreaching providence in accepting belief in these phenomena."

What a mental enslavement to past education is evidenced by this short sentence, coupled as it is with an account of getting information from the other side of the globe through the agency of a Spiritual medium. Had the same information been given by the telegraph, no such apology would have been thought of. Was this apology given to the writer's conscience, or to his readers, or both?

What fear and timidity human souls display at the least intimation that their fixed ideas regarding God are not in accord with the facts of nature. Why, indeed, should one be so fearful of analyzing his belief concerning God, any more than his belief concerning astronomy, geology, botany, or mineralogy, or concerning ether or electricity? Were I to answer this question, I would say it is because the dead are ruling the living; but I will allow each reader to find his own answer.

Humanity is hungering and crying, almost in vain, for inspired souls who will step forward boldly, and without cringing apology to the ignorance and superstition of the past, proclaim the grand truths of to-day, leaving the doubting laggard, the wily priest and the schemer and enslaver of men's souls to writhe and torture in the slime of their own ignorance and beastly stupidity.

It matters not who or what an omniscient power is; it can take no offense by reason of finite beings seeking an analytical knowledge concerning it. On the contrary, the efforts of the finite to learn and KNOW something concerning the Omniscient, if such a power exists, would be welcomed by the higher power; at least such would be the logical thought of a finite creature.

A well known writer on psychical subjects in a very able article in a Spiritual paper, in alluding to the X-Rays, wireless telegraphy, etc., says: "And so we are face to face with God;" and this writer boasts of being a member of the Episcopal Church. It has not been very long since such an expression would have been pronounced highly profane.

It is amusing to many—no doubt confusing to some—to note the devious and almost unintelligible use that is made of this (to orthodox minds) sacred word, God. Throughout all these various expressions, when looked upon in the aggregate, there is a veiled or unexpressed sentiment of fear that God in some way is being lost, or left behind, and the name is written as a sort of fortification, when it has no real meaning, and Nature, or some term with a definite meaning, would give far greater force and beauty to any literary effort.

Forty years ago any one who questioned the divine inspiration of the Bible was anathematized quite as fiercely as one is now who seeks in a logical and analytical manner to know of the alleged existence of omnipresence and omniscience. Now the best theological scholars admit that the infidels of 1860 were right. Fifty years from now all advanced scholars will admit that the infidels of to-day were right in denying the existence of something impossible, of which scientists have not now, nor can ever hope to have the least particle of knowledge.

A certain Reverend in Oakland, Cal., recently preached a sensational sermon on "Is Sunday for God, or for Golf?" and he succeeded in getting himself the cynosure of public criticism. It is the same old idea, God cannot take care of his own affairs, he must have a multitude of self-appointed agents, claiming credentials from the Infinite, while every one possessing a moiety of reasoning power knows them to be of finite origin.

It is a remarkable fact that the class of people who write most and talk loudest about God, omnipotence, supreme intelligence, etc., etc., have the least to say or care for the rights of humanity. How is this? Have they dug a trench for themselves so deep into myth and dogma that humanity and the stern realities of human life are invisible to their vitiated perceptions? It would seem so. There is such a thing as becoming insanely oblivious to realities, by constant and abnormal study and devotion to the mythical, the unreal and visionary. The entire so-called Christian world was in this unwholesome condition from the second to the eighteenth century, and the large mass of them are in the same condition today; for this reason the whole burden of their thought is duty to and worship of something they name God. Human souls are left to die and rot in their filth of ignorance, and to enslave and crush their fellow-men, while millions of wealth are squandered to extol and worship a mythical and unknown God; and how vast the number of earth's well-meaning souls are bound to the wheels of this unmerciful, selfish, mythical juggernaut.

A writer in a late number of a widely circulated Spiritual paper on "What is Spiritualism?" divides the subject into several articles. The first one reads, "God exists." It seems that people just now are possessed of a sort of Theophobia which is no doubt catching and unavoidable, like measles among children. What such a statement, or its opposite, minus proof, has to do with Spiritualism, will, I think, prove an enigma to all old time Spiritualists.

My contention is this: That man obtained all that he possesses, including life here and in the higher spheres, all his faculties and powers, by and through law, and there is no power in the wide universe which can annul these nature-inherited powers, rights or faculties; that the highest expression of intelligence known, or possible of being known, emanates from man, in all the spheres of spiritual life, all human life being spiritual regardless of environment. In a practical sense man is his own creator, his own educator, his own judge, his low condition is not the fault of some imaginary creator, neither is his exalted condition to be credited to any such source. Time, the destroyer of all absurdities, will some day destroy all idols and make meaningless words obsolete.

How to Spiritualize the Young Children.

"CLEVEREST CHILD IN THE WORLD"—STORY IN DETAIL OF THE UNIQUE TRAINING AND ASTONISHING INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENTS OF VIOLA R. OLERICH, NOT YET FOUR YEARS OLD—AS TOLD IN THE STRAND BY HER ADOPTED FATHER AND TEACHER, PROFESSOR H. OLERICH, OF COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

The writer has been asked to tell the readers of the Strand Magazine of the wonderful educational attainments of Viola Rosalia Olerich, who is conceded to be by far the most advanced juvenile scholar that ever lived—at least, so far as records on this subject are preserved. I shall endeavor to tell the story of her wonderful life in the simplest way in which my words and pictures can do so.

Viola Rosalia Olerich was born in the city of Des Moines, Iowa, February 10, 1897. I and my wife adopted her when she was eight months and four days old. At the time of adoption we resided in Lake City, Iowa, where the writer was superintendent of the public schools. On July 25, 1899, we moved to Council Bluffs, Iowa, where Viola has resided with us ever since, and has received all her instruction from us at home.

Our chief object for adopting a child was to test, in a practical way, a new theory of education, which we believe to be much superior to any educational system which has heretofore been used. The wonderful success with which we have so far met must, we think, stand as evidence of its merit. It is briefly outlined in this article.

HOW THE BABY WAS SELECTED.

No attempt was made to select a particular child; on the contrary, we desired to get an average child. Hence, physical health was the only point of pedigree which we regarded as of vital importance, and even of this we knew little or nothing.

We keep, perhaps, a more complete daily record of Viola's progress than was ever before kept of a child. The data used in this article are taken from this diary. This affords the reader an assurance that [illegible] given in this sketch were not jotted down at random from memory, as they too often are in such cases, but are as accurate as cautious clerical work can reasonably make them.

Viola's physical conditions at the time of adoption were not very flattering. She was a pale, an almost sickly looking baby, with a mouth that was a little crooked, and the right side of her face considerably fuller than the left. These defects soon began to diminish and disappear. Her cheeks assumed a healthy color and her face grew symmetrical. Viola's size and weight are about an average. At the time of adoption she weighed 14 pounds 10 ounces, and was 2 feet 11 inches high. Now she weighs 30 pounds 8 ounces, and is a little over three feet in in height. Baby is now regarded as a "beautiful blonde with brilliant eyes, soft golden hair and a charming personality."

EARLY CONDUCT

At the time Viola came to live with us she was a "cry baby," as may be seen from the first picture, which was taken two days after her adoption. We immediately began to teach her to amuse herself by playing on the floor with her simple toys. She soon learned to like this so well that she did not want to be held much. She thus learned early to amuse herself, a knowledge which is of inestimable value, and which every person, young and old, should possess in the fullest measure.

By being thus kindly treated and busily employed her habit of crying rapidly diminished, and her disposition became continually more jovial and amiable. Viola has always been permitted to eat as much of everything as she desired. Between meals she has always eaten whenever her appetite prompted her to do so. At the age of one year and six months she received her little lunch counter, in which we always keep a supply of bread, crackers, etc., for her; and whenever she wants to eat between meals she goes to her lunch counter, opens the lid, and eats as much as she wants. When she has finished eating she almost invariably closes the lid and goes on playing. This practice is not only a useful lesson in establishing a healthy appetite, but is also a valuable lesson in order. Ever since Viola has been with us she has slept alone and retired alone. The first few months she slept twice during the day. She has never been rocked, carried or put to sleep. A child should have plenty of free, pleasant sleep, and a helpless child should always be taken up immediately after it wakes. It should never be first compelled to cry for assistance. To compel it thus to cry soon converts it into a cry baby.

Apart from incidental colds and the measles, baby has always enjoyed the best of health. She has been growing continually more vigorous from the first day she came to live with us.

METHOD OF TREATMENT.

I have always treated Viola with the utmost kindness and courtesy; have never even spoken a loud or harsh word to her. It is my opinion that every "bad boy" and every "bad girl" has been made bad by meddlesome interference. It has been said, "Spare the rod and spoil the child," but modern science, as well as common sense, is beginning to say, "Destroy the rod and refine the child." Intelligence, kindness and freedom are no doubt the only factors that can really reform and refine the world.

Viola has acquired all her knowledge in the form of play. She has never "studied" a lesson in her life; has never been asked to take a book. Her whole life has been a continuous game of delightful play. The writer invented and constructed much of the attractive educational apparatus with which her keen interest for learning was awakened, and after surrounding her with this apparatus she has enjoyed complete freedom as to what and when to learn. She has always been the judge in this choice, and not we. All we do is to create an interest in learning and activity in whatever direction we desire her to develop.

HOW VIOLA LEARNED TO READ.

Partly for the purpose of amusing herself, partly for creating an interest for books, and partly for the purpose of learning to handle books, Viola received her first book when she was thirteen months old. Soon after this we began to direct her attention to objects in the pictures and told her some interesting facts about them. In a few days she became inensely interested in these simple exercises. She soon brought her book to us for a lesson very frequently. At the time we gave her this book we also put up an artistic little shelf in a convenient place in the sitting room, and told her that this little shelf would make a nice library for her new book, when she was not using it. She learned the lesson of keeping her book on it very readily. This was an important lesson in order.

With her first book she played for two months, after which it was put away and another kind of First Reader given her, which she also used for two months in a similar manner. She played with these books very much—perhaps from two to three hours a day. The fore part of the first book is considerably torn; the second is slightly torn in only two places. These simple exercises awakened an early interest for pictures and books, cultivated a taste for observation, strengthened attention, developed caution and memory, greatly enlarged her vocabulary, and created an appreciation of order and beauty—in fact, they started the development of most of the mental faculties.

She could give one sound to every letter when she was seventeen months old; then she learned to read short sentences which she learned to speak rapidly. We printed these sentences on cards, and she learned to read them by the sentence method. We then began to use the word method also. In this way we used all the methods in an attractive way; sometimes one and sometimes another.

When Viola was two years and eleven months old she could read at sight, with force and expression, almost any reading matter in the English language. She could also read German nicely before she was three years old. At the age of three years and two months she read English, German and French. There is perhaps not a word in the Baldwin series of school readers, from the first, including the sixth, which she cannot readily read at sight.

German and French she learned to read almost exclusively by the sentence method. The sentence is the unit of thought. We think in terms of sentences, and not in terms of words or elementary sounds. For this reason the sentence method is the easiest and most attractive for little children, and it produces by far the best readers. A young child should learn to read such sentences as it readily uses in its daily conversation, rather than learn new sentences by reading. This course makes the reading easy, delightful and intelligible.

NUMBERS AND COLORS.

At the age of twenty months Viola could read all the digits, and recognize nine colors—white, black and the seven prismatic colors. We taught the digits by printing large figures on pretty blocks which were hung on the wall. Each block had also a number of bright tacks in it corresponding to the numerical value of the digits. The colors were taught by fastening colored ribbons to blocks, hung up in the same manner as the number blocks. These blocks were called for by number or color whenever the baby and we felt disposed to play with them. Baby would go and get the one she thought we had called for. We began with two blocks and gradually increased the number of them. At twenty-two months she could read all numbers not over one hundred. Now she reads numbers as large as octillions. She is also familiar with quite a number of shades and tints.

DRAWING.

When she was one year and nine months old she could draw the following on the blackboard, or with pencil, when requested: A vertical line, a horizontal line, a slanting line, a cross, a ladder and a circle. Since that time she has learned to draw many other things. Upon request she will now draw any kind of a line used in plane geometry, all the various kinds of triangles and quadrilaterals, a sphere, a square and a triangular prism, a pyramid and cone and their frustrums, leaves of trees and many other things of that nature. We began drawing with straight lines on the blackboard, and explained their position; then we took up the triangle, curved line, etc., gradually proceeding from the simple to the more complex.

Viola learned form very rapidly. Before she had attained the age of one year and nine months she could name and fetch any of the thirty-four geometrical forms shown in this picture. We first set up only three pieces—the square, the circle and the triangle. Then others were added as fast as she learned the former.

When Viola was one year and nine months old she knew the flags of twenty-nine nations. When all the flags were set up in a line she could get any one called for. In all these exercises we began with a few and then increased the number. In our teaching we never had any particular time set for certain lessons; but always followed our inclinations. The reader should firmly keep in mind that all Viola's learning was only play, and that she always enjoyed complete freedom on all these educational subjects.

GEOGRAPHY.

In geography she first learned to locate and then to names the States and Territories of the United States. The map we used for this purpose had no names on it. She could point to any State or Territory and its capital when she was one year and nine months old.

In this way she could soon name, locate and read the names of all the countries and their capitals in the world. Then she learned to read and locate the names of oceans, lakes, mountains, rivers, capes, etc. She can now read almost any geographical name given in Frye's geographies, and upon request she can find almost any prominent geographical name and place in a few seconds, when the closed geography is given to her for that purpose.

PORTRAITS OF FAMOUS PERSONS.

At the age of one year and ten months Viola knew the portraits of more than a hundred famous men and women, representing nearly all schools of thought, both good and bad. She soon became fond of playing with these pictures, and learned to recognize them in a short time.

The portraits were set in a cardholder, all in plain view, as shown in the picture; then baby was requested to get a certain one. In the first lesson only two were used, then the number was increased as fast as she learned to recognize them.

Before Viola was one year and eleven months old she knew and could name thirty-two different kinds of seeds and twenty-five kinds of leaves of trees. The seeds were put in little bottles and set in a neat case, so that all the bottles were in plain view at the same time. The leaves were pressed in a large book.

At the age of one year and eleven months she could point to almost all the bones of the human skeleton, and to many organs of the body. She first learned to name and locate the femur, then the humerus, and so on. Now she can name and read the names of all the bones of the human skeleton, and locate nearly all of them. She can also read, name and locate the external parts of the body.

Viola knew at sight and could name the twenty-two kinds of lines and angles in geometry when she was one year and eleven months old. These lines and angles were drawn on cards about the size of a common envelope, and she learned to recognize and name them in the same way as she learned the portraits, etc.

UNITED STATES MONEY.

At twenty-three months she named and recognized all the denominations of money which is now coined and printed by the United States government, except bills over one hundred dollars. We taught her the money by placing it in a shallow dish, beginning with the penny and the nickel, increasing the denominations as fast as she learned them. Sometimes we asked her to pick out a certain denomination for us; at other times we would pick out a piece and ask her to name it. In this way she learned to discriminate and to name, to observe and to talk, all of which are very useful in the practical affairs of life.

EXAMINATION.

When Viola was one year, eleven months and twenty-five days old she passed an examination before a disinterested committee of examiners (Miss Verna Lumpkin and Miss Martha Campbell, both competent and successful teachers of the public schools of Lake City, Iowa, the city in which we then resided), who found that she knew 2,500 nouns by having either the pictures or the objects themselves brought before her. The committee estimated that she knew at least 500 more nouns which they could not present as objects or pictures, making a total of 3,000 nouns which she knew at this age—perhaps more nouns than the words of all parts of speech used by the average adult.

This examination was conducted by two distinctly different methods. By the first a large number of objects, or the pictures of them, were placed before Viola, and then she was requested to bring them one by one, after having heard each called for by its appropriate name. By the second an object, or a picture of it, was held up for inspection, and she named it. The latter method was used about half the time, although she could pronounce fairly well almost all the words in the list. The committee compiled a written "record" containing all the words of the list.

PUNCTUATION MARKS AND SPELLING.

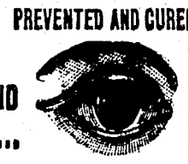
At two years she knew twenty-two punctuation marks. They were drawn on cards, and learned in the same way as the portraits, etc. The reader will notice that all Viola's learning is in the line of practical knowledge—knowledge which must be learned before we can read intelligently or write correctly.

Shortly after Viola began to read she also began to learn the names of the letters and to spell easy words, which were printed in large letters on cards, and these cards could be slipped into a groove on one face of attractive blocks, which were hung up against the wall and had pieces of peanut in them. Whenever she wanted a peanut we would ask her to get a block (we called these blocks peanut bottles) having a certain word on it. If she brought the block containing the right word she would first spell the word by sight, then from memory, and also often by sound. In this way she learned to spell readily and pleasantly, so that at the age of three she could spell a long list of words, many of them quite difficult, such as vinegar, sugar, insect, Viola, busy, mamma, Rosalia, February, biscuit, Olerich, American, Nebraska, Council Bluffs, Pompeii. Mediterranean, etc.

ANALYZING A FLOWER.

Here is a picture of Viola, sitting at her little table, examining and naming the different parts of a flower. She is very fond of flowers, and likes to separate them into their different parts. She can read at sight all the botanical names given in Youmans' Botany. We have on numerous occasions passed this botany and Steel's Zoology to the audience and offered a handsome prize to any one who would succeed in finding a word in either of these books that Viola could not readily pronounce at sight. So far no one has succeeded in finding such a word.

Viola could readily read manuscript before she began to practice writing. Her first writing and also her first drawing exercises were on the blackboard. She never learned to print much, but began with manuscript. The small i was the first letter she learned to make, then e, u, t, j, n, b, etc. O was the first capital letter she made. She now writes both words and capitals quite readily. In order to make the writing exercises pleasant we often interspersed them with attractive drawings.



February 22, 1900, she received a typewriter, and took her first lesson in typewriting two days after this. In a few days she learned to put the paper in, run the carriage, feed the paper and finger the whole of the keyboard with both hands. She strikes the keys so firmly and evenly that the letters are full and distinct. She not only copies manuscript and print, but writes very nicely without a copy.
